By reference to the Assessor's book for 1877, we find the number of acres of land to be 147,892, and valued at $4,162,353, being an average of a fraction over $21 per acre. The town lots in the county amount to $217,340. There are 4,302 horses and mares valued at $187,035; 799 mules valued at $39,972; 51 jennets valued at $80,045; 51 stores worth $76,055; $770,652 surplus; $22,785 worth pleasure carriages; $19,782 silver plate, &c., making a total valuation of $5,608,972. Of males over 21 there are 2,654, and 1,818 roadworkers; 2,628 legal voters; 2,920 children within the school age; 85 sheep killed by dogs valued (the sheep, not the dogs) at $370. The agricultural list shows up as follows: the articles were raised last year, tobacco, 876,021 pounds; 6,371 tons of hay, 349,986 bushels of corn, 12,522 bushels of wheat, 280 bushels of barley. This shows an increase in the entire agricultural list, so we thereby come to the conclusion that the industry of our county is rather on the upward beat than otherwise.

The planting season being well advanced in many localities, last week the receipts of tobacco in the Cincinnati market were considerably increased and the offerings more liberal. The weather, during the week, kept tobacco in fine condition for the raisers to handle, and the new tobacco put on the market during the week is reported in excellent order for so early in the season, as well as considerably improved in quality. The prices were steady during the week, the market closing strong. The following quotations we take from the Western Tobacco Journal:

STATE NEWS.

—Carroll County has two candidates for Representative.

—The wheat crop in Jessamine County, is reported remarkably promising.

—Daviess County has five candidates for the lower House of the General Assembly.

—There are seven men in Ohio County who want to go to Frankfort—to the Legislature, of course.

—The tenth annual meeting of the Kentucky Press Association will be held in Frankfort on the 13th June.

—Vanceburg Courier: Many of the farmers in this county are replanting their corn, the seed previously planted having rotted in the ground.

—Some of the cows about Calhoun, are afflicted with a new disease. The symptoms are a frothing at the mouth with the appearance of choking.

—The Frankfort Yeoman says: The pear crop, we are told, will be uncommonly large this year, and the apples promise to be in great abundance.

—Elder W. T. Moore, of Cincinnati, held a three weeks meeting at the Christian Church in Mt. Sterling, and added one hundred and three to the already large membership of that church.

—The Shelby Sentinel says, Geo. Flood, residing near Christiansburg, has five steers of his own raising, aged two, three and four years, which weighed 7,717 pounds on the 27th day of April.

—Owing to the inclemency of the weather, and the consequent non-attendance of fair bidders, the sale of bachelors, advertised for County Court day, had to be postponed. This postponement is by order of the M. C. P. P.—Falmouth Independent.

—Louisville Evening News: Complaints from the farmers are long and loud. All corn planted before the recent frost and heavy rains has rotted in the ground, and the work of replanting will be as heavy as the original planting.

—Dr. Henderson, our State Superintendent, says in a letter to the School Commissioner of Pendleton County that, "pronunciation is a proper subject for the examination of teachers." Give them the names of the Russian generals, and if they can manage to pronounce them correctly, they ought to get a certificate in that branch.—Ky. Sentinel.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

St. Louis, Mo., May 12, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

This has been one of the most dismal weeks of the year. We have had rain every day for the past ten, with the exception of one, and that day it was threatening rain most of the time. The rain is of that cold, spitting, drizzling sort, just enough to make a fellow feel like he would like to go to see somebody, or would like to have somebody come and see him, yet the rain is just sufficient to deprive him of such a pleasure.

The Recorder of Thursday, came to hand next day, and the contents were fully digested before sundown of that day. Only think of it! Two important cities like Burlington, Ky., and St. Louis, Mo., four hundred miles apart, or thereabouts, being brought together through the medium of the press and post, in the short space of 24 hours. One hundred years ago, the good solid people would have laughed at the idea of such a thing being done in so short a time.

You may set us down, viva voce, vivaciously, or by ballot, for "Col. Henderson" for the Legislature. We are still in favor of the old way of doing many things, and we have always had a liking for the "old dispensation," and we are rooted and grounded in the conviction that the good people in those days were fully as happy as the politicians of these days. His head is undoubtedly level on the "old dispensation," and his views regarding the dog tax, induces me to believe he is a man of a kind heart, with feelings naturally on the side of the dog that is underneath. We think, however, having said this much in his favor, we ought to be permitted to say he ought to modify his views, somewhat, in reference to the school law. The young ideas must be taught how to shoot. If "daddy" can't do it, then the Commonwealth must. We don't believe in leaving any poor boy or girl out in the cold, because "daddy" is poor. But "Col. Henderson" is level on the most of subjects, and we are for him as aforesaid. Now, in saying this, we only express our own preference without the least desire to question the ability, or popularity of either of the other honorable gentlemen in the field for stately honors. But "Col. Henderson is our first and last choice. Mark that!

I believe your paper does not take sides in politics, but your humble correspondent, being nearly 400 miles from the scene of action, thinks he might be permitted to modestly express his views in favor of giving (if not an old man) a modest man a chance. So we say, for the last time, "in the Legislature, Henderson would be the right man in the right place."

Our Circuit Court, on yesterday, granted thirteen divorces, and it was not a good day for getting unmarried either. Now, we don't know that this piece of intelligence is of the utmost importance to the good people of your vicinity, but we mention it for the benefit of those contemplating matrimony, and as a fact, that sometimes people get married and then are not happy.

When ever you hear of people getting unmarried, you may set it down that there is trouble on hand. The marriage institution, we regard as one of the very best gifts of the Giver of all good to man, but this thing of getting unmarried we have always regarded as a poor business. Better try to live together till death do part. We know marriage to be right, from the fact that Mr. Nathan C—n, a fellow citizen aged near 70, who buried his second wife not quite six months ago, took unto himself, a few days since, his third wife, and they are both as happy as two little birds could be on a May morning.

Professor Riley, the Chief of the National Entomological Commission, closed a three weeks examination in Texas and Kansas of the grasshopper on yesterday, and presented a report to Governor Anthony at Topeka, Kansas. He says that he finds the favorable reports as to there being no damage from their ravages this year, in the main, are warranted, and there is no doubt in his mind that throughout Kansas, the battle is already fought and won. The report that the hoppers disappeared soon after hatching is confirmed. The cold, rainy weather has had much to do with this, but also, his examinations have confirmed his previous theory, that the hoppers are not of natural habitat and can never permanently thriv here. He says: "I am the last to desire that this favorable report should lull our farmers into an undue sense of security. The security against injury will depend altogether on the proportion of eggs which have thus been hatched. Thus, in the more sandy belt west of a line, roughly drawn throught Junction City, and Florence, not one per cent. of the eggs remain unhatched, while east of that line where the eggs were laid later, and the soil is colder and more tenacious, from one half to three-fourths of them are yet unhatched, and with few exceptions sound. In the former area a few fields may suffer, especially along the river courses, but there will be no general devastation in the latter. The injury may yet be great and should be provided against."

The Professor then gives various plans for distroying those which do not die a natural death and closes as follows: "When the locust's course is fully understood and the farmers unite in a death determined effort to counteract it, it will cease to be so much of a bugbear, and no longer interfere with the settlement of the beautiful and productive Western plains, which it visites at irregular intervals." So it would appear from the report that Kansas and Texas are about free from the anticipated scourage, but possibly the great worriors of Missouri may yet have something to do. We think we have had rain enough in the past ten days to drown out all the grasshoppers on the Western Continent, and have not the least fear of them this year.

We have had another exciting week on 'Change. Speculators now control our grain market, and run it to suit themselves. Wheat and corn close in market value this evening at the same figures of this day week, but it has been up and down from day to day, according to the feelings of those who make their living by betting at "Call Board." There is but little doing with us just now on a legitimate or natural basis.

Bob A. Long.

The following we take from the Rising Sun News of last week:

Memory geeth back some fifty-five years to Burlington, the county seat of Boone, in the good old Commonwealth of Kentucky, where I spent some of the pleasantest years of my life. Pleasant, because then under the parental roof and cared for by loving ones who kindly provided for all my wants. Pleasant, because in the spring time of life, when the young mind indulges in lofty aspirations, looking to the future with hope, fondly anticipating to acquire in manhood wealth, fame and position he may never realize. Pleasant, because ignorant of the trials and disappointments we have to encounter in fighting the rugged battle of life. As they can not be avoided, 'tis well they come upon us gradually with our growth, when with manly firmness and decision we are better prepared to overcome, or bear them, as may be our lot.

The population of Burlington fifty-five years ago was small, but for intelligence, morality and social position, her citizens would have favorably compared with the best towns of its size in the State. Among her merchants were Tousey, Chambers and Johnson, men amply able to supply the demands of their customers, which were doubtless at that day limited. Preston and Flem. Vawter were prominent lawyers, the latter familiarly called "Flax mane and tail," owing to the whiteness of his hair and long beard, and the successful race he made for the Legislature. Dr. John Percival was a practicing physician, of whom I shall have something to note hereafter. Joseph Foster and Henry Wake were the fashionable tailors of the place. The one occupied a small frame building situated on the Court-house square. Elijah Kirtley kept the principal tavern (hotel.) It stood in the rear of the Court-house. Later, Lewis Riddell put up a two story brick, and soon became a successful rival for public favors. Those living who patronized the "Kirtley Tavern" will remember Moody, the slave of Kirtley, who had the reputation of being the "smartest nigger and the greatest scoundrel in Kentucky."

The Court-house was built after the fashion of barns of that day in Kentucky used for curing tobacco. It was a double log house, and being used as a court-room, the other for county offices. About the year 1821 it was taken down and replaced by a substantial brick building, of which the people were quite proud. The jail was a very secure building, constructed of three tiers of beech logs, the outer and inner tiers being hewed and closely notched down, while the third or middle tier stood on end. The school-house was also built of hewed logs, and "chinked" with stone and lime. It stood out in the suburbs of the town. While I remember the cheerful appearance of its exterior, I do not forget the sadness and gloom I experienced by being punished for neglect, or lack of ability to "cultivate the mind." I would not now reflect aught against my teacher, but the system practiced in that day: "He that spareth the rod, hateth the child," was the motto. The vain and foolish attempt to "whip" knowledge into a fellow was the practice.

The Masonic Lodge met in the upper room of a two-story house owned by Mr. Hughes, whose family occupied the first floor. As the room was not plastered, and the poplar weatherboarding greatly warped much was seen and heard from the roof of a shed that stood adjacent to the building, which the Brotherhood did not wish known.

'Tis said human nature has been the same in all ages of the world. Men then, as now, had their troubles, and sought redress for either real or supposed wrongs. Now the shotgun and knife are the weapons used to heal our wounded honor; then men relied upon their manhood and looked for satisfaction by striking sturdy blows from the shoulder, although "fighting" was admissible and not considered by pugilists a violation of the rules governing combatants. On one occasion I remember seeing a young man having his teeth sharpened with a rat-tail file, preparing for a little encounter which, by mutual agreement, was to come off that day. People kept cool and controlled their passions—they would nurse their ill feeling for weeks, to settle their trouble on election or muster day, or during Court week. Early habits cling to us. A few years ago while visiting Burlington I met in front of an old frame building, formerly used as a second-class tavern, and old and respected friend, D. P., formerly of East Bend. The noise within attracted our attention, when it remarked how many fights had been witnessed long years ago in and around that building. As we spoke men came rushing out of the door, returning blow for blow in good earnest, when my friend exclaimed: "My God, there is the Deacon of our church!" I was even so. But let us judge charitably, we know not what provocation the good Deacon had for suffering his youthful blood to return and crimson his furrowed cheeks.

Local News.

Corn planting Nov. 1 is about done.

Rain was a desirable commodity, Monday.

Considerable of the first planting of corn has rotted.

Business for the past two weeks has been rather dull.

The trial of Mr. Ira Percival did not go to Gotham County.

Cast your vote for both first and second choice at the primary election.

Mr. Palmer, our enterprising blacksmith, is building an addition to his shop.

The weather for the greater portion of this month has been almost suicidal.

The shot-gun brigade has commenced its spring campaign against the squirrels.

Wells in Lawrenceburg last Saturday, we dropped in at J. C. Wiles' store, and found "Jake" as busy as a bee. His merchant tailoring business he is making a success.

Last week we neglected to call our readers attention to the fact that Florence has a millinery store. By the advertisement you will see that there is in stock everything the fair sex want.

His Honor, H. J. Foster, transported his tribunal to the Francisville neighborhood, Monday morning, for the purpose of adjudicating a case of forcible detainer between two Francisvillians.

Quite a large crowd collected at Union last Saturday afternoon, to hear the candidates speak. They were all on hand, except Colonel J. E. Henderson, who had to fill an appointment at Bellevue.

The liveliest game of base-ball we have heard of yet, was played at Boston on the 11th inst., by the Harvards and Manchesters. The game was called at the end of the 24th inning, neither side having scored a run.

Quite a delegation of ladies left town Monday morning, bound for the green house located somewhere above Constance. In the afternoon they returned, the owners of many nice flowers to be added to their present collections.

Farmers, read E. S. Downey's "adv." in this paper, and when you want anything in the way of agricultural implements, give him a call. You will find him one of the jolliest fellows in Hoosier, and just the man you will like to trade with.

The Board of Tax Supervisors, composed of Capt. L. C. Norman, S. P. Brady, Jos. H. Walton, Ben. Stephens, J. H. Slater, Jno. W. Berkshire, Wash Watts, J. J. Lillard, W. M. Rogers and Samuel Hudson, met in the Court-house, Monday morning, organized and proceeded to business. At this writing they are still in session.

We have been informed that Mr. Ronse, candidate for Representative, complains that we misrepresented him in reporting his views on the stock law; that instead of falling back on section third of that law as being all that is sufficient, he is willing to accept all of said law except the first and second sections. We did not misrepresent Mr. Ronse intentionally and hope this will be satisfactory to him.

The following recipe for curing gapes in chickens was taken from the Lancaster Farmer. It is very simple, and has been tried by some of the ladies in the north part of the county, and they pronounce it a sure cure. None of our chickens are troubled with gapes, but, no doubt, there are many of our readers whose chickens are:

An experienced chicken grower informs us that he has been very successful in conquering gapes in his young fowls by the application of air slaked lime. As soon as a manifestation of this disease in his fowls appears, he confines his chickens in a box, one at a time, sufficiently large to contain the bird, and places a coarse piece of cotton or linen cloth over the top. Upon this he places the pulverized lime, and taps the screen sufficiently to cause the lime to fall through. This lime dust the fowl inhales, and causes it to sneeze, and in a short time the cause of the gapes is thrown out, in the form of a slimy mass or masses of worms, which had accumulated in the windpipe and smaller air vessels. This remedy he considers superior to any he has ever tried, and he seldom fails to effect a cure.

In the last few days we have endeavored to collect some information concerning the present condition of local politics, and when we have concluded our efforts we find the political fog is more dense than when we commenced. The first man we "tackle" for information concerning the prospects of the candidates for Legislative honors is Mr. A. Mr. A is a strong Conner man; he is positive that Conner will carry Walton, Verona, Florence and Hamilton districts, and get a "good" vote in Carlton, Burlington, Taylorsport and Union, and therefore is bound to be "the man." The next man is Mr. B. Mr. B goes his whole length for Terrill, and says that he (Terrill) will, beyond all kind of doubt, carry Petersburg solid; that Taylorsport, Bellevue, Carlton and Burlington are each sure to give Terrill good majorities while he will poll a good vote in Florence, Union and Hamilton; that Terrill will have quite an easy walk over. Our next talk is with a Rouse follower, his figures show positively Union, Hamilton, Verona, all for Rouse. The vote in Walton, Carlton, Burlington and Taylorsport districts will pan out well for Rouse, and he entertains no fear of his defeat. Each of these lightning calculators is positive that he has figured up a correct result, and in many instances is willing to wager a silk hat thereon. The only correct conclusion at which one can arrive is that the canvass is assuming an interesting phase, and is warming up much more rapidly than the weather is.

County Court.

On account of our columns being greatly crowded last week, the proceedings of the County Court were unavoidably omitted.

The following are the settlements ordered recorded:

M. C. Norman, executor Ben Tanner; Jno. C. Riley, administrator Jesse Riley; M. Hamilton, administrator J. G. Hamilton; Tilford Sullivan, administrator L. Starr; F. Riddell, administrator W. B. Riddell; A. G. Winston, administrator A. S. Platt; Samuel Calvert, executor James Calvert Committee of Beemon children; Elizabeth W. Rogers, Committee John W. Rogers; Miss June Fleming, guardian Southgate heirs; M. C. Norman, guardian C. E. Williams; Thos. Whitaker, guardian John Craig; Ben Wilson, guardian E. M. Hewitt; J. A. Kendall, guardian Hortense Graves; M. Rouse, guardian Wm. Hammond; John C. Riley, guardian K. C. and R. Hamilton (colored); John W. Gaines, guardian Abs. Gaines; Milton Beemon, guardian Emma D. Aylor; Wm. T. Ryle, guardian Thos. L. Ryle; John S. Huey, guardian Dora Huey; O. W. Huey, guardian H. L. Huey; G. W. Terrill, guardian Nannie V. Kelly; M. C. Norman, guardian Lillie D. Williams; S. C. Johnson, guardian Dora Records; S. C. Johnson, guardian R. W. Records; Peter Crapper, guardian Hubert Crapper; A. G. Winston, guardian Chas. Craven; Jas. B. Finnell, administrator Lewis Morris.

Settlements filed—W. L. Roberts, guardian Laura Barton; G. W. McIntire, guardian James, Thos. and Elizabeth McIntire; J. H. Walton, guardian John H. Presser; W. L. Roberts, guardian Wm. Barton; R. J. Rice, guardian Geo. W. Rector; J. S. Lampton, guardian Ellie E. Lampton; W. M. Conner, guardian O. E. Aylor; Same, guardian J. D. Cockran, guardian B. T. Ellis.

Thos. Huey's will, dated June 18, 1875, was probated.

The lines between the Burlington and Bellevue precincts were so changed as to include J. W. Gaines' farm in the Burlington District.

Geo. W. Huey qualified as Trustee of the Garrison children, James L. and Thos. A. Huey on bond.

H. C. Snyder and Roswell Randall were excused from paying poll tax for road purposes.

N. S. Walton resigned as Road Supervisor, and W. R. Kirtley appointed in his place.

N. S. Walton qualified as Justice of the Peace, with John J. Rucker on bond.

The report of the division of the Bradford lands was approved, and L. H. Dills was appointed Commissioner to make conveyances.

Personal Mention.

Mrs. Eunie Rice has been quite ill for several days.

Major Ben. M. Piatt was in town a day or two last week.

Mrs. Bettie Riddell, of Williamstown, is visiting her daughter at this place.

To Mr. D. W. Calvert, editor of the Rising Sun (Ind.) News, we return thanks for favors extended.

Mrs. Nettie Phips, nee Calvert, now of Nebraska, is at present visiting her old home and friends in Burlington.

Esq. N. S. Walton, of Petersburg, was in town Monday. His Judicial Highness tarried on and about the croquet ground in the afternoon.

Mr. F. Smith returned from Virginia last week. The old gentleman is looking unexceptionally well. Oysters and fish undoubtedly agree with him.

Capt. Geo. W. Terrill was in Burlington, Tuesday, looking after his political interest. The Capt. is moving about rather lively. Ditto, balance of the candidates.

Mrs. Mollie Clore, we are informed, has for some time been annoyed with a sore on her lip which, by two out of three physicians, is pronounced a rose cancer. The last physician that examined it claims that he has affected a cure.

Mayor Alonzo Green, of Greensburg, was in town Sunday. The Mayor being interviewed upon the political out look in his "burg," unhesitatingly declared the "burg" a unit for Henderson and the "old dispensation." He says Henderson is the favorite two to one in the pool selling.

To Bellevue and Back.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Thursday morning, May the 10th, being a nice clear morning with a temperature of 42° I started in the direction of Bellevue in search of Mr. Wm. Wake, our obliging contractor on the Burlington and Bellevue turnpike. I took the grade at Greensburg, the town the Recorder gave its readers the history of, some two weeks ago. After I had traveled about one-half a mile I came upon a company of negroes who were throwing dirt lively, and from there on to within half a mile of Bellevue, where I came across Mr. Wake erecting a boarding house, turnpiking was going ahead briskly. I think from what I could see and learn, the grade, and stone work on the bridges, will be completed from Bellevue to Mr. Brady's in about ten days, besides there will be considerable stone broken and spread. The sub-contractor on the fourth mile don't seem to be pushing things very lively, but I think if the weather continues cool so he can keep our friend Jeff Porter for fireman he will get the oak stump burnt out by the first of June.

After dispatching what little business I had with Mr. Wake, I concluded to go to Bellevue, as I had not been there for five years and maybe longer. The only place I called at was the co-operative store, where I found Mr. Jas. P. Kelly, one of the stockholders in the store, Mr. Kite, the obliging and polite clerk, who took great pains to show me their goods. I will say this much to our merchants and grocerymen of Burlington, you will have to do better or your trade on and near the Burlington and Bellevue pike will be gone when the road is completed.

After spending about one hour with Mr. Kelley and Mr. Kite, which was spent in examining their goods and the prices thereof, I started homewhard, leaving the grade at Miss Julia Dinsmore's, and coming by the way of Middle Creek, and by the time I got back to Greensburg, I concluded some body else had better go to building turnpikes or stay at home.

An "Axiom" Argued.

Burlington, Ky., May 15, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

In your issue of last week I see an elaborate article, over the signature of "Axiom," condemning the action of the Executive Committee in supplementing the primary election with a convention to determine the candidate for Representative, the writer of which I believe to be mistaken in his views.

The first objection he raises is to the Committee's deciding that the voters at the primary election should cast their votes direct for Senator, he making the point that the Committee has taken upon itself the responsibility of presuming there will be but two candidates for that office. Is it not equally presumptuous for him to suppose that there will be more than two? And, even should a third person desire to make the race, it will only be necessary for him to signify his intention to the Executive Committee, and, no doubt, the matter will be so adjusted as to render it necessary for the delegates to the convention to make the candidate for Senator, as well as Representative.

He further says that, at any final election, where there are more than two candidates, "it has been the time-honored custom and usage of all parties that the one receiving the highest number of votes is declared elected." It has also been the time-honored custom and usage of the Democratic party—the party that has seen the rise and fall of numerous adverse parties—to nominate their candidates for office by convention, the primary election being a plan of comparative recent birth, and, in the majority of cases, used only for the purpose of electing delegates to the convention.

Proceeding further, he says:

"In the first place, there is no advice that the delegates from each precinct be instructed by the voters of said precinct how to cast their votes in subsequent ballots, in case their favorite is dropped after the first. This, of course, will not be done, and will leave the delegate at perfect liberty to cast his vote according to his own private inclination."

Let us see about this. If "Axiom" had read the pronunciamento of the Executive Committee with care, he would have found the paragraph declaring the manner of voting in the convention to be in these words:

"That the delegates chosen in the several districts shall meet in the Court-house in Burlington on the 2d day of July, 1877, at 1 p. m., and cast the pro rata vote of their districts, the candidate receiving a majority of all the votecast by the delegates to be the nominee of the Democratic party for the office of County Representative.

"That, after the first ballot, the hindmost candidate be dropped after each ballot till a ballot results in a nomination."

Thus it will be seen the ballots are to be cast pro rata, and that no other plan of ballot is provided for. Now, let us suppose that, at the primary election in Burlington Precinct, A receives 80 votes, B 60, and C 20. In the convention, therefore, on the first ballot, A will receive, under the pro rata rule, 2 votes, B 1½, and C ½ a vote. Supposing there to be no nomination on this ballot, and A to be the hindmost candidate in the convention, he would be dropped and a new ballot ordered. A and his vote are now out of the race. On the second ballot, under the pro rata rule, B would receive 3 votes and C ½ vote. It will be seen that in the convention each candidate receives a delegate vote in proportion to the number of votes he received at the primary election. Consequently, the suggestion of "Axiom" that we take the second choice vote, or, in other words, cause every man to vote twice for the same office, is "superfluous and cumbersome," and would only serve to complicate the duties of the delegates.

I have set forth these views, believing them to harmonize with the views held by the Executive Committee in deciding that the ballots in the convention should be pro rata, and if I am wrong, I am open to conviction. The only safeguard that I see necessary at present, however, is that the voters in the various precincts see to it that they elect as delegates only honest and trustworthy men—men who, in the convention, will conscientiously represent their views, as expressed at the ballot-box.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence to the Recorder.

Wheat has been quiet but firm, though there is fear of falling prices at present. Receipts were light last week, but prices held up at $1 90 for prime. In corn the market was dull at 50c. Oats had a falling tendency, with prices at 47@53c., according to grade.

It is just between the seasons for ordinary garden truck, which is consequently scarce. Whatever comes in is snapped up at once.

Irish potatoes are in good demand at $4, that is for Peachblows. Russets are lower. New potatoes readily bring $6. The market is bare of sweet potatoes.

Eggs are plenty now, bringing about 9c. per dozen. Butter is coming in freely, with prices in favor of buyers at 12@15c.

There was merely a fair supply of cattle in the market last week, prices for common ranging at $3@4, paddling at $4@4 50, and best at $5@5 50.

Hogs were plenty on a falling market, prices ranging at $4@5, according to quality. Sheep ranged at 4½@6c., for the best spring lambs 7@8c., and scarce at that.

The horse trade was dull, mainly by reason of so few being on the market; those that were sold brought $50@115. Mules are in brisk demand, and could be sold on sight at $80@125.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Greensburg.

If you will allow us the space, Mr. Editor, we will endeavor to give you a few items from this place, which we believe is destined to be the metropolis of Boone.

Our town was the scene of quite a riot, the other night. It was the result of our merchant refusing the blacksmith sundries. They came to blows, and the knight of the sledge went to grass by a stroke with a coffish in the hands of said merchant.

The voters of this city are desirous that the candidates address them at an early day.

Our sub-contractor, T. D. Boone, took his leave, last Monday, for Pound Gap.

Property is rapidly advancing here, and those wanting to settle in Greensburg had better buy property as soon as possible.

Rabbit Hash.

Farmers are busy planting corn. Several had to furrow out some of their corn that was planted several weeks back, and plant over again. So much for being early.

The young folks of this place are talking of chartering the flying "Betsey" to attend the Carrollton Fair, which comes off this month.

Rabbit Hash is to have another dwelling house, a three-story brick. Capt. William Mitchell is having it built.

Waterloo.

We had a few days of favorable weather last week, when the farmers resumed their work, planting corn with a renewed energy.

At a meeting of the Middle Creek Church, Saturday, a building committee was elected by ballot, which resulted in the election of S. P. Brady, L. P. Arnold and Josiah Walton. I presume the duty of this committee is to procure funds by voluntary subscription, to collect the same and to build a meeting-house near Bellevue.

Met at the Locust Grove School-house, Sunday, in pursuance of previous arrangements made by the church, for the purpose of organizing a Sunday-school. But few of the members of the church were present and the matter was deferred.

Had a sing at the Universalist Church, Sunday evening. The exercises were conducted satisfactorily by Prof. Roberts and Miss Ella Ryle. They (Tom and Ella) left the church together, and went down the road humming Old Hundred—happy hearts. Of those from a distance at the same sing, were Mr. Grant, Mr. Walton and Mr. Craven. Come again gents, I am a member of the returning board and you shall have a fair count.

Several of Dr. J. M. Grant's patients in this vicinity are convalescent.

Petersburg.

By a contract between the Wolper Bridge Company, parties of the first part, and Gen. Rice, (he of political speaking notoriety) party of the second part, for a valuable consideration an iron bridge is soon to span the romantic stream of Wolper, where the wooden one fell down a short time since. The contract was signed sealed and delivered last Tuesday, and as the Generil is a builder of the lively type the bridge may be regarded as a certainty. It will be thoroughly tested and its safety guaranteed by the manufacturers, who are the best and most reliable builders in the country.

That Bellevue Literary Society whose organization followed that of the Burlington Debaters, has proved to be an imitative concern, by the fact that its death came upon the heels of its model. One of its principal members made a diagnosis of the case, (a post mortem, perhaps,) and reached the conclusion that rowdyism and corn juice jointly worked its dissolution. It would almost appear that this column was prophetic in its truest assertion that "the meetings were weekly," although the orthography of the word might have been the result of foresight or recklessness in the type setter.

The dark moustache of our smiling ex-Sheriff flashed upon us a few seconds last Saturday evening. It might have been mentioned that the editor of the Recorder was with him, were it not for the fact that the great American (pumpkin) pie biter, appropriated to his own use certain valuable portable property, belonging to another, with felonious intent, and carried it away with him, and it would not do to advertise the fact that the editor of this paper would even travel with such evil companions. However it may be that the pieman is only endeavoring to retrench his finances on a goodly sized hog speculation in which he is engaged. Both gentlemen were pressed to stay all night, but they earnestly plead the importance of their presence at the Sunday-school next day as an excuse for going home. It it took them all night. That Sunday-school has our heart-felt sympathy.

From the display on our streets, last Sunday, and the reliable information showered into our reluctant ears by Mrs. Grundy, it is comparatively safe to say that about one-half of the young folks in town will be arranging to go to house keeping with the other, right away, purty soon, ain't it? And all the old folks shall answer, amen.

The Rising Sun Recorder has plastered Petersburg all over with a shining suit of glory. Their Recorders are a pioneering set usually, but so long as the mud that they throw turns white when dry and shines in the sun like a new tin roof, or the end of Billy Barlow's nose, we as a people are not going to complain.

HOUSEKEEPING.

Deck your house in inward out,
Let there be an inmost shine;
Where to praise with girls devout,
Love both human and divine.

After that, the holiest room
Heap with choicest things that grow;
Spare not gold nor silver show,
Ambergris, nor forest bloom.

Man's wrought marvels dantiest,
Colored canvas, chiseled stone,
Comforts few, but all that's best,
Each that special beauty owns.

Then as worldly station calls
All our home in order set,
Nor through hasty pride forget,
Chambers still outrank the halls.

After, if you more can send,
Nearly decorate the shell;
Next your crumbling fences mend,
Lay your road-beds deep and well—

But beware, least these beguile
Care on outward things to waste;
Save in heart-cells fair and chaste,
Where does fortune really smile?

Crop Reports from Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi and Alabama.

Arkansas—In this State 75 per cent. planted, expecting to finish on the 10th of May. This is two weeks earlier compared with last year. Weather about the same as last season, except the latter part of April, when several storms and heavy rains set in, extending over the northwestern portion, which in many cases resulted in the necessity of replanting. Labor is doing well. Condition of the crop, good and advanced. There is a heavy rise in the Arkansas River, but no apprehension of overflow.

Tennessee---Nearly the entire planting has been finished, with the exception of three counties, reported half planted. The bottom lands seem to be more backward than the uplands. For two weeks ending on the 28th of April the weather has been unusually cold; besides several storms and heavy rains have greatly interfered with field work. Probably in several sections replanting will become a necessity. Corn is reported in a fair condition. There is some apprehension of an overflow in the Mississippi River.

Mississippi—With the exception of plantations along the river and a few sections in the northern part of the State, planting is nearly completed. Two weeks advanced compared with last year and for many sections a good stand is reported. Heavy rains and severe hail storms are reported to have visited the northern and northwestern sections of the State, from 22d to 27th of April, and it is feared that some replanting will have to be made.

Alabama—Excepting some plantations along the Bigbee and Warren rivers, where, in consequence of heavy rains during the middle of April, field work has been retarded, planting in this section may be considered finished by the 15th of May. There will be very little replanting on cotton lands. On an average, the weather is as favorable as last year, and planting somewhat advanced. Field labor in some parts has been scarce, otherwise satisfatory. The rivers are falling and no danger exists of an overflow.—The Avalanche.

Introduction of the Potato.

It has always been known that the potato was first brought into England by Sir Walter Raleigh, when he returned from his voyage "for discovering and planting" colonies in the year 1586. Thomas Herriot, the mathematician, in describing potatoes, says, "These roots are round, some as large as a walnut, others much larger; they grow in damp soil, many hanging together as if fixed on ropes; they are good for food either boiled or roasted." Sir Robert Southwell, in 1508, informed the Royal Society of London that his grandfather took potatoes into Ireland, having received them of Raleigh himself. There is a tradition in Ireland that they were first brought into that island by an Irish priest from France, when the Faculty of Paris had pronounced it poisonous; but Southwell's account is no doubt correct. This root was, however, first introduced into Europe by the Spaniards, who brought it from the kingdom of Quito to Spain, whence it was transplanted to Australian Flanders, where it was cultivated and sent as presents to Rome and Vienna before 1598.

Peter Cieco, in his "Chronicle," printed in 1553, says that the inhabitants of Quito had besides mays, a tuberous root which they ate, and called papas. Clusius, a botanist of Vienna, concludes that this was the same plant as above, living specimens of which he had received from Flanders. The roots introduced by Sir Francis Drake and Sir John Hawkins, were sweet potatoes from Spain and the Canary Islands, which were used as a great delicacy long before the common potato was known. The kissing-comfits of Falstaff, "Let the sky rain potatoes, hail kissing-comfits, and snow eryngoes" (Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v, Scene 5), and other confections were principally made of these and eryngo roots.—National Repository.

AN Iowa paper tells of a smart wife who helped her husband to raise seventy acres of wheat. The way she helped him was to stand in the door and shake a broom at him when he sat down to rest.

THREE things that never agree—two cats over one mouse, two wives in one house, or two lovers after one maiden.

Cigar Tobacco.

The culture of tobacco suitable for the manufacture of cigars must soon become a matter of serious consideration with every grower who desires to command the best prices for his crops. The cigar interest is rapidly becoming prominent among other industries, and will soon make demands that must in some way or other be met. The territory at present devoted to the raising of cigar tobacco, in the United States, is comparatively small—too small in fact to supply the present demand. What then are the manufacturers to do when the deficiency increases?

North Carolina, with an eye to the welfare of her tobacco producers, has already taken steps to encourage the growing of cigar tobacco within her borders. The State geologist has procured seed from Connecticut and Pennsylvania, which is to be distributed in the districts adapted to the culture of that class of tobacco. It is thought that by thus opening up a new market and diversifying the crop, that an impetus will be given to the trade that may prove of great advantage to both State and people. There is certainly sound logic in diversifying the crop, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that a part of the cigar tobacco trade may be drawn to the "old North State."

No doubt there are certain requirements as to soil in the production of what is called cigar tobacco, but they are not of such a character as to preclude the possibility of their being embraced in the soil of North Carolina, or even of Ohio or Kentucky. In fact, we see no reason why producers within the reach of Cincinnati may not look upon this question and derive whatever of profit there may be in it. There are many things to be developed in tobacco culture, and when development carries with it a prospect of profit there is no good reason for delay in it. —Western Tobacco Journal.

The Banks of the Mississippi.

The New Orleans Picayune says: There is something extremely curious in the crops of the east and west banks of the Mississippi. It has been noticed for some time past that these two banks enjoy entirely different weathers and climates; that a frost on one side of the river seldom crosses it; that while the right bank might be enjoying a rain, the left bank was just as apt to be suffering from a drought; and in fact, that the thousand yards of the Mississippi produced the same effect, as far as climate and weather are concerned, as a thousand miles of ocean. The last few years have shown a wonderful difference of the sugar crops of the plantations on the east and west banks of the river, and greatly in favor of the latter, a difference that is increasing each year. For instance, the crop on the west bank plantations this year was 56,350 hogsheads, to 34,901 hogsheads produced by the east bank plantations, showing that the former are sixty-one per cent. more productive than the latter.

The Leaf of Life.

There's a certain curious member of the plant family, very common in Jamaica, we are told, called the life plant, or leaf of life, because it is almost impossible to kill the leaves. You may cut one off and hang it up by a thread, where any other leaf would be discouraged and dry up. It will send out long, white, thread-like roots, and set about growing new leaves. You may cut off half a leaf and throw it into a tight box where it can get neither light nor moisture (necessaries of life to other plants), the spirited little leaf puts out its delicate roots all the same. Even pressed and packed away in a botanist's herbarium—the very dryest and dullest place you ever did see—it will keep up its work, throw out roots and new leaves, and actually grow out of its covers. It is said that botanists who want to dry this pertinacious vegetable are oblige to kill it with a hot iron or with boiling water.

A Disease Among the Hogs.

A new disease, which is almost invariably fatal, has broken out among the hogs in the Fortsville and Rolesville sections of this county, and along the Franklin line generally. It is neither the cholera nor the quinsy, and the farmers are puzzled to know what it is or what cause produces it. The hogs are seized with it when apparently in good health, and dropping down squeal as if in great pain, and die in the course of an hour or two. A hog being taken with this disease has not been known to recover. If any one knows what the disease is and a remedy for it, some information on the subject would be gladly received by many farmers in this county, who are losing many of their swine.—Raleigh (N. C.) News.

HOME should always be made attractive. Economy that shows itself in depriving home of cheer and attractions is dearly bought. If children are to appreciate and choose home in preference to any other place make it inviting to them. Human nature—the same the world over—seeks and loves the beautiful; pictures and ornaments, and games and amusements in multiplied forms, in keeping with the means and propriety of all, are at the hands of all. A cheerful home makes better boys and girls, and in so much as you raise the standard, society is benefited and the world made better.

THE shoemakers don't mind dull times. Their shoes are soled before they go into the market.

A Novel Life Preserver.

The lower portion of the curious device resembles a life-preserving dress; the upper part is a kind of buoy floating chamber, in which the occupant has some freedom of motion for his head and arms. The object is to provide the shipwrecked person with not only a means of flotation, but with complete shelter. Inside the enlarged upper chamber, it is proposed to place provisions and a water supply; so that the wearer can stay afloat for a month, if need be, with safety and comfort.

The upper portion is made of strong sailcloth, waterproofed and distended on a jointed cylindrical frame. Across the lowest ring a diaphragm is placed, in which are two apertures for the legs, which are incased in waterproof pants and boots, covered with metallic rings, in order to afford protection against fishes and sharp rocks. These rings are made to fit one within the other when the dress is folded so as to enable the device to be stowed in small space. The top of the upper chamber is inclosed by a hood, in which a window is made. An air pipe is provided, leading to a respirator fastened over the mouth of the occupant. An annular air chamber is provided, which keeps the upper part of the apparatus well out of the water. Mr. Traugott Beck, of Newark, N. J., is the inventor.—Scientific American.

A NEW swindle is being perpetrated upon the unsophisticated grangers—or rather an old swindle in a new form—and people will do well to look out for the operator. This time he goes about with a galvanized wire clothesline, and proposes to have the person he is talking to act as agent in that neighborhood. He offers to make him a present of one hundred feet of clothesline. Ruralist accepts, and thinks operator a very nice man indeed. Operator produces a blank form which granger is to sign, constituting him agent This paper is all right—but when he goes to sign it the operator slips it along a little and there is another paper underneath to which he affixes his name instead of the paper which he has read. This proves to be an order for a vast amount of clothesline, which is shipped to him. As the granger cannot deny his signature he generally has it to pay—either that, or go into a suit, which would cost him as much as the clothesline.—Clermont (O.) Courier.

A Curious Calculation.

It is asserted by scientific writers, says an Irish newspaper, that the number of persons who have existed on our globe since the beginning of time amounts to 66,627,843,237,075,256. These figures, when divided by 11,320,689,732, the number of square miles of land on the globe, gives 1,414,626,075 persons to each square mile. If we reduce these miles to square roods, the number will be 1,853,174,600,000, which, divided in like manner, will give 1,373 inhabitants to each square rood, and these being reduced to feet will give about five persons to each square foot of terra firma. It will thus be perceived that our earth is a vast cemetery. On each square rood of it 1,283 beings lie buried, each rood being scarcely sufficient for ten graves, with each grave containing 128 persons. The whole surface of our globe, therefore, has been dug over 128 times to bury its dead.

Happiness of Childhood.

The period of life from three years to ten, if we are kindly treated, if we are not galled with the iron yoke of despotism, if we are not made to feel that we have no will of our own, if we are not thwarted and thrust aside from our innocent desires by the caprice of persons older than ourselves, is in many respects the happiest epoch of our existence. Then is the sunshine of the bosom, the first vintage and harvest of our newly acquired senses of perception and imagination, before dear-bought experience has convinced us of their futility and hollowness. It is the epoch in which, by the omnipotent character of nature, we know not what we shall eat, or wherewithal we shall be clothed. But all is provided for us by a superintendence that asks no aid from ourselves, and in which we have no particle of consciousness.

A MAN who hanged himself in Nevada left a letter to a friend, in which he said: "I advise you earnestly to follow my example. You ought to know you are to mean to live, the world would be better without you, and it is your duty to die, and leave more room for better men." The friend says he has no intention of following the advice.

CIVILITY is to a man what beauty is to woman. It creates an instantaneous impression in his behalf, while the opposite excites as quick a prejudice against him. It is a real ornament, the most beautiful dress a man or woman can wear and worth more as a means of winning favor than the finest clothes and jewels ever worn.

"Let me see," says the nurse of a sick man, "the doctor said one teaspoonful every ten minutes; that makes six every hour, say 72 during the night. I shall give him 72 spoonfuls right away, and have a chance to get a little sleep myself."

A LITTLE fellow who wore striped stockings was asked why he made barber poles of his legs. His pert reply was, "Well ain't I a little shaver?"

A REMEMBRANCE.

Lightly o'er the evening tide,
From the hazy shore remote,
With three—a heedless, half-taught guide—
Skimmed our little, white-sailed boat.
The breeze grew faint, but thou, my friend,
And I were full of boyish glee,
And deemed it only sport to spend
A lonely summer night at sea.

Our tiny boat scarce stirred, while o'er
The boundless waters darkness fell;
We only sang and laughed the more,
And many a tale we had to tell.
Ah! we were then two happy boys,
Roving, careless, wild and free;
Like cluniless Arabs in our joys,
Upon that lonely summer sea.

The day-star woke with vestal beam,
Trembling o'er the snowy foam,
When from the east a soft gale came—
To waft the minic sailors home.
Alas! our youthful prime is gone,
We are not what we used to be!
But still, 'tis sweet to think upon
That lonely summer night at sea.

Another Richmond in the Field.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

I am a candidate craving votes. I want to go to Frankfort to serve the people of my county. I know they are heart and soul in favor of my platform. No man of sense, with a spark of patriotism in his chest, can say aught against a single plank in it. It is made of reform lumber, without spot, speck, blemish, knot, wind-shake or woodpecker hole, spiked together with the steel of retrenchment, tempered at the Bessimer works. I present it with confidence, and challenge silent criticism to condemn her smallest faults in tones of loudest accent. Small things first is respectful.

1. I am against the Criminal Court and its big Judge. Every bone, tendon, fiber and nerve in me shudders at the very name of that monstrously extravagant judicial nuisance. My voice is, "Abolish it! Abolish it!" without more talk. Put in its place an Anti-Criminal Court, with monthly terms and no salary, presided over by an acquitted parson named by Theodore Tilton. Let him come. Brother Beecher might do to begin with conquer by love.

2. I am for divesting Judge McMamma of his vested rights, and for requiring him to pay back all the spondulix he has drawn since he became the Judge of the grand nuisance. If this is ex post facto, let her be so. The end justifies the means. Reform is the watchword of my canvass. Is not this economy, too?

3. I am for an abuormal school, hence against Dr. Henderson's normal pet. We must get back to first principles as we were under the "old dispensation," if we expect to be happy and live forever. No quotation intended. Minds alike sometimes run in like channels.

4. I am against the common schools, the uncommon schools, the proper and improper schools—all but the abnormal—because they cost money. The tax part is worst of all. I am not in favor of teaching other folks' children at my expense. The State has no business to interfere. She hain't got a child to educate outside the penitentiary, though she claims to be the mammy of us all. She lies. This reading and writing makes us too smart to be honest. Reform is the word.

5. I am against school-houses. They are, and have always been, nuisances; have arrayed neighbor against neighbor in deadly discussion over the time when, the place where, and the money with which to build them. No two patrons in a district ever yet agreed when, where or how to build one. No spot of earth has ever been found mean enough to furnish a resting place for one, and the very air has learned to turn its face against them. Tear them down. Retrenchment and reform are what we want.

6. I am against the dog tax in toto, and am especially hostile to the discrimination it makes against the kind mothers of the pretty speckled pups. $1 on a dog and $3 on his loving mother is perfectly heathenish. This discrimination is, in my opinion, unconstitutional. It violates the equality secured to all the States and the citizens thereof; besides, it is ungallant and ungentlemanly to make war on females. Who is the county dog pelter? Who would be? Name him.

7. I am against the stock law. The whole of it is unconstitutional, the third section especially, because no power on earth has a right to make me lean on a poor old piled cow or a kicking mule for damages. I might get them that way, but who wants that kind? Reform is the word.

8. I am against the sheep law, because it is against the dog law. We must have harmony in the system. The valuable dog and the worthless sheep are in best accord when farthest apart. [Candidates, note this with a pin-hole.]

9. I am for mollifying, modifying, simplifying and codifying the statute laws of the land; and then I am for boiling them down and stirring them off until the whole thing can be done up in a book the size of a farmer's almanac with all the leaves torn out. Then anybody may chew the backs and swallow them down, and in a day be a lawyer of the first water, and beat Judge Mc. next time. Boys, take courage. Darn your friends. Elect me and the Big Judge is gone up. Remember me at the polls. Vote early and often.

10. I am against all lawyers, because they are in favor of all the laws in the big books of the leather back statutes, and, instead of retrenchment, they are eternally adding more and more laws to the mountains of nonsense we have on hand, just like we were a progressive race of beings. Don't they know that no science or art ever advanced? that the world, and all things on it and about it, are as they were on the morning of creation—no advance, no change? Retrenchment and reform is the motto. By this sign I conquer.

11. I am opposed to all school teachers. They have made us become so unequal. Some of us have learned to read, some to write, some one thing and some another, until there is no two of us alike. We can't eat, sleep, talk, dress, see, hear, feel or think alike. These teachers are the root of all our woes, and have caused the loss of our Eden. I would say, pass a private local act to hang them for past offenses. But that might be unconstitutional. I guess I had better strike this plank out for the benefit of constitutional law. I desire not to destroy fundamentals.

Fellow-citizens, I reserve the right to add to this platform any other planks of reform that I find lying aroun' loose. So do not be astonished at future developments. I am no office-seeker; will therefore go to either the House of Representatives, Senate or to Congress, or wherever I can serve you best. Vote for me for any office you choose, and for as many as you choose. I will go as the majority vote directs. Anything suits me. I enter no allianecs, therefore will not discuss this platform publicly, but just let her stand on her merits. I will be elected by a vote of unity. LYCURGUS.

The Midnight Ride of John Morgan Around Cincinnati.

So long as I live I shall never forget that night march around Cincinnati. We had now been almost constantly in motion for eleven days and nights, and gone nearly four hundred miles. It had been a period of almost total deprivation of rest and sleep, for when not marching we had been fighting or hard at work. The column was enembered with the men wounded in Indiana, and those still in the saddle, reduced in number to less than two thousand, were worn with the enormous fatigue consequent upon such exertions, of which no one who has not had a similar experience can form the slightest conception. The Second Brigade had but comparatively little trouble, for it was in front, and General Morgan rode at its head with the guides. But the First Brigade was embarrassed beyond measure. If the regiment in the rear of the advance brigade had been kept "closed up" and held compactly together, the entire column would have been directed by the guides. But, although composed of the very best fighting material, this regiment had always been under lax discipline, and the effect was now observable. Its rear companies would straggle, halt, and delay all behind them. When forced to proceed, they would move at a gallop. A great gap would thus be opened between the two brigades, and we, who were in the rear, were obliged to grope our way without assistance. At the frequent junctions of roads which occur in the suburbs of so large a city, we were compelled to consult all sorts of indications to ascertain the right path. The night was intensely dark, and it was necessary to light torches at all such points. The horses' tracks on paved and dusty streets so constantly traveled afforded no clue to the route our comrades had taken, but we could trace it by noticing the manner in which the dust "settled" or floated. On a calm night the dust occasioned by the passage of a large body of cavalry will remain in the air for several minutes, and moves slowly in the direction taken by those who disturbed it. We were also aided by noticing the slaver which had dropped from the mouths of the horses. At every halt men would fall asleep, and oven drop from their saddles, and the officers were compelled to exereise constant vigilance to keep them in the ranks. Daylight returned just as we reached the Little Miami railroad, the last point at which we anticipated immediato danger, and after the trials of the night, its appearance was gratefully hailed. Our progress was continued, however, save an hour's halt in sight of Camp Dennison to feed the horses, until we reached Williamsburg, where we rested, after a march of ninety-seven miles, and for the first time during the raid slept the sleep of the righteous who know no fear.—Gen. Basil Duke in Philadelphia Times.

"WHAT is the annual corn crop of Kentucky?" asked a foreign tourist of a Kentuckian. "I can't exactly say." replied the Kentuckian, "but I know it's enough to make all the whisky we want, besides what is wasted for bread."

WE understand that parties in Lawrenceburg have been corresponding with Mr. A. G. Winston, of this place, for the purpose of ascertaining the steps necessary to organize a turnpike company. This company, if organized, proposes building, or to assist in building, a turnpike from the Lawrenceburg ferry to a point somewhere near the Rolen Botts farm. For the construction of this road, it is said the city of Lawrenceburg will give $5,000. This surely is very liberal on the part of our neighbors, and should be appreciated by the Boone County farmers in the neighborhood of the Lawrenceburg ferry. The length of the road will be about three miles, and will require but little more than the $5,000 proposed to be given. The advantages are such that the cost of building the road will be very moderate, and a matter of comparatively a very few dollars and cents with the resident land owners. This road, if built, will put the farmers along its route immediately in the market at all seasons of the year. This we believe to be the fact, because the manufacturing business in Lawrenceburg is increasing, and, as a natural result, the consumption of farm products will be increased, and the demand greater. This market, will in a short time, be sufficient to require the entire amount of produce the farmers in that vicinity raise for sale, and thus, we see, bring a market directly to their doors, as it were. In view of all the advantages and all that is to be gained by the road, the land owners in the neighborhood of the above named ferry should, by all means, not allow the propositions made by Lawrenceburg, pass. They should accept it at once. It is almost building the road for them. We ask our readers in the locality where it is proposed to build the road, to give the matter a careful consideration, and see if they can arrive at any other conclusion than that the proper time for building the road has come and now is the time to strike.

THE following is the very complimentary "send off" the Ticket gives Mr. Milton Hamilton, a man with whom nearly every man, woman and child in Boone is acquainted:

Col. Milt. Hamilton is fairly in the field as a candidate for the Legislature from the country distriet of Kenton County. Mr. Hamilton is, first of all, a sterling, uncompromising Democrat, who never listened to any reason why he should not speak vote and act his sentiments. Then, he is a thoroughly honest man, with a big heart, half of which is devoted to his friends, and the other half to truth and justice. He is well acquainted in the county, and very popular, and we hardly see why he can fail of an election to the office which he is thoroughly qualified for and worthy of.

THE trouble with the Mexican desperadoes along the Rio Grande is on the inerease. The former Mexican Administration was unable to prevent the raids of the Mexican out-laws, and the present Administration seems to be no better for that purpose. It now becomes evident that the United States must protect her citizens on the border, as these depredations have been increasing for some time they may yet ripen into an open war between the United States and Mexico.

IF we die to-day, the sun will shine as brightly and the birds will sing as sweetly to-morrow. Business will not be suspended a moment, and the great mass will not bestow a thought upon our memories. "Is he dead?" will be the solemn inquiry of a few, as they pass to their work. But no one will miss us except our immediate connections, and in a short time they will forget and laugh as merry as when we sat beside them. Thus shall we all, now active in life, pass away. Our children crowd close behind us, and they will soon be gone. In a few years not a living being can say, "I remember him." We lived in another age, and did business with those who slumber in the tomb. Thus is life! How rapidly it is passed.

The New York Legislature passed a bill appropriating one million dollars for the completion of the new Capitol, and the Governor promptly vetoed the bill. He considers the new capitol a great public calamity, inasmuch as there has already been expended on it over seven million dollars, nearly twice the amount the State was assured would complete it, and he claims it can not be finished on the original plan for less than fifteen or twenty million dollars, an unparallelled extravagance. In the same bill, appropriations to the amount of one million five hundred thousand dollars were vetoed.

We have before us a copy of the Moffett Liquor Law of Virginia. This law imposes a tax on the privilege of selling wine, ardent spirits or malt liquors in that State, for the support of the State Government. In the first section of the law the penalty for its violation is fixed at a fine of not less than twenty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, and imprisonment not less than one nor more than twelve months. A person obtaining a license to sell by retail is required to give bond in the sum of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of the requirements of the law granting the license. All bonds taken under the provisions of the act contain a waiver of homestead. This act makes the unit or basis of taxation, in case of a bar-room keeper, every drink sold. The tax assessed on quantities less than a half pint is two and one-half cents, or two and one-half cents is collected off of every drink sold. In order that the bar-keepers may not cheat the Commonwealth out of the tax, the Legislature ordered a register contructed, with which the salesman, in the presence of the purchaser, is required to register the amount sold. This register is so constructed that by turning a crank, a bell is struck once and the indicator on its dial has moved one point or number for each half pint or multiple thereof sold. The retail dealer or bar-room liquor dealer is required to settle his specific license tax semi-annually in advance. Just previous to each County Court a Commissioner visits all the bar-rooms and makes a record of all the drinks sold during the month, as shown by the register ordered kept, and makes out the tax account at the rate of two and one-half cents on each drink sold. This amount of tax thus charged against the bar-keeper is collected immediately. This law, taken as a whole, bears heavily upon the dealers, and it seems that the Legislature has taken great precaution in barring all avenues of escaping the tax imposed upon the whisky traffic. This law will greatly increase the revenue of the State, and while this is done it so increases the price of whisky by the drink that it will prevent, doubtless, many a poor man indulging so freely in the ardent.

The Louisville correspondent to the Cincinnati Enquirer says: "The United States District Attorneyship will be settled in a few days. Information has been received here from Washington, which leaves no doubt but that Bristowism will again be officially recognized by the reappointment of Colonel C. G. Wharton to that office. The Colonel has received no official notification of his success, but is serene and happy in the confidence of his coming good fortune. The changes in the Marshal and Attorney's offices make a new deal in the United States Court, and if Judge Ballard should be appointed to the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Emmons, and the new appointment would be necessary for that court. The Deputy Marshals, of whom there are a pretty big number under O'Neal, are on nettles to learn what will be their fate under the new dispensation. As Colonel Bullitt, Assistant District Attorney, held the same position under Wharton, he will likely retain his position when that gentleman returns to his first love. And so, at last, peace will perhaps reign once more in the Custom-house.

Some time since it was ascertained that agents for London and Liverpool tailors had visited New York and taken measures of quite a number of persons for suits of clothing, and that after the clothing was put up in London and Liverpool it was smuggled into New York and delivered to those who ordered it. A sharp watch was kept for this branch, and, one day last week, about $1,200 worth of clothing was captured on board one of the steam ships. The different bundles were labled and the Captain of the vessel ordered to deliver them to the owners when called for. The duty on these goods is estimated at six hundred dollars.

The following is the farewell address of ex-President Grant, made while steaming down the Delaware:

"My dear friends: I was not aware that we would have so much speech-making here, or that it would be necessary for me to say any more to you, but I feel that the compliments you have showered upon me were not altogether deserved. They should not all be paid to me either, as a soldier or as a civil officer. As General your praises do not all belong to me. As Executive of the Nation they were not due to me. There is no man that can fill both or either of these positions without the help of good men. I selected my Lieutenants when I was in both positions, and they were men, I believe, who could have filled my place often better than I did. I never flattered myself I was entitled to the place you gave me. My Lieutenants could have acted, perhaps, better than I, had opportunity presented itself. Sherman could have taken my place as a soldier or in civil office, and so could Sheridan and others I might name. I am sure if the country ever comes to this need again there will be men for the work; there will be men born for any emergency. Again I thank you, and again I bid you goodbye, and once again I say that if I had failed, Sherman, or Sheridan, or some of my other Lieutenants, would have succeeded."

Where the Money Went.

Washington, May 14.—An effort is being made by certain administration organs to throw the responsibility for the stoppage of the judicial machinery of the Government on the last House of Representatives. These sheets claim that the reductions made at the First Session of the Forty-fourth Congress, through the persistent efforts of Mr. Randall, were so great that the Judiciary fund was insufficient to meet the ordinary expenses of the courts. This is false. The late Attorney General Taft authorized the employment in the Southern States of an army of special deputy United States Marshals, nearly 13,000 strong, and more than half a million dollars of the Judiciary fund was consumed in paying them. In addition to this, all the expenses of bringing witnesses to make affidavits for use before the Louisiana Returning Board were paid out of the United States Marshals fund at New Orleans. In various other ways the money appropriated for Judiciary purposes was used as a campaign fund by the Republican party.

What T. D. Goodridge Knows About Raising Tobacco.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

As it is getting time to prepare for a tobacco crop, I thought that I would give my tobacco growing friends my advice, as well as experience, in the tobacco culture. It is a fact unquestionable that when we grow a crop of tobacco, we grow it for the pounds, for what we expect to profit by it; therefore, don't plant it on new land when you can do better. I find that it pays a great deal better to select a very rich piece of old land, break it early and deep, and harrow well. Then, when your plants get large enough to set out, lay off your ground three feet wide, and, if you don't wish to hill it, plant your tobacco on the edge of the furrow, about 16 inches apart. By so doing you will make more tobacco than you know what to do with. I followed this plan last year, and made from half an acre 1,322 pounds of tobacco. How is that for high? T. D. G.

—Somerset Reporter: The wheat crop in this county, this year, promises a larger yield and better quality than for several years. The apple and peach crop will doubtless be very abundant.

—Glasgow Times: The "town hog" department of the Frankfort Yeoman is edited with pig-cue-liar ability and brilliancy. Every brickbat rooted up becomes a paragraphic jewel, and every turnip turned up turns to twenty carrots fine of journalistic gold.

—Lexington Gazette: Mr. Avery Winston received a letter a few days ago, postmarked Maysville, Ky., containing a $50 bill, and with a slip of paper upon which was written the one word "Conscience." He does not remember any transaction that leads him to suspect the source from which the money came.

—The Robinson County Tribune says, the cool and rainy weather has discommoded our farmers to a great extent in planting corn, and they are more backward in planting this season than usual. Nearly all those who planted corn previous the inclement weather had to replant, as the seed rotted in the ground.

—Lebanon Standard: One morning last week Mr. W. B. Jarboe, who resides two miles west of this city, was the possessor of about 400 young chickens. They were fed upon dough mixed with salt, during the day, and that evening about 375 of them were dead. Salt is poisonous to chickens, and it is the best plan to defer salting them until after they are dead.

—The two Reynolds, who were shot in the difficulty with the Deputy United States Marshals near Glasgow, last week, are improving rapidly. Tom, whose injuries were thought to be fatal, is doing finely, and is regarded by his physician as in a fair way to get well. Ike, the younger one, who was shot by Captain Whedon, had the ball extracted, Tuesday, and is doing well.

—Glasgow Times: Gen. John S. Williams, the gallant soldier of two wars, and one of Kentucky's truest friends, spent Tuesday, last week, with his Glasgow friends, on his way home from the Arkansas Hot Springs, whither he has been to remedy a painful and relentless neurgalic eye affection. The many friends of the General will be pleased to hear that he looks in vigorous health and elegant condition, and that his eye is greatly improved.

—The farmers are murmuring, and not without cause. The tillers of this section set out at the opening of the season to make up the shortcomings of the past three years, caused by hard times and the partial failure of the crops. At the outset of the springtime everything gave promise of good crops and a better state of things in general, but the cold and disagreeable weather of March and April, and the heavy and prolonged rains of the present month have partially demoralized the farmers by the serious thwarting of their plans. So backward has the spring been that but few of them have finished planting, and many have hardly made a beginning. Corn that has been planted for a fortnight or more shows no signs of life above ground, and it is thought much of it never will. Tobacco plants, too, we are told, may be affected by too much rain, and a few more days of such weather as the past eight have afforded, will tell upon those cherished agricultural commodities. The farmers have well grounded reasons for complaint.—Owensboro Examiner.

Horses! Horses!

WM. CROPPER has reduced the price for services of Eclipse Clay to $10 to insure. The following is the description and pedigree of this celebrated animal:

ECLIPSE CLAY is a deep blood bay, with black points, foaled May 6th, 1870, and is full 16 hands high. He won the first race he ever started in, making a record of 2:42 in the fourth heat, on a very slow half-mile track. He could trot heats in 2:35 and better last season, when in condition. He is square-gaited and level-headed, good tempered and has a good constitution.

ECLIPSE CLAY was sired by Cassius M. Clay, Jr., (Strader's) with whose pedigree the people of this community are well acquainted; first dam, Lady Hockaday, by Trimble's Eclipse; second dam by Brown's Bellfounder. Lady Hockaday has proven herself a mother of trotters, being the mother of Lodge, Black Crook and Salvador, all full brothers to ECLIPSE CLAY, who could all trot down in the thirties with very little training. 33-tf

WE have reliable information that George W. Sleet, Sheriff of this county, is at this time a married man. The female party to the contract is a lady who resided in Grant County. Her name has slipped our memory.

THE inmates of the jail declare that the iron lining over head, last Friday and Saturday, was so hot that they could not bear their hands on it. Friday the heat was unendurable, and those persons in the upper room were taken below.

MONDAY, Mr. Cowen gave the lower room in the jail a thorough scouring. He was careful to keep the windows and door open, however, for fear that the steam generated might explode the room and demolish the building. The prisoners in the upper room were uneasy all day, for fear he might thoughtlessly close the door, which would undoubtedly have resulted in a number one blow-up. There is considerable peril in leaving a tub of water in that building during a hot day, if the door is closed.

THE TURNPIKE TROUBLE.

Lively Times at the Commissary and All Along the Line.

About noon last Sunday the news reached Burlington that Wake & Burgis had sold out their contract for building the Burlington and Bellevue turnpike. It was at once the conclusion of those to whom they were indebted that it was their intention to defraud them out of their money, and the remainder of the day was spent in "cussing" and discussing Wake & Burgis. Early Monday morning a general rush was made for the Commissary, which is located about 3½ miles out from Burlington, and now known as Greensburg. The army of creditors that commenced the march for that place was composed of several negroes who held claims for work on the road, men who had been overseeing work on the road, a landlord with a big board bill in his pocket, and a butcher with a big beef account in his hat. When this division of creditors arrived at above named town, a considerable crowd from the other end of the road had assembled, all looking after the prospect of a settlement of their claims. Mr. Wake dispersed the crowd by telling them that on Tuesday the Board of Directors would meet at the Commissary, and all things would be put in a satisfactory shape.

At an early hour Tuesday morning the same forces again took up the line of march for Greensburg. When they arrived they found the woods that shut in the burg full of the clamoring hands, there being but few at work anywhere on the road. One of the firm of Squires & Meglanthon, Wake & Burgis' reputed successors, had arrived, and, in company with Wake, had started over the road. Some of the Board of Directors had arrived, but could not give the assembled creditors any satisfaction about the matter. At noon a detachment of colored hands arrived from the frontier and reported a considerable war spirit growing, re-enforcements arriving every few hours, and no indications of the troubles being amicably adjusted. This was about the state of affairs represented as existing at Greensburg, which will doubtless be a severe shock on the nerves of the juvenile town. After dinner a number of sight seers shouldered themselves and started for the seat of discontent. They stayed but a short time, returned and reported the commotion a "big thing." All manner of "I believes" were indulged in Monday and Tuesday. The matter was still in a torn-up condition when our columns closed, Mr. Wake saying he had not sold out and would pay off all the claims against him.

LAST Saturday was the day, the Court-house the place, and 1:30 p. m. the hour agreed upon by four of the members of the late Burlington Literary Society and four of the members of the Farmers' Literary Society to discuss the question, "Affirmed, That lawyers have been more injurious than beneficial to the country." The members of the Farmers' Literary Society taking the affirmative were James H. Walton, Wm. Conner, A. F. Crigler and Chas. Conner. Mr. Crigler, however, could not be on hand when the discussion was commenced, and Mr. Wm. Watts was induced to take his place. The members of the Burlington Society who defended the negative were R. C. Green, Thos. H. Stephenson, W. L. Riddell and A. W. Gaines. By the time the discussion commenced, the Court-room was well filled with an audience composed of ladies and gentlemen who came to hear the discussion. At 2 p. m. the house was called to order by Mr. H. J. Foster, who had been selected to preside over the meeting. The proposition being stated, Mr. James H. Walton led off in a thirty-minute speech on the affirmative. This was followed by a speech of the same length by Mr. Green on the negative. Each of the other six disputants were allowed twenty-five minutes, and the first speaker on the affirmative five minutes in which to reply. For three hours and thirty-five minutes the audience sat and listened to the merciless attacks made on the legal profession by the speakers of the affirmative, and the defense made for them by those of the negative. While one side would extol the profession, the other would heap upon it mountains of accusations. The affirmative would clothe the profession of law with garments crimsoned with wrong and injustice; the negative would immediately come to its rescue, disrobe it, and hold it up as immaculate. Thus the scales went up and down during the discussion, but as to which side of the scales was dangling in the air when the discussion was closed, we leave those who were present as audience to decide for themselves.

THE Burlington String Band is miserably behind the times in some respects. For instance, two of the candidates for Representative have each spent a night in Burlington, the capital of the county, and neither of them were serenaded. Boys, you must wake up and keep up with the times in which you live. Give them a send-off when here, and hear them speak. We don't reckon they have any cake and wine in their stock of electioneering goods, so you need not whet up your appetites for that. Tune up and be ready for the next. One will be along in a few days.

IF in order, we would like to make a motion that an umbrella ferry be established at each crossing in the town, in order that the members of the Whittling Society, which holds its daily sessions in the shady places about town, may be escorted across the streets without being exposed to the scorching rays of the sun. Now, about fifty-one members of that society second the motion.

A GOOD deal of inconvenience and some expense would be saved us if all persons to whom we have sent notices of expiration of subscriptions would give them their prompt attention, and send in their renewals, or information of the fact where they do not intend to renew.

Personal Mention.

MRS. PERMELIA FINCH is in Williamstown visiting her parents.

MRS. EUNIE RICE, whom we last week reported sick, is somewhat better.

MR. A. G. WINSTON has been quite ill for some days, but is now convalescent.

JAS. N. PERKINS, ex-Burlingtonian, and at present Cashier, &c., in the Rising Sun (Ind.) Bank, was in town Sunday.

EUSEBIUS KIRTLEY was ordained a minister of the Gospel at Bullettsburg Church, at their regular meeting in this month.

MRS. MARY RUNION and MRS. Bettie Riddell, who were visiting at this place last week, have returned to their respective homes.

DR. H. C. POWELL, of Danville, Ill., was in Burlington, Friday, shaking hands with the many friends he found during his brief sojourn here some time since.

MRS. POLLIE PIATT, who has been visiting her daughter, MRS. McKenzie, of this place, in company with her daughter, left, Tuesday morning, to visit Maj. B. M. Piatt, of Covington.

LAST Sunday a week Wm. Williamson, who lives near Bellevue, went to the pasture to catch a horse. He approached the animal and was about to put his hand on its neck, when it whirled and kicked him in the face, nearly cutting his nose off, and knocking him to the ground, where he lay for some time in an insensible condition. When he became conscious, he managed to get to the house and had a physician called in, and at this writing is much improved.

ONE day last week a fishmonger drove into town, and, thinking he would make a little sport of the town, inquired of Mr. Hawes the way to Burlington. Mr. Hawes, without any hesitation, directed the would-be "sharper" to Burlington in Iowa, and also to Burlington in Massachusetts, telling him he could take his choice. The man had no more to add.

WE hear of a certain Professor of this town who, a few evenings since, was endeavoring to dispose of a youngster of the feline tribe, but, there being serious doubts as to the effect the cat might have on nasal food, his kind offers were invariably declined.

STROLLING about town the other day, we dropped in Dr. I. R. McKenzie's office and found the Doctor just finishing putting up a fine stock of entirely fresh medicines just from the city. The Doctor appears to be taking a fresh start in earnest.

JIM WESTRAY again comes to the front, this time commanding a company of marble players, who appropriate the street to the purpose of a "marvel" yard.

THE average loafer took more exercise, Tuesday, than common. The tricky wind would indulge in lifting their hats and compelling them to make chase.

LADIES will find the largest assortment of Lace Ribbons, Gros-Grain Ribbons, Ruches, Silk Handkerchiefs, Ties, Bows, &c., at Wiles', Lawrenceburg, Ind.

TWO new turnpikes are now being constructed in the county. This is about one-fifteenth of the number that should be built.

WEDNESDAY, J. A. Davis and A. S. Gaines received several crops of wool at this place.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 19, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

We almost feel like singing glory hallelujah, as we have had three clear days in succession, and it really looks as if the rain for the present is over. The past three days with us, the buds, blossoms, birds, and the very earth upon which we tread, look happy; and why should we, for whom all good things were created, not feel joyous. We believed all along there was a good time coming, and therefore did not buy what is politely called here a "stop-off bridge ticket."

We have no further use out here for that harsh and rather sad term, suicide. When a fellow nowadays withers, gets out of money, is beaten for office, is disappointed in love, or meets with any other of those misfortunes that make one feel like shuffling off the mortal coil, he buys a bridge ticket and stops half way, with a descent of some 80 feet into the Father of Waters, thus saving his friends the horrors of the sight of a throat cut, brains blown out, or a rope tied around the neck and then adjusted to a limb, which we have heretofore called suiciding. The stop-off bridge is the latest and most fashionable way of ending one's troubles with us. But we have not, during all our gloomy times or weather, felt like doing anything of the kind. We think such things foolish in the extreme, and would not advise even a defeated candidate to try such a thing on. A nice young man with us, who has lately bet on the wrong side in pork, and has lately made three attempts at jumping into the mighty Mississippi, but was rescued each time by his friends, now says himself such things are forbidden, and that he will not try it again.

The Recorder of day before yesterday came to hand yesterday p. m., and we now tender you our most sincere thanks for the publication of our remarks in behalf of "Col. Henderson." It always makes us happy when we know we are an humble instrument in the way of encouraging genius and honesty; and while we thus speak we are reminded that we were informed the other day that the Colonel is also a natural born orator. He having so many heaven-born qualities, we know we can't be wrong in supporting him. "Long may he wave."

Now, by the way, we are led to believe that none of your candidates favor, or are strongly for, normal, or high school, education. On that point we simply desire to say, if they can give a good reason why the youth of Boone County, Ky., should not be as well educated as the youth of Hamilton County, Ohio, we will agree with them. That is all we have to say on that subject just now.

The week closes with us with a dull and declining grain market. The shorts are ahead this week about 12 to 15 cents per bushel on wheat, 4 to 6 cents per bushel on corn, 10 to 12 cents per bushel on rye, and 3 to 5 cents per bushel on oats. That is, the different cereals have suffered a decline for the week of about the foregoing figures.

We quote wheat $1 80@2; corn, 47@49c; rye, 80@90c; Oats, 41@44c. We look for a further decline the coming week, as receipts, both here and in Chicago, are largely in excess of shipments. There are at this date not far from 8,000,000 bushels of grain on storage in Chicago. Our stock remains about the same as 1st of the month.

Strawberry season has arrived, and we were invited to a festival almost every evening this week. The young ladies of the Central Christian Church gave a sociable and strawberry festival at their church Thursday and Friday evenings of this week, and enriched their treasury thereby about $150—a very nice little gain to be realized in a two evenings entertainment. Yours truly,

BOB A. LONG.

The Error of the Executive Committee.

BURLINGTON, KY., May 21, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Beyond a desire to ventilate, for the view of the readers of the RECORDER, the heavy artillery brought into use in this especial political campaign by our Central Committee, I had no other motive in writing the letter that appeared in your paper two weeks since. The idea of a newspaper controversy has always been repulsive to me, and now I only wish to say a very little in answer to the arguments in favor of the Committee's ruling which you published last week.

In the first place, I did not presume that there would be more than two candidates for the Senate, but suggested the possibility of the thing to show the unfairness of the present arrangement. Again, if what is not fair in the eyes of our committee at a primary election becomes a rule of right and justice at the final one (i. e., to let the plurality nominate as well as elect), we have a direct contradiction from them of all that the party has heretofore held to; and if, as is said, the convention is in accordance with time-honored laws and customs, and the primary election an innovation, it is still no argument against the latter as a decisive tribunal. Because one plan is old and another new is not a sufficient reason alone for the preference of the one for the other; and as a primary election is the voice of the people, and a convention the voice of the few who have the interests of their friends at heart, or their own political advancement to secure, is an invincible argument for the primary election and against the convention, without the additional ornament of gray hair and antiquity.

The insinuation that I had read carelessly the edict of the committee reflects by his own subsequent argument, upon the writer who made it. He says that the pro rata division in all ballots following the first, in which the hindmost man will be dropped, will perfectly equalize and adjust the will of the people as fairly as if they had expressed it at the polls. That is his idea, at least, though not the language. Then follows the supposition that this town, at the primary election, gives A 80 votes, B 60, and C 20. Of course it is all right, with these exact figures, to give in the Convention 2 votes to A, 1½ to B, and ½ to C. But then, when he takes A and all his chances out of the race by dropping him on the first ballot, he simply guesses that 60 of those men who voted for A would prefer B as their second choice, and the other 20 would prefer C as second choice. Now, don't you see why this conclusion is reached? It is because B received more votes than C. There is no other reason on earth for such a conclusion. And this is exactly what the people are complaining of. They want to so instruct their delegates as that no guess work will be necessary. The easiest way in the world to do this is to let the delegates stay at home, and leave the whole affair for the people to decide at the primary election.

Of course his views harmonize with those of the committee, but is that an argument in favor of such views? Because he thinks as they do only shows that they agree, not that the views entertained are correct in themselves, or are concurred in by a majority of the people.

And then "Pax," in his peroration, kindly advises the intelligent voter to select "only honest and trustworthy men, who in the convention will conscientiously represent their views as expressed at the ballot-box." Here he has admitted the ghastly fact that it is in the power of the delegate to misrepresent his constituents. Of course, as I do not know who the delegates may be, if this course is persistently adhered to by the committee, I make no such charge against them but it is the "very appearance of evil" that we should shun, and now is the time to take the step. Let the committee call a meeting of the people at Burlington immediately, and submit this question of "Convention or no Convention" to them for a final settlement. It is but fair, and the people are heartily tired of having the work of eighteen hundred men undone by thirty-six. Let us lay aside the double barreled machinery, dear "Pax," and take up the unerring Democratic rifle vox populi, which is the only thing that will hit the mark.

Good-bye, dear "Pax," a truce to our disparity of political opinion. Vale, Pax vobiscum.

Petersburg.

The Betsy Pearl has failed to find a paying trade between Rising Sun and Cincinnati, and now her owner has tied her down at the wharf here. She has enjoyed the novelty of a bath lately, from which she has taken a bad cold, which added to the aggravation of the whooping cough makes her a fit subject to be "tied down." Last Sunday she took a load of pleasure seekers to Big Bone. Had a gay time, and left the balance at the hotel there out of supplies. Our pleasure excursionists generally lay the country waste and produce a famine wherever they go.

W. R. Gordon, a heathen Chinee, and a female reader or lecturer gave a couple of magnificent (?) entertainments last week. The first was a failure, flat, and the success of the second was not striking enough to knock a man off his feet. The Chinaman took the precaution to hand complimentary tickets to the City Fathers, so they all went and took their families, thereby ensuring a full house; but as the pecuniary more pre-vented the enforcement of a city law by which public exhibitions are taxed for the privilege of showing their ignorance, in the corporate limits, it is a sad memorial of the white man and the strength of filthy lucre.

The colored population had a preacher among them, last Sunday, and they really appeared to enjoy three sermons in one day. The weather only could compare with them in the way of a warm demonstration, for, notwithstanding the rain, the mercury ranged among the nineties for several hours. Religious enthusiasm in Bucktown appears to be periodical in its return, and comes on with the warm weather as naturally as the hay-fever.

Rev. Grandy, of the Universalist faith and order, preached here last Sunday, in the Reformed Church, to a rather large audience. The appointment was not generally published, and many people even in town did not know of his coming until the bell rang for services to begin.

Although the croquet fever has come again along with the usual spring crop of chills, flowers, other diseases, and not a newset of implements has been brought to town. Economy pervades the breasts of our players, and the last year's crop of tools is brought into the service.

A GREAT SECRET.

My friend, here's a secret
By which you may thrive;
I am fifty years old,
And my wife's forty-five.

A queen among beauties,
The wedding guests said,
When we went to the church
With the priest, and were wed.

That's thirty long years past,
And I can avow,
She was no more a beauty
To me, then, than now.

For still we are lovers
As I am alive,
Though I, sir, am fifty
And she's forty-five!

And here's the full secret,
That saves us from strife;
I kept her a SWEETHEART,
In making her WIFE!

What Beecher Thinks of Beecher.

In Plymouth Church, last night, the pastor, having returned from his Western jaunt, entertained a large gathering with a jovial talk about himself, his church and his troubles. He rehearsed how he first raised the banner and blew the trumpet against slavery; how he had boldly declared that he wore no man's fetters, and was ruled by no precedents or conventions; and how he had gradually overcome all opposition, and had seen the chains he had hammered on so long fall from the hands of a million of slaves. Then he drew a quick picture of the part of a great beacon that Plymouth Church played in the dark days of the war. He described the interior life of the church. The popular impression is, he said, that the church is some great racketing box, filled with grotesque people, and a parading mountebank in the pulpit; that its theology is streaked and that its policy is wholly worldly. "Now," added the pastor, "I concede that editors and reporters do the best they can, but I don't think that the editorial corps of the newspapers are the best judges of spiritual things, and therefore I don't wonder that they don't know a good thing when they see it." [Laughter.]

When Mr. Beecher made his never-failing reference to his scandal troubles coming as a church, he spoke of them as worse than anti-slavery, worse than riot, worse than war, worse than the wildest excitement of reconstruction. But when they overtook the church, strange to say, they seemed to recede from him. He had lived in them, led as a sheep to the slaughter, but when the suffering seized the church, he was filled up with hope and courage, and was enabled to lift up and minister to the church's wants. "I am," he added, "a father to many of you—a grandfather to some—and if the Lord don't want me I mean to work on here till I am 80 or 90 years old. [Laughter.] But I don't care much either way. If He wants me I am ready to go. I seem to have my strength renewed day by day, and I feel so active that I sometimes wish I had more to do.—N. Y. Sun.

Not so Poor as You Think.

A citizen who went on a business trip to Trimble County, Ky., a few days ago had occasion to cross a piece of scrub-oak clay land a few miles southeast of Milton. The ground seemed really so impoverished that it would produce nothing in the way of vegetation but gnarly oak bushes and a sort of silky moss instead of grass. Yet there was a residence situated in the midst of this forlorn looking area, and a man sat upon the fence in front of the house chewing "long green." Our friend approached him, asked a few questions, and then expressed surprise at any one trying to subsist on such soil. Said he to the man on the fence: "You must have a wretched time of trying to till this land. It is miserably poor. A goat would starve to death on a range of a hundred acres. I don't see how you——"

At this point the Kentuckian interrupted him by saying: "Wall, now, stranger, I'm not so poor as you might suppose. I don't own a d——d foot of this land!"—Madison (Ind.) Courier.

THE banquet given by the New York Chamber of Commerce on Monday, at which President Hayes and several members of his Cabinet were present by invitation, was the most notable and successful celebration of the kind in the history of this important commercial body. After the address of Mr. Babcock, President of the Chamber, President Hayes responded briefly to the toast in honor of the office he fills; ex-Governor Hoffman to that of "The State of New York;" Mayor Ely to that of "The City of New York;" Mr. Evarts to "Our Commercial Marine;" Rev. Dr. Storrs to "The Contributions of Commerce to Literature and Art;" Hon. Carl Schurz to "A Wise Economy in our National, State and Municipal Governments;" Hon. Hugh McCulloch to "Resumption of Specie Payments;" Gen. Sherman to "The Army and Navy of the United States," &c., &c.—N. Y. Observer.

LITERARY young man at a party: "Miss Jones, have you seen Crabbs' Tales?" Young lady scornfully: "I was not aware, sir, that crabs had tales." Young man covered with confusion: "I beg your pardon, ma'ma, I should have said read Crabbs' Tales!" Young lady angrily: "And I was not aware that red crabs had tails either." Exit, young man.

Starvation in China.

Simultaneously with the dearth in India, a famine is raging in the north of China; but while the care and energy in the Indian Government reduce the distress in the former case to a minimum, people are dying by thousands in China of sheer starvation. The scenes of the chief distress are in the north and east, in the extreme north of Kiangsu, in Shantung, in Pechili, and in Shanse; and from Shantung especially the accounts are heart rending. The whole tract of country suffered last summer from severe drought, which nearly destroyed the crops; and the peasantry, having eaten what little grain they had in store, or were able to gather, are reduced to the last stage of want. The people are eating grain husks, potato stalks, and elm bark, buckwheat stalks, turnip leaves, and grass seeds, which they gather in the fields. After these are exhausted they pull down their houses and sell the timber, and many eat the rotton sorgum stalks from the roof. They sell their clothes and children. Having no clothing to protect them from the cold, many take refuge in pits underground to keep themselves warm by the fetid breath of the crowd. In the east suburbs of Chingchow city there are four such pits. One-third of the number (240) originally put in to them are now dead within six weeks, and no sooner is a corpse carried out than a crowd is struggling for the place. Villages of 500 families report 300 dead of starvation; villages of 300 report 100 dead.

Almost the whole province of Shantung is suffering; but the suffering of eight hien districts is said to be beyond description, and as each contains an average of 1,000 villages, the thousands who have already perished may be to readily conceived.

The Government is doing next to nothing to relieve the distress. It has allotted only £14,000 for the whole of these eight districts—a mere pittance for such a calamity.—London Times.

The Blacksmith was Capable of True Love.

Away back half a century ago there lived in Lanesboro a rich old farmer. Then as now rich old farmers were the possessors of daughters and sons. And the daughters would have beaux. In the same town lived an industrious youn blacksmith, who sought the hand of the only daughter of the rich old farmer, who, by the way, held higher hopes for her, and plainly told the young that he "did not think an anvil and a piano would sound well together." The blacksmith swallowed the rebuff, and, forestalling Horace Greeley's advice by several years, "went West." Meanwhile the daughter had an unobjectionable suitor whom she was allowed to marry. Ten years or more she lived happily, when her husband died. Then came years of widowhood and all the sorrows and trials the word implies. A consoling and consolable widower, however, happening along, she was again married. Another decade of happy wedded life and she was again left a widow. It was then she returned to the parental roof; and after a few years her father followed the two husbands. Now was the first lover's opportunity. Within the present year, the young blacksmith having nearly reached the age of threescore and ten, while on a visit to Eastern friends, learned the situation, renewed his suit and was accepted. And now there is only perfect harmony in the "Anvil Chorus," in which they both join.—Springfield Republican.

Wash for Fences and Out-Buildings.

A Texas correspondent asks for a good recipe for white-wash. We know of no better one than the following: The following is a most excellent, cheap and durable wash for wooden fences and buildings. It owes its durability chiefly to the white vitrol which hardens and fixes the wash:

Take a barrel and slack one bushel of freshly burned lime in it, by covering the lime with boiling water. After it is slacked, add cold water enough to bring it to the consistency of good white-wash. Then dissolve in water and add one pound of white vitrol (sulphate of zinc) and one quart of fine salt.

To give this wash a cream color, add one-half pound yellow ocher (in powder). To give it a fawn look, add a pound of yellow ocher and one-fourth of a pound of Indian red.

To make the wash a handsome gray-stone color, add one-half a pound of French blue and one-fourth pound of Indian-red, a drab will be made by adding one-half of a pound of Venetian red.

For brick or stone, instead of one bushel of lime, use half a bushel of lime and half a bushel of hydraulic cement.

A Lady of True Love.

As a young man was looking over a barrel of eggs received at a grocery on Newark avenue, Jersey City, about a month ago, he found the following inscription upon one of the eggs:

"If this you see, young man,
Write just as soon as you can,
And let me hear from my favorite egg;
This great boon I humbly beg.
"Julia Brierson, Westfield, Ohio."

The youth immediately wrote to the address, inclosing his photograph, and received a reply and picture from the writer of the line. The correspondence was continued to the satisfaction of both persons, who are to be married next month. It is said the young lady is the daughter of a very wealthy farmer, and wrote the lines in jest, never expecting to hear from them.—New York Tribune.

THE WASP AND THE PARSON.

A good man rose up to preach,
A portly man was he;
He opened the book, he took his text—
It was a sight to see.

But while he preached, a wicked wasp
Did up his trousers crawl,
And stung him on his good left leg,
And made him loudly bawl.

Doubtless, his nose the wasp likes not,
And, therefore, in a trice,
(As if one sting was not enough)
He strightway stung him thrice.

Then did the parson jump and squirm,
And call upon the Lord,
Wherent, the wasp nipped him again,
And then he louder roared.

MORAL.

Now what's the moral, you do ask?
Why, this it is, I vow, sirs:
Either don't preach, or else keep wasps
Outside your sacred trousers.

THE MISTAKE I MADE.

Let me see—where was it I first met her? Oh, yes, it was boating by moonlight. A globe of reddish pearl slowly ascending out of the east—the shadows of the great bridge resting softly on the mirror-like surface of the river; the sound of a flute played softly afar off, and all of a sudden the keel of my boat coming sharply in contact with somebody else's oar.

"Hullo, you!" cried out a clear, incisive voice. "Where are you going to? Why don't you look where you are steering?"

"Charley Dresden!" cried out I, little heeding the torrents of obloquy he was beginning to heap upon me.

"Old Mottimore," he responded joyously. Who on earth would have thought of finding you here? Come into my boat. Hitch your old craft behind! Let me introduce you to Miss Sophy Adriance."

I looked as sharply at Miss Sophy as the moonlight and my own modesty would let me, for I knew that she was the especial admiration of my friend, Charley Dresden. I had heard her blue eyes and peach-blossom checks raved about until even my much-enduring patience had failed; I had listened to rhapsodies about her sweet voice and pretty ways. I had been called upon to criticise original poems composed in her honor until the subject had long since palled upon me—and here I had stumbled, as it were, upon her just as Charley was on the threshold of a declaration.

She was pretty, slight, and round and rosy, with china-blue eyes, a dimple in either cheek, and golden-brown hair worn in long, loose curls with none of the fashionable abomination of crimps, frizzes and artificial braids about her. There was something flower-like and delicate in her prettiness—something unconsciously imploring in her way of lifting her eyes up to your face. Hardened old bachelor though I was, I felt as if I could have fallen in love with her on the spot if I hadn't known as well that Charley had the first innings.

We rowed home together—or, at least, as far on our way home as the river would take us. Sophy sang little boat ballads; Charley roared out tender barcarolcs; I even essayed a German student song which I had learned in Heidelberg nobody knows how long ago, and we parted the best of friends.

A week afterward, Dresden and I met face to face in the street.

"Hullo, Mottimore!" said Charley, his honest visage lighting up. "What do you think of her?"

"I think she is a pearl—a jewel—a princess among women!" I answered, with perfect sincerity.

"Congratulate me, then!" cried Charley, beaming all over, "for I am engaged to her. Only last night! Look here!" opening a mysterious silver case which he took from his inner vest pocket. "What do you think of that for an engagement ring?"

"A fine diamond," said I, putting my head critically on one side; "and fancifully set."

"We're to be married in October," said Charley, lowering his voice in the most confidential tones. "It might have been sooner if I hadn't undertaken that business in France for our firm. But I shall be sure to be back in October, and the money I shall make will be acceptable toward fitting up and furnishing our new home. Because you know, Mottimore, I'm not rich."

We parted with a reciprocating squeeze of the hand, and Charley's bright face haunted me all day with a sort of reminiscense of what might have happened also to me if I hadn't been five and forty, and with a bald spot on the back of my head. I spent an evening with her afterward at the genteel house where she and her mother—a nice bright-eyed little woman, the full-blown rose to correspond with Sophy's budding loveliness—dwelt in the coziest of apartments furnished in dark blue reps, with a turn-up bedstead ingeniously designed as a high-backed sofa, and canaries and geraniums in the windows. It was a pleasant evening, and would have been still pleasanter if Charley and Miss Adriance had not both agreed by mutual consent to put me and the expectant mother-in-law on the same platform of old fogyism, and expect us to talk politics, religion and the last new opera by the shaded gas-light, while they did the Romeo and Juliet business on the balcony. I dare say they enjoyed it, but it was rather embarrassing, you see, to Mamma Adriance and me.

"It's so kind in you to come," said Sophy, with a gentle pressure of the hand when I went away. "I am so glad to welcome Charley's friends."

I felt that I could cheerfully sit through another evening of commonplace chit chat and photograph albums for such a reward as that.

Well, Charley Dresden went away, and as he didn't leave Sophy Adriance in my care, I didn't feel called upon to present myself at the genteel boarding-house where the blue reps and turn-up bedstead made such a feeble attempt at deception, and the canaries sang in the south windows.

I supposed naturally enough that all was going right, until one day I received a note from my old friend, Bullion, the banker, a man of sixty, who wears a wig and spectacles, and counts his income upon the double figures. Bullion was going to be married.

"Of course you'll think it a foolish thing for me to do," wrote Bullion; "but even at sixty a man has not entirely outlived the age of sentiment; and when once you see Sophy Adriance you will forgive any seeming inconsistency on my part."

"Sophy Adriance!" was this the way Charley's blue-eyed fiancee was serving him while he was abroad trying to earn a little money for her sake? My heart rebelled against the fickleness of Woman.

I went straight to the genteel boarding-house. It possible was that I might be misled by a similarity of name, although even that was unlikely.

"Is Miss Adriance at home?" I asked of the slatternly servant girl who answered the bell.

"Lor' no, sir. Miss Sophy's spending a few weeks with a friend at Scarborough," she answered.

That was enough. I went home and inclosed Bullion's letter in another envelope, directing it to poor Charley Dresden's address, Poste Restante, Paris, adding a few lines of my own, wherein I endeavored to mingle consolation and philosophy as aptly as possible.

"It's an ungracious thing for me to do, sending this letter," wrote I, "but believe it to be the part of a true friend to undeceive you as promptly as possible. Bullion is a millionaire; Sophy is but a fallible woman, after all. Be a man, Dresden, and remember that she is not the only woman in the world who would rather be an old man's darling than a young man's slave."

And then I wrote, curtly declining to stand up with old Bullion.

It was but a few days subsequently that the waiter showed an elegantly-dressed young lady into my room at the hotel. I rose in some surprise. Aside from old Aunt Miriam Platt, and my laundress, my lady visitors were few. But the instant she threw up her thick tissue vail I recognized the soft blue eyes and damask-rose cheeks of Sophy Adriance.

"Oh, Mr. Mottimore!" she cried piteously. "I know you won't mind my coming to you, because you seem exactly like a father to me." I winched a little at this. "But I have received such a letter from Charley, and as you've known him a long time, I thought perhaps you could explain it to me. Oh, I have been so wretched! And indeed I don't deserve it!"

She gave me a tear-blotted letter, and then sat down to cry quietly in the corner of the sofa until such a time as I should have finished its perusal. It was a fit mirror of Charley Dresden's impetuous nature, full of bitter reproaches, dark inuendoes, hurling back her troth and hinting gloomily at suicide! When I read it I scarcely wondered at poor Sophy's distress.

"What does he mean, Mr Mottimore," asked Sophy, plaintively, "when he accuses me of selling myself to the highest bidder? Oh, it is so dreadful!"

I folded the letter and looked severely at her.

"Miss Adriance," said I, gravely, "it strikes me you are trying to play a double part here. The affianced brido of Benjamin Bullion ought hardly to hope to retain the allegiance of poor Charles Dresden into the bargain."

"I don't understand you," said Sophy, looking wistfully at me.

"Are you not about to become the wife of Mr. Bullion, the banker?" I asked, sternly.

"Oh, dear, no," said Sophy. "That's mamma!"

"Eh!" gasped I.

"It's mamma," answered Sophy. "She is to be married next week! Didn't you know it?"

I stared straigh before me. Well, I had got myself into a pretty pickle by meddling officiously with affairs that didn't concern me.

"Look here, Miss Adriance," said I, "I will tell you all about it."

So I did. I described old Bullion's letter, my own false deductions therefrom, and the rash deed I had committed in sending the banker's correspondence to Charley Dresden.

"And now," said I, "do you wonder that he is indignant?"

Sophy's face grew radiant.

"But there's no harm done," said she. "No real harm, I mean. Because I have written him a long letter all about mamma and Mr. Bullion, which he must have received almost the next mail after he sent off this cruel, cruel sheet of reproaches. And pray, Mr. Mottimore, don't look so woe-begone," she added, kindly. "Your mistake was quite natural."

Sophy was a true prophet. There was no real harm done. The next mail brought a letter full of entreatics to be pardoned, and a brief, brusque note to me, not in so many words, but in spirit, that I had a great deal better have minded my own business. Which I really think I had.

I stood up with old Ben Bullion and that full blown rose, Sophy's mamma, after all, and when Charles Dresden came home I cut the big wedding cake at his marriage feast. Papa Bullion gave the bride away, and people say that Sophy was the prettiest bride of the season. But it came pretty near being a broken-off affair at one time, and all through my fault. I've since learned to hold my tongue—a lesson none the less valuable for being learned late in life.

Kentucky Maligned.

The Denver Tribune, prompted by an unfriendly spirit toward Kentucky, which is wide-spread among ultra Republican journals of the North and West, says:

"Kentucky lawyers refuse to defend United States officers charged with murdering citizens of that State. Killing in Kentucky is seldom regarded as a crime, or as much of an offense, unless it is done by an outsider or a carpet-bagger."

People who know anything of Kentucky require no vindication of the legal profession of the State, nor of the people, from the invidious criticisms of which the foregoing extract is a sample. The lawyers of Kentucky are about as ready to take a case to defend "United States officers charged with murder" as they are to take a similar case to defend or prosecute any other sort of officers. The declaration of the Tribune that "killing in Kentucky is seldom regarded as a crime or as much of an offense" is the veriest bosh, indicating merely a state of mind at enmity with Kentucky. There is no State in the Union—certainly not Colorado—in which prevails a higher regard for law, or in which there is a more exalted sense of public morality than in this State. Kentuckians are far from being a lawless people. Peace is supreme in our borders, and the uninterrupted courts of the Commonwealth hold with firm hands the scales of justice alike to plaintiff and defendant. The paragraph of the Denver Tribune is but a stereotyed expression of partisan and sectional hate that is wholly inconsistent with the liberal and enlightened spirit of the time.—Louisville News.

Grandpa.

The grandpa iz an individual aged somewhere between 50 and 100 years, and iz a common occurrence in most well-regulated familys.

Next to a healthy mother-in-law, they have more bizness on hand than enny other party in the household.

They are standard authority on all leading topicks, and what they don't know about things that happened 65 years ago, or what will happen for the next 3 years to come, iz a damage for everybody to kno.

Grandpas are not entirely useless; they are handy to hold babies and feed pigs, and are very smart at mending a broken broom handle or putting up the clothes-line on washing days.

I have seen grandpas that churn good, but I konsider it a mighty mean trick to set an old man over 80 years to churning butter.

I am a grandpa myself, but I won't churn for no concern; not if I understand myself.

I am willing to rock the baby while wimmen folks are biling soap; I am reddy to kut rags to work into rag carpets; they can keep me hunting hen's eggs or picking green kurrants; or I will even dip kandles or kore apples for sass, but I won't churn.

I have examined myself on the subject, and will bet a jackknife that Josh Billings won't churn.

Grandpas are poor help at bringing up children; they are full of precept and katekism, but the young ones seem to understand that grandpa minds them a heap more than they mind grandpa.—Josh Billings.

CLUMSY legislation has left Tennessee without any law against horse-stealing, larceny from the person, house or bridge burning, or house-breaking with intent to commit robbery. A STUPID editor who never notices the fashions tries to be smart, and says: "The sweetest things in bonnets is the lady's two-lips." Oh, ignorance, not to know that in the present style of wearing the bonnet, it is farther away from the lady's lips than it is from her feet. Why, a quiet, reserved, timid woman wears her hat away aft like a make-shift rudder; a fashionable woman builds a kind of a platform out of her back hair and hangs her bonnet on the rear of it, and a real stylish, model hired girl carries a pole over her shoulder with the hat slung to the end of it.

One of the too-much-neglected duties which every good citizen owes to his family and to the community in which he lives is to aid as far as he can in supporting his county paper, for that paper can do more to promote the moral, intellectual and material interests of his county than any or all other agencies. Show us a county which liberally supports a good newspaper, and we will show you a county whose people are intelligent, enterprising and prosperous. A good newspaper flourishes only where the people of the county are known abroad for their intelligence, their enterprise and their prosperity in all the pursuits of life. About the best county to move from is one which does not support, or supports but indifferently, its newspaper. About the best county to move into is one which supports liberally its newspaper. Take, for example, the county of Barren—which we name half at random and half for the reason that its newspaper, the Glasgow Times, gives such unmistakable evidences of of the very liberal support it receives—and where will you find a county in the State where the people are more intelligent and prosperous, or which sends abroad more useful men? Every citizen of Barren is proud of his county, and nothing has done more than its excellent newspaper to make it a county of which he may well be proud. The Times, as everybody knows, is one of the liveliest and most enterprising and readable county papers you will find anywhere, and this is due in a great measure to the liberal support it receives at the hands of the good people of Barren, for without that support it could not command the brains by which it is so admirably conducted and which have made it what it is. This same thing might, as truthfully, be said of a dozen other counties and a dozen other newspapers in Kentucky, but we can say it more confidently of the Times for the simple reason that it publishes each week a long list of new cash paying subscribers and an array of new advertisements, which constitute ample and unmistakable evidence of its prosperity and the high estimate in which it is held by the enterprise, the industry and the intelligence of Barren. Support your county paper, and it will help very materially to support you. Few Kentuckians can truthfully say that they have no county paper worthy of a liberal support, for, taking it all in all, the country press of Kentucky is in every respect fully equal to that of any other State in the Union.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

St. Louis, Mo., May 25, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

We have had pretty spring weather all the week, and everybody with us seems happy, except the Call Board operators, who have to pocket a loss of 35@40c. per bushel on wheat, and from 7@8c. per bushel on corn. There never was better growing weather than we have had this week, and should nothing occur to injure the growing crops, it is altogether probable we will have a larger crop of wheat than was ever heard of before. The report comes from all quarters, the wheat never looked better, and acreage double, and in many places three times, that of any previous year. In many places the early planted corn has suffered from damp weather, still the prospect is encouraging for a large crop. Fruit will undoubtedly be more than an average yield.

But the greatest crop of the season, that is already delivered and cared for, is the interesting crop of babies in our midst. Notwithstanding, many pions and well-to-do people, on account of hard times, and money being a hard thing for poor people to borrow, had concluded this not a good year for babies. Mrs. Dean, the wife of a poor, one-armed laborer living at 811 Biddle street, on Sunday last presented her loving companion with four bouncing babies, three of which were alive and kicking, and are the same to-day, the other being dead when born. Now, who says this is not a good year for babies? The youngsters weighed twenty pounds on Sunday last. Catharine Elizabeth Dean has gained about half a pound per day since, and Thomas Dean and Edward James Dean have grown almost an inch per day, and they all seem healthy and happy. Mrs. Dean is doing well, and Mr. D. is the happiest man this side of the big river. Thousands of persons have visited the newcomers daily, and Mr. and Mrs. Dean have more dollars and cents to-day in their coffers than they ever had before, as almost every visitor left with them from fifty cents to five dollars for the little ones. Members of the Exchange, also, made up a nice purse on Tuesday, and presented same as a margin, declaring that contracts on behalf of the new members shall not be forfeited. It is also stated by the highest and most unimpeachable authority that all this is brought about without the aid of blue glass, or any of the new fangled inventions of the day. We are of the opinion that this is a larger crop of babies than can be produced by a single pair in one month, be they from the valley of Texas or the blue-grass regions of Kentucky; and we say in conclusion—Three cheers for Anthony Dean, the father! three cheers for Mary Dean, the mother! and may peace and good will attend the trio of little Deans!"

Having thus spoken of the joy and gladness surrounding one household, we may be pardoned for alluding to another pair, residing not far from the aforesaid Deans, but whose domicil about the same hour of the day was the scene of the very opposite of the other or a dwelling of sadness and gloom.

At 2,703 Chouteau avenue resides Henry Bostelman and lady, whose house contained but themselves and an only daughter, Louise, who was her mother's treasure and the idol of her father's heart. The daughter was born and brought up in St. Louis, and was a graduate of the High School. After which "mamma and papa" took her to Europe, and spent nearly two years with her on the continent. They had money, and Louise was their only child, and they lavished wealth and love to fit and prepare her for the upper circles of society. They returned last fall, their daughter having graduated here and having had an insight into the ways and manners of the very best society in the old country; and still she was only 19 years of age. The parents were indeed proud of her and her accomplishments. It was not long, however, after her return when she made the acquaintance of Herman Casper, a good looking, genteel carpenter of unblemished reputation, who lived in the neighborhood. Their acquaintance ripened into friendship, and culminated in love. About the 1st of December last they exchanged rings, and Louise informed her parents that she and Herman were betrothed. This did not suit the ideas of the old gentleman, who was quite wealthy, and he strenuously objected. Herman was poor, and had nothing but his stout hands and heart as a capital on which to do business. So strong was the objection on the part of the parents of Louise to the proposed union, that she left home, a few days after her announcement of betrothal, and went to live with some relatives in another part of the city. Herman talked with her, and sensibly enough told her that he thought it hardly right that they should marry against her parents' wishes, and proposed that they wait awhile, and, possibly, after a while, the hard and obdurate hearts would soften, and they would yet be happy. She returned home, only to pine away. Doctors were sent for, but she said she was not sick, but weary. She said life to her, without the smiles of Herman Casper, was a dreary waste. She was particularly gloomy on Sunday morning. In the afternoon of the same day her parents proposed to her to dress herself and they would all take a walk to the park, and possibly she would feel better. She repaired to her room, dressed herself in her very best, came down stairs, went out on the back porch and took a seat. Her parents were inside arranging for the walk. They came out in a few moments thereafter, expecting to find the idol of their heart cheered up. But, to their great surprise, she was not there. They called her; no answer came. Suspicion was soon awakened, and the father at once went to the well, in the back yard, which is about 25 feet deep, looked in, only to find the lifeless form of his dear child, cold in the embrace of death. Hooks were at once procured, and the casket in which once dwelt the loving spirit of Louise Bostelman was drawn to the surface, life having just departed. The feelings of her many friends, and particularly those of her parents, can be better imagined than described. My pen bolts at the very thought of a description, and I will not attempt it. She loved well, but acted unwisely.

About dark, or shortly thereafter, on Sunday last, a young lady of moderate circumstances and good connections, from the neighborhood of North Eighth street, bought a "step-off bridge ticket," and made an attempt at finding a resting place in the middle of the Father of Waters. She was, however, caught by a policeman just as she was about to make "the fatal leap." She is now in the custody of her friends, but still declares she is weary of life, and is determined to go to that other country by the shortest road possible.

Miss Fannie Robinson, a good looking young lady of ebony color, got it into her head a few days since that one Thomas Drew, of same color, who for some time past has been her heart's content, was dividing his affections with another egal. This was too much for Fannie, and on yesterday she made an attempt at ending life's woes by shooting herself through the body with a Derringer. She was alive last night, and, should she recover, she my probably conclude that white man is very unsartin, and the kullud man more so.

William Palm, an old, highly respected and wealthy citizen, died a short time since in Italy, and his will was admitted to probate day before yesterday. He leaves over ten thousand dollars to found a Polytechnic University, an institution of learning in this city. We mention this to show that learned men, wealthy men, and smart men generally, believe in teaching the young idea "how to shoot;" and we think "Colonel Henderson" ought to modify his views in this particular somewhat, as we are supporting him.

Telegraphic advices this morning report great destitution in California from the drought, and in many places it is said the stock, and even the birds, are dying for the want of water. Yours truly, Bob A. Long.

STATE NEWS.

—The fruit is all killed in Caldwell County.

—The growing wheat and rye is already going to head, and promises to yield an unusual large crop.—Cynthiana News.

—The wheat crop in Henderson and contiguous counties, is reported to us as in splendid condition, giving fine promise of unusual yield.

—Hon. Proctor Knott is a candidate for United States Senator, and his friends are making an active canvass of his claims in various portions of the State.—Mt. Sterling Sentinel.

—Princeton Banner: The outlook for wheat in Crittenden is very fair. Many farmers told us Monday last at Marion that the area was an average one, and at present the wheat was very promising.

—Maysville Bulletin: When chimneys are only a foot above the roof, when the roof is tin, the sulphur from the chimney soon burns out the tin. By building the chimney five or more feet above the roof it draws much better, and the sulphur from the cimney is carried away and the roof left uninjured.

—Whoever doubts that Franklin is a blue-grass county can call at the Yeoman office and be relieved on that score by seeing blue-grass cut from the farm of Mr. M. H. Cromwell, on the Versailles road. It is only forty-two inches long now, but there is no telling what it will be when it comes to maturity.—Frankfort Yeoman.

—A story which bears the stamp of improbability, but which is related by a reliable party, has been told us. It was that on breaking open a solid cake of ice, put up in December last, a fishing worm was found in the center, frozen solid. On pouring water upon it, signs of life were exhibited, and on being placed in the sunshine it thawed out and crawled away, evidently glad to be released from its icy prison.—Flemingsburg Rambler.

—Maysville Eagle: Hon. M. P. Marshal, long known as one of the most scientific and prosperous farmers of Mason County, has a field of wheat and barley, in either of which can be found, without searching, fifty-eight or sixty-two stools growing from one grain, of uniform growth, which shows the high state of cultivation. Mr. Powers, with untiring energy, worked the earth up before the seed were drilled, and if the weather should be favorable at the time the heads burst out, to match the stools below, there will not be more room inside the inclosure than the grain will require to ripen to an advantage.

—Interior Journal: Some tan-bark men at work in the lower end of Casey discovered, a few days since, the skeleton of a man, lying in a thick portion of the woods, with a bullet hole through his skull. Nearly all of the flesh was off the bones, and the clothing, which was of good quality, was very much scattered. A small portion of the hair was found, which, from its appearance, indicates that the man had passed the meridian of life. No clue whatever that could lead to the identification has been discovered, though it is the impression of the people of that vicinity that it is the body of an United States Marshal. This is hardly plausible, however, as we have heard of none that is missing. There is no doubt that a foul murder has been perpetrated, and is only a question of time till it will be brought out, and the fiend who did his work so well will yet be discovered.

Gov. Rice, of Massachusetts, has very properly sent back the resurrected prohibitory liquor act of the State Senate with his objections; and the prohibitionists in that body have been unable to muster sufficient strength to pass it over his veto. Of course there will be a howl of vituperation along the whole prohibitory line; but, as Gov. Rice is used to it, he probably won't mind. When he was first nominated, he was courteously spoken of by that wing of the Massachusetts Republican party as the free-rum candidate, and his election was bewailed as a free-rum victory. The present license law of Massachusetts has not yet had a fair trial; it has been in operation only a little over a year. In that time it has worked well; certainly a great deal better than the old prohibitory law which was absolutely worthless except as a convenient instrument of wreaking private spites, and of blackmailing. It is as stringent as a license law could well be made, contains the local option principle, and is practically more prohibitive to-day as to two-thirds of the cities and towns of the Commonwealth than the law which it replaced. Since its passage drunkenness has perceptibly decreased. The majority of the General Court dishonestly attempted to engraft upon it some of the worst features of the old system, and Gov. Rice has done exactly right in blocking their game.—N. Y. Sun.

All persons who gave their notes at the sale of Paschal Conner, deceased, will pay the same to the Northern Bank, in Covington, by the 12th of June.

Horses! Horses!

WM. CROPPER has reduced the price for services of Eclipse Clay to $10 to insure. The following is the description and pedigree of this celebrated animal:

ECLIPSE CLAY is a deep blood bay, with black points, foaled May 6th, 1870, and is full 16 hands high. He won the first race he ever started in, making a record of 2:42 in the fourth heat, on a very slow half-mile track. He could trot heats in 2:35 and better last season, when in condition. He is square-gaited and level-headed, good tempered and has a good constitution.

ECLIPSE CLAY was sired by Cassius M. Clay, Jr., (Strader's) with whose pedigree the people of this community are well acquainted; first dam, Lady Hackaday, by Trimble's Eclipse; second dam by Brown's Bellfounder. Lady Hackaday has proven herself a mother of trotters, being the mother of Ladye, Black Crook and Salvador, all full brothers to ECLIPSE CLAY, who could all trot down in the thirties with very little training. 33-tf

J. FROST, Esq., sojourned in this section Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights of last week. His visit was marked with no destruction of vegitation.

WE have heard it stated that there will be a fish-fry at Big Bone on the second Saturday in June. The candidates for Senator and Representative will speak there that day.

ALL quiet on the turnpike this week—nobody there to make a fuss. Work has suspended and the hands dispersed. It will be but a few days, though, before the work will be renewed.

WHILE in Hebron, Saturday, we noticed that Davis Bros. are driving a brisk business. The life in their business during these dull and oppressive times is the result of the business turn of the members of the firm, and the immense stock of well selected articles they keep for sale.

MR. ORRIN PERCIVAL, sen., after a protracted suffering with cancer in the stomache, died at his residence, about 2½ miles from Walton, in Kenton County, at 12:30 Sunday night. Mr. Percival was in his 70th year, and the father of 13 children, six of whom are now living. He was a worthy citizen, and his death casts a gloom over the entire community of which he was a valuable member.

Personal Mention.

C. W. SAXTON sojourns in Burlington.

MRS. NETTIE PHIPPS started, Tuesday, for her home in Nebraska.

DR. L. C. COWEN, of Rabbit Hash, was in town Saturday and Sunday.

MISS JENNIE CAMPBELL, of Liberty Station, is visiting relatives at this place.

MRS. F. P. MARTIN, of Xenia, Ohio, visited Mrs. L. H. Dills at this place, last week.

MR. THOMAS ROUSE, of Crittenden, Grant County, called upon us Thursday. He and his family were visiting relatives in town.

REV. S. P. CARLTON, Universalist, commenced a series of services at this place, on the afternoon of the 18th inst., and continued till Sunday evening, when the meeting closed, having been largely attended during its progress. On Sunday the congregation was very large, the Methodist church being crowded. After morning services, Sunday, Mr. O. P. Conner and wife, who joined on Saturday, and Wm. M. Conner, who joined some time since, were baptized. In the afternoon of the same day, the church celebrated the Lord's Supper. On Thursday evening Mr. Carlton delivered a very interesting temperance lecture, which was listened to by quite a large crowd.

Last Saturday, Dr. S. S. Scott, and Capt. L. C. Norman, candidates for Senator, and Esq. Reuben Conner and Mr. G. V. Rouse, candidates for County Representative, met at Hebron for the purpose of treating the people of that locality to a little oratory. Capt. Geo. W. Terrill was to have been present, but, being sick, did not put in an appearance. By the time the hour for speaking arrived, the crowd numbered some one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five men, who, procession-like, escorted the four candidates to a locust grove on a hillside immediately below Hebron, where the men brushed their pants and took a seat on the blue-grass, forming a ring in which the candidates did the speaking.

Squire Conner was the first to enter the ring for a speech. He took up each question upon which an issue is made, and gave his views regarding them in a brief and plain manner.

The Squire was followed by Mr. Rouse. During his speech, quite a lively discussion regarding Mr. Conner's position on the road law was indulged in by the two aspirants. Mr. Rouse, as Mr. Conner claims, having misunderstood the position taken by him on that subject at some place where they had met on the stump. There is but one point in Mr. Rouse's speech we will refer to, and this we do because he claims that we have done him an injustice heretofore. Mr. Rouse, in his speech Saturday, said he is willing that every bona fide house-keeper be allowed one dog, all over that number to be subjected to a sufficient tax. When asked what he would consider a sufficient tax, he replied, probably a dollar would be sufficient, the money raised by the tax to be held as a sheep fund, for paying for sheep killed by dogs.

In regard to other matters, the positions of the respective candidates are generally known, and it is not necessary to say more about them.

The candidates for Senator had quite a heated discussion. Normal schools, the Criminal Court and the State's stock in turnpikes furnished the material for the fight between these gentlemen.

During Capt. Norman's speech he called attention to the article in the Commonwealth of last week, charging the writer thereof with willfully misrepresenting him, and while talking about the article he was thoroughly aroused, and seemingly more excited than any present had ever before seen him.

By the time the speaking was concluded, political excitement was at fever heat, and when the crowd had returned to Hebron, small groups of men were to be seen in every direction discussing the merits of the candidates to whom they had been listening during the afternoon. To ascertain who a man is for in that district, it is only necessary to ask him who will carry the district on the 20th of June; his answer will settle the question as to his favorite. The crowd that attended the speaking was very orderly, and everything passed off quietly, save the political squabbles indulged in by the candidates.

Wedding in High Life.

Walton and vicinity have been in quite a state of excitement, for the last week over the approaching wedding of Miss Riskley Brittenhelm, of Walton, and Mr. Fred Shafen, of Cincinnati, the happy event of which occurred Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock, at the Baptist church, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion.

At the appointed time a death-like silence, caused by the appearance of the attendants up the aisle, instantly pervaded the church. The first to enter the church was Mr. George Ransler and Miss Emma Fry; then Mr. Woodarry and Miss Barbara Brittenhelm, (sister of the bride), followed by the bride and groom. The bride and bride's maids were dressed in steel colored silk—the bride's toilet was elegant, her hat was the same as her dress and elegantly trimed in white. The bride's-maids' hats were white trimmed in the prevailing color, teal. The groom and his attendants were dark pants and coats, white vests, steel colored kids and button-hole bouquets of teal and white flowers.

The Rev. J. H. Beasley, with a brief and beautiful ceremony, lost no time after their appearance in the church in making them one; after which they returned to the bride's father's with a selected host of invited friends and received the congratulations, after which our attention was turned to the dining-room, where the tables groaned under the weight of many delicacies with which it was laden. This seemed to be the principal feature of the occasion tosome, judging from the way things disappeared around them. Mr. Mann seemed to be distressed for fear he would have to stand up, as he did not get to eat at the first table, but as luck would have it he was so fortunate as to have a chair placed for him. He saw the wine was splendid, to say nothing of the spiked lemonade.

The bridal presents were numerous and elegant. The groom's present to the bride was an elegant watch and chain, a set of spoons from Mr. Davis, of Cincinnati, a handsome caster from one of the bride's cousins, an elegant set of knives and forks, and spoons from the bride's parents, and other splendid and costly presents too numerous to mention.

Among the most noted guests were Miss Rena Northcutt, Mr. Lathrop and family, of Newport; Mrs. W. P. Holton, Mrs. L. A. Bruce, daughter and niece, Miss Bettie Clarkson, of Union; Mr. Isaac Mann, of Cincinnati; Dr. L. R. Flinell and W. M. Rogers, of Verona; J. J. Noofman and wife, Samuel Hind and family, W. L. Norman and family, Miss Cynthia Jones, and Prof. J. N. Stewart and Miss Ella Richey, C. Black Clarkson, Rev. L. Johnson and daughter, Mrs. Fry and daughter, and Miss Lillie Wait; but we did not notice Capt. Stansifer, of Union. If he was there he surely hid his light under a bushel, for we did not see him shining around. Also a great many friends and relations of the bride and groom from Covington and Cincinnati that we were not acquainted with. Every one enjoyed themselves and had a gloriously good time, and only wish they had another wedding to go to equally as splendid.

A FRIEND OF THE BRIDE.

A Series of Calls.

The members of the County Democratic Executive Committee are requested to meet in Burlington on the 4th day of June, 1877, (County Court day), for the purpose of transacting such business as may legitimately come before the Committee. A SAYRE, Chairman.

WE respectfully invite and earnestly request the head of each family in Boone County who has not yet subscribed for the RECORDER, be he Democrat or Republican, to be in Burlington next Monday between the hours of 8 a. m. and 5. p. m., and subscribe, paying the cash in advance.

THE Democrats of Boone Co., Ky., are requested to meet at the Court-house in Burlington on Saturday, June 4th, 1877, at one o'clock p. m., to take such steps as the majority of said party may deem necessary in regard to the action of their Executive Committee in providing both a primary election and a convention to select a candidate of said party for the Legislature at the ensuing election in August.

By request we publish the above call.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

WE the undersigned earnestly request that all those in favor of the stock law meet at Burlington on the first Monday in June to take some measures toward the instructing of candidates in regard to the prescription of the stock law.

E. CROPPER, OMER KIRTLEY,
CY COWEN, JNO. P. CRAIG,
O. P. CONNER, T. C. S. RYLE,
WM. M. CONNER,
And many others.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

I notice in the columns of your paper of recent date some dissatisfaction in regard to the manner of choosing a candidate to represent the county of Boone in the next Legislature. Would suggest that the County Committee order, on the day of the primary election, a poll be opened for a first and second choice.

The candidate who receives the least number of votes as first choice be dropped from the race, and the candidate who receives the greatest number of votes as first and second choice be declared candidate of the Democratic party to represent the county in the next Legislature. V. FINNELL and others.

Tribute of Respect.

At a regular meeting of Boone Union Lodge No. 304, Free and Accepted Masons, held in the Masonic Hall in Union, Boone County, Ky., April 21st, 1877, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased God to take from our midst our beloved and respected brother, Harrison Booth, one of the oldest Masons in our county, and one of the first members of our Lodge, who died, April 2d, 1877. Therefore be it

Resolved, That in his death we mourn the loss of a true brother, a good citizen, and an upright man. One who was faithful to his family, his friends, and his Craft. Who, in this living, built to himself a monument in our esteem, which shall live ever, though he be dead.

Resolved, That this action of the Lodge be spread at large upon its records, and a page of the same be devoted to that purpose.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these proceedings to the family of the deceased, and to the Commonwealth and Boone County RECORDER for publication.

Farewell, Friend "Axiom."

BURLINGTON, KY., May 28, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

In your issue of last week, "Axiom" again came to the front, this time declining a newspaper controversy and admitting all the essential points of our article, but still holding on tenaciously to his second choice scheme for controlling the convention.

With regard to a newspaper controversy, we are, if anything, less anxious for one than he, and certainly less able to conduct one; but, believing that his ventilation of the committee's action needed a little looking into, to see that none but pure air had been admitted, we endeavored to peer through the woof of his argument, and to point out such threads as seemed to us to be of unsound fiber or improperly used; and our success was greater than we had reason to expect.

"Axiom" is perfectly willing to admit of the convention, and will even assert its high order of justice, provided the voters be allowed to express their second choice at the polls. In other words, the 80 men voting for A at the primary election (taking the figures previously used B's 60, and C's 20, must all cast a second choice ballot, and each one, by that act, say to A, B or C, "I don't want you if I can help myself, but if I can't have my choice, I am going to try to grin and bear the infliction of you" (A, B or C). It is a highly varied repetition of the fable of the boy and the frogs—it's a pastime for the voters, but rough on the candidates.

Again. He makes no opposition to the dropping of the hindmost candidate in convention ballots, but tacitly admits it to be a necessity in order to secure a majority nomination. Now, let us suppose that the first ballot has been taken in the convention, and that A, being the hindmost candidate, has been dropped out of the race—is no longer a candidate. A second ballot would be ordered, and, perforce, it must be taken pro rata to the second choice vote taken under "Axioms's" suggestion. Now, his it escaped his observation that it is possible that A has received the largest second choice vote at the primary election? But A is out of the race. He is no longer a candidate. He can not, in justice to himself, longer be a candidate, for he received the lowest number of first choice votes, and has given way to B and C, who have received a majority of first choice votes. What is to be done? Shall the will of the people be frustrated, and A be forced back into the race, utterly ignoring the will of a majority of first choice votes, and A be declared the nominee, because a majority of the people has said unto him, "We don't want you, but, if we can't have our man, you are better than nothing!"? We think not, and believe friend "Axiom" will agree with us. It seems to us that A would feel as if he were being sent to the Legislature as a second class man, and the voters as if Boone were a second class county.

But what will we do about it? There is, to our notion, no remedy but to discard the second choice fallacy, and to depend upon the wisdom of the policy laid down by the committee in calling the convention; where every voter at the primary says to his candidate, though his delegate, "I want you," and the majority of the "I want you's" declare the nominee.

Friend "Axiom," we believe you are laboring to secure the most beneficent results to the people of the county, but that you have mistaken the means. That single barreled vox populi gun of yours—matters too badly to effect the end desired; and when you add that second choice half barrel, it becomes, not only a barrel-and-a-half gun, but perfectly unmanageable. And now, hoping that you will see the error of your way, settle down into the harness and not try to kick over the traces, we would, in the language of Byron, say unto you:

"Fare the well, and if forever,
Still, forever fare thee well!" PAX.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

There was a decided lack of enthusiasm in the grain trade last week. In wheat the offerings were trivial and buyers were not anxious. Prices remained about the same. There was a fine demand for corn which sold at 47 cents in bulk. Oats brought 46@48 cents.

The tobacco market was dull, although there was a good demand for useful kinds, but low grade leaf was quiet, prices remaining about the same as our last quotation.

Eggs range in price from 8 to 8½ cents per dozen wholesale. Butter from 8 to 15 cents.

New potatoes from $4 75 to $5.

Strawberries are coming in brisk at from $7 to $10 a stand.

Spring chickens $2 75 per dozen. Hens $3 per dozen. Pork has ranged from 4 to 5 cents. Plenty of hogs come in last week and the market is about as reported.

Best beef commanded from $4 50 to $5; common $2 50@$4. Plenty of stock arrived.

Lambs are quoted at 5@6 cents; old sheep at 3@5 cents. There was a slight falling off in arrivals this week.

There were only about 25 horses, and the same number of mules sold at auction last week. Horses sold from $25 to $125; mules from $50 to $85. More could have been sold but the arrivals were slack. L.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Waterloo.

Capt. L. C. Norman, candidate for the State Senate, paid us a visit last week. The Captain, besides being a thoroughly well informed gentleman, is quite handsome. I dare say he made an indelible impression on Aylor's porch floor with the heel of his big boot. Mr. G. V. Rouse, aspirant for the office of County Representative, called on the people of Waterloo. We want the present laws purged of all their iniquities and made perfect, and all the laws enacted that will be essential to the Commonwealth. Go in, gentlemen; we will give you our hearty support.

Mrs. Rumor told me that M. J. Corbin, of Bellevue, is preparing to desert his bachelor fraternity, and to have his name registered on the list of Benedicts.

Leonard Clore, our ambidextrous blacksmith, realized the handsome sum of forty cents for his work in the shop last week.

Harvey Marshall proposes to pasture all stock running at large in his yard gratis. He is in favor of the stock law, and can not bear to see the law violated. He has, therefore, reduced his yard fence from four to two rails.

J. Tom Marshall planted a whole acre of corn. [Has the ground been measured? If so, who is going to cultivate it?—ED.]

Born—To the wife of Moses Rice, jr., a daughter. Mose is happy. UNO.

Walton.

The ball of the 23d was a pleasant success, only some were disappointed in not seeing Sheriff Sleet and his bride, and Mr. and Mrs. John R. Johnson as it had been concluded that they were to be in attendance at the ball.

Great preparations are going on among the school children for their examination which is to come off in June. Quite a display of knowledge and learning will then be exhibited for the benefit of us ignorant ones.

These delightful evenings have been taken advantage of by several pairs of lovers, who slowly stroll along, wholly ignoring the rest of m poor mortals, and entering only for each other. How envious those beauless maidens and sweetheartless bachelors feel as they stand and gaze on the happiness of these lovers.

Such a grand exhibition of new hats and dresses as there was at the Baptist church on last Sunday; one gazing upon the congregation from above would have thought it a flower-garden of brilliant hues. All the young ladies were looking their prettiest and best. We saw several young men standing off in awe-struck admiration, afraid to approach nearer lest their hearts would no longer rest quietly in their keeping, and it is well they kept away, unless their hearts are adamantine.

Messrs. Isaac Mann and Perry Moxley, former citizens of Walton, but now residents of Covington, were out on Sunday, visiting friends.

Mr. Matson, we believe, has declined making the race for the Legislature, and transferred his influence and that of his supporters to the popular candidate of the ladies, Mr. Reuben Conner.

Mr. John Vanliewen and family have removed to Independence. Mr. Vanliewan has purchased the omnibus line between that place and Covington. NEMO.

Florence.

The many friends of Mrs. Emily Carpenter will be glad to learn she has so far recovered as to be able to ride out. Dr. Sayre, her physician, has been unremitting in his attention and her recovery makes him the proudest man in the community.

There was a picnic at St. John's Orphan Asylum, last week, and about half way between this place and Covington it was a good day for brewers, doctors and carriage makers, as a great many got overjoyful and rows, broken buggies and broken heads were the result.

Florence is getting to be quite a lively shipping point. Mr. Felix Moses shipped over 2,000 pounds of wool this week.

Mr. Jim Henderson was in town Saturday, and delivered his lecture on the "Old Dispensation." We did not have the pleasure of hearing the speech, but was informed he took strong grounds against dog tax, road tax, the stock law and all other newfangled notions. He thinks the age in which we live is altogether too fast, and counsels moderation and a speedy return to the customs of Adam and Eve, when a fig leaf was garment sufficient to protect one from the summer's sun and winter's storm. Bob Willis, Jeff Utz, Jerry Weaver, Bluf Cook, Geo. Huey and others, warm friends of Mr. H. were in town Monday. Probably they were mistaken in the day appointed for the speech.

Dink Rice met with quite an accident last Saturday. About two miles below here his horse got frightened and ran off, throwing Dink and a young lady that was with him, out, but, fortunately, hurting neither of them. The buggy was badly wrecked.

The farmers hereabouts are complaining of the cut worms, potato bugs and drouth.

Rev. Father Bent, the energetic pastor of the Catholic Church here, is going to be removed to Newport. His parishoners and the people generally are sorry to part with him.

It was our good fortune to attend the wedding of Sheriff G. W. Sleet and Miss Mollie Franks, at the residence of the bride's father near Zion Station, in Grant County, on Tuesday of last week. The attendants on the occasion were Mr. Paddy Johnson and Miss Cena Powers, and Rev. Lafe Johnson being the minister who united the "two hearts that beat as one, two souls that have but one thought." After the ceremony the bride and groom, accompanied by their attendants and several friends went to Mr. Barnett Franks, a brother-in-law of the groom, where the crowd dined upon all the delicacies the season affords. After partaking of the splendid dinner the crowd renewed its journey toward the home of the groom's mother. On the way some of the horses attached to buggies became frightened at the cars on the Southern Railroad, and one lady jumped from her buggy, but fortunately no one was hurt or conveyances damaged. By the time we arrived at Mrs. Sleet's, the crowd had been considerably increased and was welcomed by several of George's friends who arrived before the bridal party. At Mrs. Sleet's the company feasted upon every thing an occasion of the kind could demand, and willing hand could prepare.

Wednesday morning six couple (we being one of the dozen) of the crowd that assembled at Mrs. Sleet's attended the wedding of Mr. Paddy Johnson and Miss Fanny Vest. The attendants were Mr. Omer Cleek and Miss Mollie Hume, Mr. Robt. Powers and Miss Nevie Sessman, Rev. L. Johnson officiating. After the wedding the guests repaired to Mr. Samuel Johnsons, where the happy couple were given a splendid reception, no pains being spared to make all present enjoy themselves. That night there was a grand party at Walton, which was largely attended and greatly enjoyed by all present.

We noticed quite a number of old bachelors in that section, and they are all afflicted with a desire to become somebody's darling. We expect, ere long, to hear of a wedding epidemic up there.

Pronouncing both wedding occasions enjoyable to the highest degree, we subscribe ourself an ATTENDANT.

Petersburg.

That troublesome old female, Miss Betsy Pearl, is off the hooks at last. She has gone to Ft. Smith, Arkansas, where she will attend to the transfer business across the Arkansas River at that city.

Last Wednesday Ulrich Bruner, a citizen of this place, was seized with a sudden and violent cough, and, in the spasmodic effort to clear his throat, ruptured a blood vessel in the lungs or throat, and bled to death in a very few moments. He has been a resident of Petersburg for a long time, and leaves a widow, with two children of perhaps twelve and fourteen years' age.

Mr. Joseph Mahan lost a child last Friday, and another of his children is very sick. Whooping-cough is the trouble, and it has been fatal in three or more instances since its appearance here this spring.

Capt. A. M. Hyatt and family left this city last Wednesday morning for Indianapolis. This move throws another widower on the cold charities of the world, with a fair prospect of his being coerced into Porter's society.

John Kinney, of Hawkinsville suburbs, took this town by surprise, last Sunday morning, by taking Miss Josephine Motherhead into a matrimonial partnership with himself. It was a very quiet affair indeed. Bro. Bristow officiated, and the wedding was at the residence of Mr. D. C. Alcorn, whose wife is a sister of the new bride. The happy couple have returned to the residence of Mr. Ben R. Gaines, where they have both found a home for some time past.

Our new Municipal Board held their first meeting one evening last week, compared their new hats, elected Solon Early Chairman (told you so), J. E. Terrill Secretary, and R. D. Carter Treasurer. We envy Mr. Carter his lucrative position. It might be well to add (if it were true) that of the whole of the new Board, only the above named three gentlemen were present, and hence their popularity; but as one of them (Dr. Terrill) was absent, we will not insinuate. No other business was transacted, and the Board adjourned.

Before his Honor L. A. Loder and a jury of six men, our high Constable arraigned one Geo. Theetge last week, on a charge of assault and battery upon Allen Cox, aged 12 years or thereabouts, by whipping with a switch and gently remonstrating with him with a No. 12 boot. The testimony sustained the charge, and he was mulcted in the sum of $1 and costs. First blood for Esquire Loder.

A trade in pork, a few Sundays ago, between a new and lending Deacon and an outsider, has been a fruitful topic of conversation and an inexhaustible fund of amusement to the liver keepers in whose society the aforesaid meeting-house dignitary and official is most frequently to be found.

You better stop dat prancin';
You's powerful fond of dancin',
But I'll bet my yeahs advancin'
Dat I'll cure you ob yoh shines.

Look heah, mule! Better min' ont—
Fust t'ing you know you'll fin' ont
How quick I'll wear dis line out
On your ugly, stubborn back.
You needn't try to steal up,
An' lift that precious heel up;
You's got to plow dis fiel' up.
You hns, sah, for a fac'.

Dar, dat's de'way to do it!
He's comin' right down to it!
Jes watch him plowin' troo it!
Dis nigger ain't no fool.
Some folks dey would a beat him—
Now, dat would only heat him—
I know jes how to treat him:
You mus' reason wid a mule.

He minds me like a nigger,
If he was only bigger.
He'd fotch a mighty figger,
He would, I tell you! Yes, sah!
See how he keeps a clickin'!
He's as gentle as a chicken,
An' neber thinks o' kickin'—
Whoa, dar! Nebuchadnezza!

An Indian Lover's Revenge.

The Victoria Colonist furnishes the following account of an Indian lover's wooing and subsequent murder of his inamorata: "A savage belonging to one of the tribes near Barclay Sound, on the west coast of Vancouver Island, became enamoured of an Indian woman, recently, but paid his addresses in vain. Her friends objected to the match, because the number of blankets cast at her feet was deemed insufficient to secure her affection. The Indian hunted, fished and stole to procure the number of blankets the maiden had set as the price of her charms. But as often as he reached the fixed number, as often did the fickle dusky one advance the figure, till at length the savage gave up the struggle in despair, and sought her love no more. His affection, in fact, seems to have turned to hate, for, meeting her in the bush near the village about a month ago he set upon her with a knife, with which he killed her. He then cut off the head, cut off the arms and legs, and mutilated the body, scattering the limbs and pieces through the woods. The murderer openly defies punishment, and glories in the bloody deed."

Failures Among Farmers.

During the past yast year there have been many failures among farmers. I carefully investigated several cases which came to my personal knowledge, and in every instance found the cause of failure to have been speculation. Most of them were dabblers in stock. Perhaps they bought a few hogs or cattle to make up a car-load, and realizing a few dollars above cost, they launched out. In all cases, purchases for future delivery were made, and, without exception, when the stock was delivered, the market declined. It is only a question of time how soon an ordinary farmer "busts up" when he engages in speculation of this kind. I have not heard of a single instance where a farmer who attended to his legitimate business was forced to make an assignment.—Chicago Tribune.

Practical Advice About the Putting Away of Woolens.

It is well worth the trouble to have this thing of putting away woolens rightly done. We do not believe in using tobacco for the purpose, for we have known carpets being greatly injured by moths when a perfect line of tobacco leaves was placed around the edge for protection. A line of salt round the edge is better, and a good sweeping now and then is the best preventive for the rest. Persian insect powder, too, is very efficient. If carpets are raised and well beaten at the proper season of the year, that is during the spring house-cleaning, there will be little danger of moths. But blankets and woolen clothing laid away through the summer are apt to show the depredations of the millers and the feasts of the moths in the fall. If the millers have left no eggs in the woolens, anything that will keep them away is all that is required; linen, a box closely pasted up, or even a newspaper closely pinned around the articles. But the mischief is done before the articles are put up, and if we fail to dislodge the miller's eggs, we must apply some odor strong enough to kill the moths as they come from the eggs. Brush the articles briskly with a whisk broom, then do up with camphor or black pepper in a linen cloth or newspaper. The old-fashioned way to preserve woolens was to keep a large whisky hogshead for the express purpose, and use it for the same purpose year after year. It will hold the blankets and all the woolens of an ordinary family. It should be kept in a dark, cool place, and well fastened up. It should not be washed, but merely wiped dry before being used. The odor of the whisky is the preserving quality, and the idea is not a bad one.

Hard Times in the Silver State.

The shadow of hard times seems to be slowly creeping over to Comstock, and the man who stands in the sunshine to-day may be under the cloud to-morrow. Hundreds of miners who have been out of employment for months go about, willing to perform any kind of labor for anything in the shape of money. A few months ago they were striving to see their wives and children presentably clothed and supplied with the little luxuries of life. To-day they think only of keeping them fed. They have no longer credit at the grocers, and the butcher will not furnish them meat without the ready cash. Scores of these men are walking the streets aimlessly, or lingering about the mines, begging for work. A miner falls down a shaft and is dashed to pieces. A hundred rush to fill the place, content to have their faces fanned by the ill wind that has blown him into eternity. They stand about the gaming tables, watching the ebb and flow of other people's fortunes. A man with a dollar in his pocket is deliberating whether to buy flour for his family, or put the money on the board and double it. He pushes it over on a card, and sees it make its way into the dealer's till. Then he walks away with teeth tightly clinched. You may see such sights nightly at any of the gambling houses. Strong, able-bodied men call daily at the dwellings of citizens, asking for food or the chances of a night's lodging. The funds of the Relief Committee are exhausted.—Virginia City Chronicle.

A Windfall.

In December last an old and eccentric man, formerly a citizen of Mercer County, in this State, was found dead in his room at Port Byron, Illinois. The deceased left Kentucky in 1840 for the far West to seek his fortune. His relations heard from him occasionally until the last twelve or fifteen years, since which time they have supposed him dead. He was supposed by the citizens of Port Byron, where he has resided for the last twenty years, to be comparatively a poor man, without a relation in the world. Upon an examination of his effects, thirteen thousand dollars in government bonds and greenbacks were found in his trunk. He has, or it is so thought, a brother residing here and a sister in Harrodsburg, the two constituting his only heirs at law. Mr. W. H. Sneed, an attorney of the Frankfort bar, has been employed to establish the claim of said parties to the estate of said decedent, and has been engaged for some time in procuring the necessary evidence to establish the heirship. He left on yesterday for Port Byron, feeling hopeful for success, which will bestow a snug little fortune upon two worthy citizens of this State.—Frankfort Yeoman.

PEOPLE who are getting discouraged because the hard times continue can take comfort in the theory which a student of our financial history has formulated, that it requires just four years for this country to work through a financial crisis, and that its business can not be kept in a depressed condition longer than that. The growth and development of the country, and the accumulation of its industry, compel a revival of business in four years. The four years that this spell of hard times had to run are nearly out. Good times are coming. As our able contemporary of the Louisville Medical News says, "It was to have been when the troops were moved; it is postponed now till the crops are made." But it will be before long. It is bound to be before long, and, to quote from the same paper, "when flush times do come again, we ought to be better for our trials; with faith made stronger in the passing ordeal, bearing the prosperity, when it comes at last, with gentler hearts."—Louisville Commercial.

Buried Alive.

BALTIMORE, May 20.—A sensation has been produced in the Fifth District of Baltimore County by a widely circulated rumor that a young girl had been buried alive. It appears that about two weeks ago a man named Caples called on the State's Attorney and said the grave of a young girl who died while in his employ had been desecrated, and asked for the prosecution of the parties who had exhumed the body. A few days later Messrs. Zouck and Bosler, of the same district, informed the State's Attorney that they believed Caples had buried the girl alive. The coffin was a rough pine box, made by Caples, and as it was being lowered in the grave in the presence of several persons, two ladies present heard the exclamation, "Oh, Lord!" from the grave. They protested against the burial, but Caples buried the body. The next day it was exhumed, and the body found to be turned over in the coffin, the flesh of the arms lacerated, and the hands clutched in her hair, and her shroud and coffin covered with blood from her mouth and nose. These are the rumors in brief. An official investigation will be made by the grand jury to-morrow. The girl had been an inmate of a charitable institution before she went to Caples' house.

BALTIMORE, May 21.—The grand jury of Baltimore County began to-day the investigation into the charges against R. P. Caples of having murdered, by burying alive, a young girl in his employ. The horrible affair is still shrouded in mystery, and wide-spread interest in the case has been awakened. The shocking details were the subject of general conversation at Townstown.

R. P. Caples, the accused, is about thirty years of age. He is married, and has six children. The girl was known only by the name of "Christie;" was always weak and delicate, but had never had but one serious attack of illness until affected by that which caused her death. She was only about fifteen years of age, and had only had one attack of serious illness before her death. She was found dead in her bed, and was buried the next day.

Caples denies positively that any voice was heard in the coffin, or that any protest was made against the burial.

The husband of Mrs. Blouse, the latter of whom was present at the funeral, was before the grand jury. The story, as told him by his wife, was that, when the remains were lying in the church, she asked Mr. Caples to let her see the body, but he declined to open the coffin, saying the corpse was too much decomposed. After the earth had been thrown over the coffin, and all were turning to go, they were startled by a noise as of some one crying for help in a heavy, muffled voice. Every one near seemed to hear the sound at the same time, but young Mr. Caples suggested that they had probably been deceived.

Many, however, had serious misgivings that all was not right, and the report flew rapidly from house to house in the little village of Butler that the young girl had been foully dealt with. The excitement increased to such an extent that an excited crowd dug the grave open. The body of the girl was found lying a little to the right side, diagonally across the coffin, but bore no marks of personal violence. Blood was running from the nose and mouth. The face was streaked with black and blue marks. The corpse was poorly clad, and did not present a cleanly appearance. After all present had seen the body, the coffin was carefully replaced and the grave filled.

Mr. Blouse said further that since that time various rumors have been afloat. Some said the girl gave birth to a child previous to her death, others that she contracted disease from exposure and ill usage, and others that the old colored man, Teal, had been heard to remark that when they had the body exposed they should have turned it over and they would have found that the back of the girl's head head was completely crushed in, as if by a heavy blow. And others again state that she was heard to call for help before dying, but her cries went unheeded by the family below.

Dr. J. F. England, brother-in-law of Caples, and who attended her, says that death was caused by rheumatism of the heart and consumption, which would account for the blood from her nose.

Summonses were issued for other witnesses, and further investigation was postponed.

How to Increase the Flow of Milk.

A lady correspondent, writing us from Arkansas, gives us the following excellent recipe to increase the flow of milk in a cow, and we can indorse it, for we have seen it tried. She says: "Tepid water, slightly salted, given twice a day, will increase the flow of milk at least one-third. If the cow will not drink it at first trial, scatter a handful of bran or meal over the top of it; they soon become fond of it, and will drink all you give them. I tried this plan three years ago with perfect success. I had only one cow, and she was of the common scrub stock of the country, and, after she began to drink the water, prepared as above, she furnished me, twice a day, two ordinary water buckets full of milk; and, by feeding a little corn boiled with cotton seed, the milk yielded butter enough to supply my table bountifully and leave me a few pounds to sell every week. I give her three gallons of water twice a day."—Rural Sun.

THE LOOM OF LIFE.

BY EBEN E. REXFORD.

All day, all night, I can hear the jar
Of the loom of life, and near and far
It thrills with its deep and muffled sound,
As the tireless wheels go always round.
Busily, ceaselessly goes the loom
In the light of day and the midnight gloom;
The wheels are turning, early and late,
And the woof is wound in the warp of fate.

Click, click! there's a thread of love wove in!
Click, click! and another of wrong and sin.
What a checkered thing this life will be,
When we see it unrolled in eternity!

Time, with a face like a mystery,
And hands as busy as hands can be,
Sits at the loom, with its warp outspread,
To catch in its meshes each glancing thread.
When shall this wonderful web be done?
In a thousand years, perhaps, or one.
Or to-morrow. Who knoweth? Not you nor I,
But the wheels turn on and the shuttles fly.

Ah! sad-eyed weaver, the years are slow,
But each one is nearer the end, I know.
And some day the last thread shall be wove in,
God grant it be love, instead of sin.
Are we spinsters of woof for this life-web? Say!
Do we furnish the weaver a thread each day?
It were better, then, O, my friend, to spin
A beautiful thread, than a thread of sin.

Early Courtship in Ohio.

"If you can't get them that you want, you must take them that you can git," and that is how I came to marry Patsey. Love will go where 'tis sent, anyhow, and we can't help it; and the harder a chap loves a gal, the less chance he stands to git her. The thing is just here—the more he loves her, the more shy and trembling he is, and he can't half tell his feelings to her if he tries; while the careless and unfeeling chap, that's got no more love in him than a hoss, can have a dozen gals after him at once. I have thought the heart was like a mud turtle's egg—you dent the shell on one side, a dent on the other side, made in the same manner, will bring all smooth again. So with the heart; one girl makes a dent, it remains bruised till some other presses it, pushing out the old bruise and leaving in a new one.

Well, well, accidents will happen; folks will laugh; the world is more fond of fun than logic, and they might as well laugh at me as anybody.

So I agreed to tell you about my first courtship. It wa'nt Patsey; but my first sweetheart was a proper han'some girl. I worked for her father. Ohio was all in the woods then, and everybody lived in log houses, except down in Cleveland there was a store or two. And my three hundred acres, that is worth now one hundred and fifty dollars an acre, wasn't worth when I bought it only three dollars. Pshaw, Pshaw! how times is changed! Glad to get corn bread and gummon gravy then. Had to go thirty miles down to Chagrin—to mill. I always used to go for boss instead of himself, for I only "heafted" ninety pounds in weight and made a lighter load over a bag of corn on hossback. Let me see; I weigh eighty now.

Well, I was twenty-five years old, just about, and in love with boss's daughter, but always tho't she felt a leetle above me, for I was not any taller than than I am now—not quite as tall as she was, anyhow—and was working for eight dollars a month, and had tu dress in tow linen at that. You never see one of them logging frocks, made like a shirt, out of flax tow, did ye? Well, till I bought this blue coat, when I married Patsey thirty and five years ago, I ne'er wore any but tow, and if it wa'nt Sunday to-day I should not had it on, for I despise stravagance and new-fangled flummeries and thingumbob noodles 'round yer big houses.

I was in love thirty-five years ago—head over heels in love—and never dared to say a word about it. Her name was Jerusha. I longed to tell her how my heart swelled and burnt for her as it thumped agin its "chist," but I could never screw my courage up to the pint; but I thought I would some day—or some other day. I'd been alone with her many a time, and had resolved and re-resolved on popping it right out; but the stillness was as awful on them 'casions as the roar of Niagara, and my heart would feel all over like your little finger does when you hit your elbow agin a thing accidental—a tinglin'fulness.

"Cuss my luck!" said I to myself one Sunday night, as I cum home from mill, after a three days' ride. Jerusha had a beau—a chap from town, dressed as smart as a dancin' master. My heart jumped into my gullet the minute I seed him. I felt down in the mouth, for I knowed I was a gone feller. He had on broadcloth. Talk of your new-fangled Gossop and Gresham houses now, but folks in them days didn't have but one room down stairs, and a ladder to go up stairs; puncheon floors was good enough below, and oak shakes, split out by hand, kivered the chamber floor. It was so in boss's house, and I slept up chamber. I want you to imagine two wooden hooks fixed up to hang a gun on, right over the hearth, on the chamber beam; I want you to remember my tow shirt; and I want you to imagine my feelings that night after I went to bed, for Jerusha and the dandy chap had the hull room below to themselves, with a rousing fire to spark by.

I couldn't stand the temptation to want to hear what they had to say to themselves. Whisper, whisper, whisper. You may laugh at it, but it's the naked truth that I am going to tell. I have laughed myself at the same since. When I heard something pop like a kiss, by ginger I could stand my great heart-thumps no longer. Curiosity and jealousy got the upper end on me. I wanted to see for myself; so I slid out o' bed, sitting flat like a tailor on the floor, determined to hitch up just as I sat, inch at a time, to the opening over the hearth where the beam and gun hooks was. A cat couldn't been no stiller arter a mouse; but my heart thumped louder every hitch, just as it will when a man goes to do what aint right.

Well, just as I had gained the right pint to look over at 'em, up tilted the pesky floor, down I went, tow shirt to gun hook—and there I hung blindfold, like a squirrel half skinned, right over my rival and sweetheart, ready for the basting. I couldn't see 'em at all arter that, an' it was more than ten minutes before the old boss awoke to tear me loose, dangling around the fire. "What, what!" said he; "got a spare rib; ha!" "Let me down," said I. I got pretty well hoaxed, anyhow, and ain't been quite so raw since in love matters.

Lord! I never looked Jerusha in the face from that day, nor a girl in the neighborhood, for I could swear she told 'em all. That accident got my grit up to make a fortin. I went off a few miles and married the first chance I got, just out of spite—and Patsey is worth all of 'em arter all, and marrying is a lottery business. Then, don't hang yourself, as I did, because you can't get a particular girl, but recollect your heart is like rubber—it will stretch a good ways and not break.

Hayes and Senator Morton's Letter.

The President; to a gentleman who had an interview with him to-day, talked very freely upon the political situation. In discussing Senator Morton's letter, the President said Mr. Morton's statement of the policy of the Administration with respect to the South, and his description of the situation as the new Administration found it at the inauguration, was exact and true. It was then a fact, whatever might be said of the propriety of supporting any other cause, that the undertaking to have supported Packard with the military would have been futile and the failure disastrous. The President did not, however, agree with Mr. Morton as the position and purposes of the South. He did not share Mr. Morton's distrust of the Southern leaders, and did not have the same apprehension of their intentions. "But whatever may happen in the South now," the President declared, "the Republican party can not be held responsible for it. The South is now in the hands of the Democrats, and that party must be alone responsible to the intelligent opinion of the country for the conduct of public affairs."

But upon one subject the President was quite as emphatic as Senator Morton, or the most earnest Republican in the country could wish him to be. Referring to the numerous stories of a purpose in certain quarters to attempt to create a new party, and to name it the National Union party, the President very earnestly, and almost in these words, said he had always been a Republican, is a Republican, and that the Republican party was never more necesary to the nation than to-day. "That party," the President, according to this gentleman, said, "is good enough for me, and by it I intend to stand."

The language of the President showed very clearly that he did not favor any new party organizations, as such, and that he would not likely give any such movement aid.—Washington Dispatch in Cincinnati Commercial.

A Fiendish Outrage and Its Punishment.

CAIRO, ILL., May 17.—Near Arlington, yesterday afternoon, Nat Pyle, a sixteen-year-old negro boy, attempted to outrage the person of the wife of his employer, C. R. Pyle, a respectable and wealthy white citizen, of Ballard County, and failing in his purpose he choked and beat her until he supposed her dead, and threw her into a cistern. The water was only four feet deep, and Mrs. Pyle had sufficient presence of mind to tie her long hair around a projecting root, so that as she became weakened she would avoid drowning. She remained in that position five hours before rescued, and notwithstanding the severe ordeal, will recover. The criminal is now in jail at Arlington.

CAIRO, ILL., May 22.—On Sunday night last, a party of disguised men went to the jail at Blandville, Ky., and with drawn pistols demanded and received the keys. They entered the jail and seized a negro named Levi Pyle, who attempted to assault and murder Mrs. Pyle, the wife of his employer, last week. They put a rope around his neck, tied him to a mule, and dragged him away into the woods. Nothing further is known except that his dead body was found hanging to a tree with several bullet holes in it and the clothing burned off.

NEARLY 100,000 Germans are settled in forty counties in Texas.

A Chinese Printing Office.

A Chinese printing office is a greater curiosity than one would think. The alphabet numbers away into the thousands, and a cap and a lower case go all the way around the inside of a two story building and half way to the roof. It takes an apprentice twenty years to learn the case, and then he has a step-ladder to get at the higher branches. A case was pied once in Canton, and it took five days to move the type from the forms of the foreman. They punctuate whenever they can drop a dot, without regard to perspective. When the editor coins a word the printer whittles out a character with a jack-knife. The journeymen set by the square foot and never belong to a union. They do their presswork by hand, and use boxing gloves to ink the type. They have one paper in the Empire a thousand years old, and the bound volumes half fill a pagoda. It is rumored that Bennett has started to edit that paper. The editor's head is responsible for all items published in the paper, and it is taken off whenever an item of news is published. Not an editor has been beheaded in China for the last five hundred years. The Chinese have just invented a twenty-five cylinder press for printing tea-chests, with which they are able to print one a week.—Danbury News.

In Doubt.

A tramp sat on a door step back in Pine street yesterday afternoon, tenderly caressing his head and shoulders, when his "pard" came up.

"What's the matter with you, Jacob?"

"I'm in doubt, Henry, I'm in doubt."

"In doubt; what about?"

"Well, Henry, I went into that alley gate up there to get something to eat. I might a knowed something ud happen, for there was a dead book agent laying on the flower bed and a liniment man with the side of his head caved in leaning up against a peach tree."

"Well?"

"You see, I allers was venturesome, an' I axed a woman standin' there, would she give me a rhubarb pie and a shad."

"Well, what happened then?"

"Now, Henry, that's what I'm in doubt about. I don't seem to make out whether the back porch fell down on me or I stepped on a keg of dynamite and it busted under me. Why, Henry, I'd sooner work half an hour than go into that yard agin."—Easton Free Press.

A Proposition to Divide Up Utah.

The best solution of the Mormon problem yet proposed is that of dividing up Utah among the adjoining States and Territories. Two contiguous States, Nevada and Colorado, do not to-day contain a sufficient population to justify their admission. Nevada has not 60,000 people within its borders, and Colorado has less than 100,000. Territorially, there is no reason why the eastern portion of Utah should not be annexed to Colorado, and the western to Nevada. In creating the original Territory of Nevada, a large slice was cut off from Utah, and another portion might now be added with advantage. Such an addition might prove advantageous in improving the politics of that State by introducing therein another element. And there is no doubt that the people of Nevada would take due care to punish polygamy within their borders. Colorado would be benefited by the annexation of a portion of Eastern Utah, and the Territories of Idaho, Montana and Arizona could with advantage absorb the northern and southern portions.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Peaches—Curl in the Leaf.

This disease injures the growth of trees by reducing the extent of the foliage, and it sometimes becomes serious. It is caused by a parasitic fungus, which may be seen with a powerful microscope, first inside of the freshly opening leaves, and afterward covering the surface. The best remedy is promoting vigorous growth. We see a statement in one of our exchanges that coal ashes, densely spread around the trees, is a good remedy, which is doubtless true, so far as it promotes vigorous growth by acting as a useful mulch. Some years ago, when this disease prevailed, many of our trees were badly injured, but on one which stood near a pig-pen, and was benefited by the manure, the leaves were free from it, the growth being strong and the foliage of a deep green color.—Country Gentleman.

CROQUET will be as fashionable as ever this year, and the average of lies, denunciations and broken friendships to the game will be even higher than in any previous season. Experienced players demand that a man should never play in a stiff hat; that if a young woman has a pet corn on her foot, she should have a keen eye and steady hand when, placing her foot triumphantly on her ball and a rival's, she undertakes to drive the latter into the shrubbery; and that when a dishonest player joggles a ball with his foot, it is better not to make a scene about it, but, when your turn comes to play, to try and steal a hoop.—Chicago Tribune.

LOVE may be a relic of paradise, but when a man has been sitting up in the back parlor, with the light turned down, till half past 12, his imagination, as his footsteps reverberate through the silent, shadowed streets on his homeward way, does not revel so much in thoughts of poetry and buds and flowers, as it does in the prospect that there are a few cold beans in the house.

RICHMOND (Va.) DISPATCH: The State's prison on Saturday contained 1,026 inmates, with 200 outside working at the quarries. The crowded condition of the institution is shown by the fact that there is an average of seven men to a cell not capable of holding more than two comfortably. Many are idle, from the impossibility of finding anything for them to do. Owing to its crowded condition, a great deal of sickness is apprehended this summer. Colonel Sutherlin has made a contract recently for the services of one hundred convicts to work on the Milton and Sutherlin Narow-Gauge Railway, running between Danville and the North Carolina line.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

W. L. RIDDELL,
Editor and Proprietor.

BURLINGTON, KY., JUNE 7.

Announcements.

We are authorized to announce Capt. L. S. Norman as a candidate for State Senator, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce Granville Y. Rouse as a candidate for the office of Representative in the Legislature for the ensuing term.

We are authorized to announce Reuben Conner, Esq. as a candidate for the Legislature, subject to the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce Jas. L. Henderson as a candidate for the Legislature.

THE PIRMARY ELECTION.

The following named were appointed officers to conduct the primary election to be held on the 30th inst:

Burlington—B. K. Sleet, F. Riddell, Judges; Lewis Dills, Clerk.

Petersburg—Nathan Walton, J. Frank Grant, Judges; F. P. Walton, Clerk.

Taylorsport—Cyrus Riddell, John Stephens, Judges; A. Whitlock, Clerk.

Bellevue—L. P. Arnold, A. Corbin, Judges; J. A. Akin, Clerk.

Carlton—Thos. N. Stephens, Wm. Nelson, Judges; J. A. Wilson, Clerk.

V. Dickerson,
Committee.

T. H. Hanson, who, at the time of the Presidential campaign was Chief Clerk of the Paymaster-General's office, but was discharged because his political complexion was of the wrong line, has been reinstated by President Hayes, and Kent, his successor, who is an ex-Union soldier, and has but one arm, was made walk the plank. His proceedings created no little dissatisfaction among some of the Republicans, but Hayes don't appear to be much concerned about the matter.

The Tobacco Journal says:

There continues to be an active demand for the various kinds of both old and new tobaccos now selling on our breaks, causing a buoyant market at prices full up to quotations. Sweet and colony old cutting stock is getting scarce, and when offered is quickly taken up at full prices. An unusually fine lot of 10 hogsheads, prized and shipped by S. Spears, Esq., of Ripley, Brown County, Ohio, was sold at the Miami Warehouse at prices ranging from $20 to $29 per hundred pounds.

KANSAS LETTER.

Clay Center, Kansas, May 31, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Of course, Mr. Editor, we must come "once more to the breach" with some sort of a disquisition on the state of the weather. It is, to draw it mildly, hot. We have had a smacking breeze from the south, now, for five consecutive days, with no let up to speak of. During that time and the month previous we have also had frequent and heavy rains, somewhat calculated to destroy the reputation of droughty Kansas.

To appreciate some of the effects of the recent freshets, you must know that Clay Center is situated on the left bank of the Republican River near the junction of Huntress Creek with said river; that the creek, about half a mile west of the city, approaches to within forty feet of the river, then bends away again and enters the river at Clay Center. Just below the point where the creek approaches so near the river, a mill-dam has been built with great labor and expense, and the water of the river thrown through a tunnel into the creek, and the water power thus secured has for the last year operated a flouring mill by means of a powerful "turbine" wheel. This dam and mill-site are the property of the old firm Dexter & Bro., pioneer settlers in this region. By means of, perhaps, some mismanagement, a great deal of misfortune, and certainly by reason of their too generous hearts, that could not say "no" to a needy though moneyless customer, they lost heavily, and are now deeply involved in debt. But the water-mill was a paying institution, and they were slowly working out. But it is greatly feared that the "Old Republican" has asserted her untamable independence in a manner that will be likely to blast all their hopes for mill-dam success. The river, swollen as it was by the inordinate rains, acted very much like a good General would act in besieging a rampart. When all its force had failed to move the stubborn dam, the treacherous water, by slow flank-movements, began to eat away the bank at the southern end of the dam; and before the freshet had subsided a chasm one hundred and fifty or two hundred feet wide was cut out of the bank around the end of the dam, and now the whole tide of the river flows through this constantly widening channel, and the dam, although uninjured, stands high and dry. The flow of the water through the tunnel has ceased, the busy "turbine wheel" whirls no more with its resistless force, the old mill is silent and deserted, and the ruined owners may be seen standing alone upon the solid stones of the now useless dam, looking with a despairing eye upon the swirling current and listening to the subdued murmur of its rushing tide.

By reason of the change in the channel of the river the iron bridge over the river at Clay Center is, to some extent, in danger of being like the dam, left high and dry. If the danger becomes imminent the county will likely take the matter in hand and repair the damage.

All the saloons in Clay Center have suspended operations, and as a result we have no work for the Marshal or Jailer to attend to, (poor fellows). The cause of the above unusual proceedings, was the failure of the saloonists to obtain the requisite number of names on their petitions, and the consequent refusal of the City Council to grant them licenses. And even if they do succeed in getting the required number of names, their number will be quite limited, for they must each first pay in advance a license fee of four hundred dollars, and enter into rigid undertakings that they will comply with the law on the subject. We stand a fair chance to have a respectable city after a while.

Our crop prospects are becoming more and more flattering; and the surviving grasshoppers are few and look ghastly.

Give our love, Mr. Editor, to all our friends, and even if thou find an enemy, give unto him our kind regards.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

St. Louis, Mo., June 2, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

The present week brought us the circus, Decoration Day and two refreshing showers; but withal, politically, religiously and commercially, it is the dullest week I ever experienced. We have had only two suicides for the entire week, and, take all the excitement together, people generally this week don't seem more than half awake. Your correspondent feels so drowsy and lifeless that he had about concluded to let your readers rest the coming week, and not bore them with a dull and lifeless letter. But, after mature reflection, we have considered it but our plain, righteous duty not to forget or neglect our friend, "Colonel Henderson." He must not be forgotten or left out in the cold. And right here we may as well say, the Recorder of day before yesterday is at hand, and we have read all of its correspondence and editorials.

Now, Mr. Editor, without the least desire to find fault, criticise or even censure, we ask the privilege, modestly and kindly, to say we are not altogether pleased with the manner in which your learned and gentlemanly Florence correspondent speaks of our choice for the Legislature. He says "Jim Henderson." Is that the way to speak of a great and good man? It seems to us, with a little more ink and a few more dashes with the pen, he could just as well have said: "The Hon. James Henderson, of old dispensation notoriety, lectured in our city, Saturday last, before a large and appreciative audience, upon his favorite theme, 'Anti-Progress,' handling his subject in his most enthusiastic manner, treating it historically, logically, and proving to the entire satisfaction of all who heard him that the people in the days of Adam and Eve, when that loving pair went about the Garden heart to heart, hand in hand, and with love for the whole human family, were much happier than the politicians of these degenerate days, when the whole human family love money, and every fellow has an ax to grind." Now, mind you, we do not wish to criticise; much less do we wish our own articles criticised; but we think it always best to speak of great men in a becoming manner. Col. Henderson is our choice, knowing, as we do from a distance, that his views are correct on the dog tax and most of the questions of the day. There is not a doubt but what we all have too extravagant notions for the times, particularly the ladies. "God bless 'em!" We like "'em," and hope they will never go out of fashion. But, only think of it! when we lived in Boone, some thirty odd years ago, no lady in those days thought of buying more than eight yards of calico for a dress; and we venture the prediction that, at this day, there is not a Miss just "sweet sixteen" within your county limits that ever thinks of buying less than sixteen yards for a stay-at-home dress. If they keep on in the same ratio for the next thirty years, it will take forty yards of calico to make a dress. In those good old days every man in Stringtown and Taylorsport had at least three dogs, and nary a sheep; but nobody ever thought of taxing the poor dogs, as they do in these days of extravagance and high taxation. Taxes in those days, for both county and State, so far as your county was concerned, were only one dollar on $750, and people got along and were happy. I tell you, you are going too fast. Let every man in your county have a dog for himself, one for his wife and one for each child, and, if they are of the hound species, you will have plenty of music, without buying pianos and spending your money for the new-fangled inventions of the day. In those days a poor man had a right, by common consent, to hunt quails, rabbits, and pick blackberries wherever he could find them, and people were happy. They didn't bother themselves in those days about sheep, turnpikes, railroads and sich like. We are for Henderson. Please instruct your gentlemanly correspondents here after to speak kindly of my "choice," else I may, some time or other, complain and get after them.

Mr. Charles W. Jones, of Chicago, and son of R. H. Jones, of this city, who, by the way, is a Boone County man, surprised his father, mother and sister, on Sunday last, by bringing his new bride to see them without giving home folks even an intimation that he thought of committing matrimony. The mother and sister seem to think he ought to have let them know he was coming; but it would not surprise us in the least if that very same sister, some of these days, pairs off with some good looking fellow without consulting the feelings of the brother. Mankind has been pairing off for the past six thousand years, and we suppose they will continue to pair off to the end of the new "dispensation," hard times or easy times, whether Col. Henderson is, or is not, elected to the Legislature.

The Dean babies are all alive and doing well, as is the mother and father, and presents continue to flow into the lap of that family.

Miss Fannie Robinson, the young lady of color who shot herself last week because she thought her lover was dividing his affections with another "gal," died of her wounds on Wednesday last.

Prices of grain have been up and down from day to day, but market this evening closes at about quotations of last week.

Yours truly, Bob A. Long.

—Carrollton is to have a German Protestant Church.

—The Carrollton Fair Grounds were sold for $3,150.

—Covington wants a branch of the State Penitentiary.

—Many rattlesnakes are being killed in Kentucky this summer.

—There are over 900 convicts in the State Penitentiary. The Yeoman says the number will reach 1,000 by October.

—The Louisville Commercial is giving persons who attend public assemblies and interrupt people by talking a lecture on behavior.

—The Grayson Journal is responsible for this item: More than 1,000,000 pounds of tobacco have been shipped from Grayson County this season.

—The Democrats of Livingston County had a boisterous time when they held their Convention to nominate a candidate for Representative.

—Hopkinsville New Era: Western Kentucky never had a better prospect for a wheat crop at this season of the year. The yield promises to be unprecedented.

—The Frankfort Yeoman says, Billy Williams has a field on Pea Ridge road, a mile and a half from town, which will yield twenty bushels of wheat to the acre.

—Madisonville Republican: The wheat crop is still looking fine. Tobacco plants were never better or more abundant in this county. Meadows are also looking well; that is, what few there are in this county, but precious few there are.

—Cadiz Democrat: Our farmers are complaining heavily of the continued dry spell of weather. A good rain is much needed to enable our farmers to finish setting their tobacco crop. Tobacco plants are now full size, and unless we have a rain soon they will become overgrown and unfit for planting.

—Louisville Evening News: Blue-grass does not grow alone in what is called the "blue-grass region" of Kentucky. Mr. John D. Johnson has growing on his farm, in Jefferson County, twenty miles from this city, blue grass that measures fifty-one inches in height. That is about as good as anything Fayette or Woodford counties can do.

CRADDOCK, of the True Kentuckian, will have to remain on this mundane sphere an hundred years longer to beat this. A German farmer, who resides near town, had a sow that, not long since, gave birth to a pig with one well developed head and neck and two bodies. It may be well to add, it lived but a short time.

A FEW of the faithful met at the M. E. Church, last Sunday, at the usual hour for Sunday-school, but there not being a female teacher present, and the suggestion being made that it was bonnet show-day at Bulletsburg, they slowly repaired to their homes with a look of extreme thoughtfulness on their countenances.

LAST Saturday, the Board of Directors on the Burlington and Bellevue pike held a meeting and rescinded the contract with the original contractors, Burgiss and Wake. Monday the Board held another meeting, and we understand let four miles of the road out, the sub-contractors under Wake and Burgiss being the parties getting the four miles. The work will be under way again in a few days.

MR. E. A. TUCKER, Secretary of the North Kentucky Agricultural Society, gave us a call Monday. Mr. Tucker is exerting himself to make the approaching fair a success, and with the co-operation of the directors and stockholders we see no reason why he should not be successful. By reference to the advertisement in this paper, it will be seen that the price of admission has been reduced to correspond with the times.

ANY person who, under the cover of night, will invade the pasture of a fellow-man with salt in one hand and an ax in the other, seeking revenge by cutting off the foot of a valuable horse, should be considered and recognized as a cold blooded cowardly fiend, and a murderer at heart. This crime was perpetrated in the pasture of Mr. John Smith, near Francisville, one night last week. The horse thus ruined was a very valuable animal and one for which Mr. Smith had refused a large price. There is some suspicion in the neighborhood as to who the guilty party is, and should it become certain, the atmosphere thereabouts will be made to warm for him to exist in.

A Mass Meeting in Three Acts.

An Executive Committee that Won't Rescind.

A Candidate for Senator Flies the Track.

—:o:—

A Candidate for County Representative Steps Down and Out.

—:o:—

The Stock Law Men Dig Up the Hatchet and Don their War-Paint.

—:o:—

There was an uncommonly large crowd in Burlington last Monday, and what time was not devoted to discussing local politics was turned over to "dry weather and crop talk." Politics, though, were uppermost with everybody, and the action of the County Executive Committee was thoroughly analyzed by both those who sanctioned their action and those who desired it set aside, or at least that part of it ordering delegates chosen to meet in convention on the first Monday in July. These two elements had agitated the question during the entire forenoon, and had the political atmosphere at fever heat by 1 o'clock, the time for the meeting of the committee, when it would be made known whether or not they intended to recant.

ACT I.

At 1 o'clock the Court-house bell, in solemn accent, warned the unterrified of the county that the hour had arrived for their Executive Committee to speak. A general rush was made for the Court-house, which was soon filled to its utmost capacity. The four members of the County Executive Committee, Dr. A. Sayre, Dr. J. C. Terrill, Volney Dickerson and L. P. Arnold, filed into the bar. The Chairman, Dr. Sayre, ascended the Judge's stand, called the meeting to order, and stated, in substance, that the action taken by the committee they thought the best that could be done for the party; that the committee believed it when they made the order; that they now believe it, and that they intended to stand by it, and if the meeting voted to sustain their action, they would proceed to appoint officers to conduct the primary election, but if not sustained they would resign. The vote was then taken by yeas and nays for and against sustaining the committee. The Chairman decided the yeas in the majority and the committee sustained in its action. There being much dissatisfaction as to the decision of the Chair, a division was called. The vote was again taken, this time by counting uplifted hands. The Chairman declared the same result, but there was still dissatisfaction, some claiming the count incorrect. The Chairman then said if they wanted to take the vote again they could do so, and appoint tellers to do the counting, and left the stand.

WM. WATTS made a short speech, in which he favored a free fight by turning the candidates loose and letting the August election decide the matter. Mr. Watts' speech concluded the first act.

ACT II.

The next thing on the programme was speeches by the candidates for Senator and Representative.

On motion of Jerry Murphy, Rev. R. E. Kirtley was chosen to preside over the meeting.

Mr. Kirtley took the chair and thanked the crowd for the honor bestowed upon him, and then stated the object of the meeting to be as we have above designated.

An effort was again made to get the action of the Executive Committee before the house, but the Chairman ruled it out of order.

Captain Norman spoke first. His speech was brief, touching only upon the points which have been principally urged against him in the canvass.

Dr. Scott followed the Captain in a brief and very neat speech, well spiced with the Doctor's original wit. At the close of the speech, greatly to the surprise of the entire crowd, the Doctor withdrew from the race, expressing it as his desire that the county give its unanimous support to Captain Norman.

On motion of J. Frank Grant, of Petersburg, a vote was taken declaring L. C. Norman to be the unanimous choice of the meeting for the office of State Senator. The question being put, it appeared that every voice in the large crowd roared "aye" in unison. Thus was Capt. Norman declared the unanimous choice of Boone County for the office of State Senator.

This being done, Dr. Scott again took the floor and returned thanks to his many warm supporters and friends who so cheerfully aided him in his canvass.

Dr. Scott has made a great many friends during his canvass, and especially by the very advisable course pursued on last Monday. The Senatorial race as to Boone is virtually concluded, and she presents a candidate for the office of Senator who will represent the district with credit to himself and honor to his constituents. In saying this we would not be understood as regarding Mr. Scott in any other light than that of a man true to his party and well calculated and qualified to fill any position to which he has aspired.

The next thing in order was speeches by the candidates for County Representative.

Capt. Geo. W. Terrill was the first to come forward, and, instead of leading off in the discussion, as was expected, he remarked that as there was much dissatisfaction in the party, with the consent of his friends he would withdraw from the race, and took his seat.

This was like a thunder clap from a clear sky. No one was expecting this line of procedure, and we have been informed his most intimate friends were not advised of this step. This move seemed to add fuel to the fire, and the political caldron was soon at 212° Fahr. But everything subsided without blood or bruises.

This, the second act, was closed by the speeches of Messrs. Rouse and Conner. These gentlemen were carrying on the discussion while a caucus was in session on the street.

ACT III.

Was the meeting held in obedience to the call made last week by the stock law men.

The meeting was called to order by Wm. M. Conner, and Lewis C. Conner, of Hebron, was called to the Chair.

He stated the object of the meeting to be to take steps for instructing the candidate elected in August how to act in regard to a stock law.

On motion and second, Judge John H. Phelps, John Stephens, Roswell Randall, Benj. Rice and E. A. Tucker were appointed a committee to draft a proposed stock law, to be submitted to a vote of the people at the August election.

The proposed law, when framed, will be published in the RECORDER, that all who will may know exactly what they are voting on.

The action of the stock law men closed the series of meetings for the day, and soon after the crowd began to disperse.

Crop Talk.

Monday we talked with gentlemen from the different parts of the county regarding the growing crops. The following is what was given us: Esq. Geo. W. Baker, of Big Bone, says the dry weather is much complained of, and that the corn does not look healthy, it being worked on by some kind of an insect. He does not think there will be a large tobacco crop planted, the dry weather having cut the crop of plants short.

Mr. John B. Acra, who resides on the East Bend and Burlington road, says the corn is not doing well, and looks yellow. Not much tobacco will be planted in his neighborhood.

Boone Rogers, of Bellevue, reports crops in that section looking only tolerably well, and thinks, although the oats are far gone, a good rain might make a small crop. There will be less tobacco planted than was last year; the plants look well. Fruit is a failure.

James Lampton, of Walton, says corn, on account of the indifferent seed, came up badly, and is not doing well on account of the dry weather. In his neighborhood but little tobacco will be planted. Wheat and rye are well headed. Pears will be plentiful, but other fruit a failure.

Henry Snyder, from Woolper Heights, says crops generally, in his neighborhood, look badly.

All those with whom we talked concurred in the report that meadows are very short.

Personal Mention.

MRS. EUNIE RICE is improving.

MRS. GUSTA KIRKPATRICK, we are sorry to report very ill.

MRS. GRANT, wife of Wm. Grant, of Woolper, is very ill of whooping-cough.

MR. T. N. CLOUD, of Pleasant Hill, Mo., called upon us Monday. We are always glad to see our friends, and especially those from a distance. Our latch string hangs on the outside of the door.

BY a letter from B. B. Tyler, pastor First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky., we learn that the annual meeting of the Kentucky Christian Sunday-school Association will be held in the First Christian Church, corner Fourth and Walnut streets, in the city of Louisville, beginning the 19th day of June, and will continue three days. A cordial invitation to all Sunday-school workers is extended. Visitors, upon their arrival in the city, will proceed to the church, where places of entertainment will be assigned them.

MR. R. A. BRADY exhibited at the Carrollton Fair, last Saturday week, the fine iron-gray gelding he brought from Lexington, some time since. The result was two premiums.

THE various schools in the county are nearing the summer vacation, and the little "lads" are looking forward to the happy hour with pleasure.

LAST Thursday and Friday Esquire Kendall treated a portion of the Burlington forces to road-working flavored with fresh butter-milk.

THE farmers, or at least those who expect to cultivate tobacco this season, are awaiting a good soaking rain that the plants may be set out.

THE song of the plowman and the rattle of the trace chain are common sounds floating on the morning breezes.

THE knight of the white-wash brush has been dressing trees, fences and houses for some time past.

A BAND of vocalists is being organized. They rehearse on the street corners after dark.

THE time for picking the crop of spring chickens has come.

A BARBER-SHOP in Burlington—call and get shaved.

THE fruit crop will not amount to much this fall.

How to Choose a Candidate for the Legislature.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

The politician would have us plow the soil. That is all right. But we must come to him to be instructed how to vote. This is the ruling of the latter day political dispensation, viz., the Democratic Executive Committee: They, the Committee, have ORDERED that a primary election be held for the purpose of choosing a Democratic candidate for the Legislature and a candidate for the State Senate. They have also ORDERED that no person shall be allowed a vote unless he has identified himself with the Democrat party, or, never having voted, will pledge himself to support the nominee of the convention. Now, I appeal to you in all sincerity; is this Democracy? is this government by the people? What say you? Is it not despotic? Brother farmers, don't suppose you are not allowed to have a political opinion unless it has first been stamped as orthodox by some political Sanhedrim. The people are the tax payers, the land owners, yea, the sovereigns. Let them speak. The sooner the people establish it as a fact that they will not support candidates simply because they may have been fortunate to be the choice of a party, the sooner will public affairs assume a hopeful complexion. As in olden times, let candidates for the State offices come directly before the people, and not before a convention, to be at the mercy of a few ambitious, selfish party leaders. Let the people go to the polls and vote directly for their choice, without restraint or hindrance. Let us throw overboard both Democrat and Republican parties, and build up a People's party—an honest party—having for its goal the greatest good to all the people, securing a political fraternization of honest men from both parties. We must punish corruption; we must cheapen money; we must reduce excessive salaries; we must curb party spirit; we must destroy sectional prejudices; we must purify the press; we must create a more correctly informed public opinion by edifying the masses; and we must prove the truthfulness of the information that there is one people able and willing and determined to govern themselves. Personal preferences and considerations should be secondary, and our country, its safety and highest interest should be chief in every good citizen's mind. Bribery and misrepresentations, as means to obtain office, are distasteful to men of high-born worth, and bespeak positive unworthiness in those who seek preferment. In conclusion, I would say, let us cherish our public schools, our religious institutions, our equal rights and our free government. K. P. J.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Willow Vale.

Business is quite lively in the valley at present. The mill is very busy and the mill-yard full of logs.

Everyone is complaining of the dry weather, especially those wishing to set tobacco plants.

You can hear the sound of hatchet and saw on very many farms about here. Mr. G. W. Huey is having a very large barn in process of erection. Mr. Dave Clements is building a house, others are making plank fence, &c. and so on.

There was quite a number of buggys passed by here last Sunday, from Florence, en route for Big Bone Springs.

The much talked of wedding has at last transpired, Perry Weaver and Annie Stephens being the principal actors on the occasion. May they live long and die happy is the sincere wish of KATE KEARNY.

Waterloo.

Corn is growing well. Wheat looks exceedingly well but the acreage in this neighborhood is small. Tobacco plants are nearly large enough to set, and much of the weed will be cultivated, the season favoring. Potatoes are growing rapidly and so are the Colorado bugs. Owing to the frosts and insects, fruit of all kinds will be scarce. The ground is very dry. We hope that ere long we shall be blessed with a refreshing shower.

Squirrel hunting and fishing are now in order. Eighty-five squirrels were killed in one day last week, and many of the finny tribe have been angled.

Mrs. Nan Lewis is teaching in Beach Grove District, and Miss Laura Huey is teaching a three months school in Locust Grove District.

The candidates spoke at Rabbit Hash last Saturday, and will speak at Bellevue next Wednesday, the 6th inst. Col. Henderson, come down; we wish to hear your views on the old dispensation.

—Died.—On last Sunday morning about sunrise, of whooping-cough and inflamation of the brain, little Alice Green, daughter of Zillah Emily Green, aged eighteen months and two days. Of such is the kingdom of heaven. UNO.

Rabbit Hash.

There was a large crowd at this place Saturday evening to hear the speaking. All the candidates were present except Dr. Scott and Col. H. Cheap gas and sour rhetoric was the order of the day.

Married.—At the residence of the bride's father, on Thursday, May 31st, Mr. A. G. McConnel to Miss Carrie M. Calvert, Rev. B. F. Bristow officiating.

Bro. Young, of Warsaw, preached to a well filled house at this place, Sunday.

Miss Mollie Stephens has gone to Louisville to spend the summer.

Miss Lizzie McGlasson, of Breckinridge County, is visiting her uncle, H. C. McGlasson.

Mrs. Morrow, of Warsaw, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. E. K. Scott.

Miss Jennie Hobbs, of Warsaw, is visiting her sister, Mrs. O. J. Harris.

Benjamin F. Miric is quite low with typhoid fever. Dr. L. C. Cowen is his physician.

The saw-log men have left us never to return.

There will be a picnic in McConnel's woods on next Saturday, June 10th. Everybody is respectfully invited. There will be good music in attendance, so come one, come all.

We are sorry to say that Mrs. John P. Craig is very sick.

Dr. S. H. Platt was in town Saturday.

Farmers are complaining a great deal of the late dry weather. The early potatoes will hardly make anything, and everything is putting on a downward cast or a bardacious look. "CRANKY."

Petersburg.

The candidates for the Legislature took a joint set-to among us last Wednesday, according to the programme published in the RECORDER some time since, and they pawed up the sand and stirred up the mud in the political stream until it looks like backwater from the Mississippi on a "high," with a slight tinge from the beautiful waters of Red River. Mr. Rouse was first at the bat, being awkwardly introduced to the audience by a bashful member of the party in this town, in perhaps his first appearance, and he incontinently knocked the lively balls of stock, dog, road and other local laws all over the county. He went out on a daisy-cutter to Mr. Conner, who, in a shorter speech, undertook to exhibit his superior fielding with two bats, but went out on a foul bound to Capt. Terrill on a certain technical point of legislation on the school law, which he said his modesty would not permit him to explain. Notwithstanding the frequent questionings, suggestions and laughter by his hearers, the Captain, in a clear and decisive speech, declared his position upon all the tender points, and the satisfaction expressed by the audience is additional testimony to the fact that on the 30th inst. he will "clean the platter" in this, his home precinct. Owing to the necessary absence of Dr. Scott, and a promise given him at his request by Capt. Norman, the candidates for the Senate did not speak, as was expected. However, they promise to come and see us soon, and give us the speeches in which we were disappointed last week. The question of shooting unmuzzled dogs found running at large is a popular one, and is advocated by perhaps a large majority of our people; but it had a very perceptibly annoying effect upon one of our quiet, elderly citizens on the dry of the discussion. He did not say much, but, judging from his expressive countenance, and the rapidity with which he chewed his tobacco, we conclude that if his thoughts on this fruitful subject could be translated into plain English and solidified, they would essentially dam the widest stream in all the country round.

By the showery wetness of last Sunday morning, many who had previously determined to attend the especially attractive June church meeting at Bulletsburg, which is held annually on the first Sunday in this month, were detained at home, and compelled to cork their wrath and disappointment in their own raging bosoms, and take whatever consolation there might be found in complacently admiring, by the aid of looking glasses, the gorgeous costumes provided and constructed for exhibition on this particular occasion. To see the sad expression on a dear girl's face, as she slowly consigns to the dark oblivion of a pasteboard box the "little love" of a hat which, but for the improper intervention of the rain, would have cut such a figure, and everlastingly smashed the matrimonial prospects of so many less fashion-favored fair ones that never-to-be-forgotten Sunday, was enough to break the heart of the most faithful devotee of fashion on earth.

MY NEIGHBOR.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" I am mute.
He lives across the way.
And plays upon the German flute
Some twenty hours a day.
Oh him I do not waste my labor,
Nor even try to love my neighbor.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" I am dumb.
She lives next door to me—
A single dame, with years o'ercome;
Her age is forty-three.
Ah! it were surely foolish labor
For me to try to love my neighbor.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" Heaven forfend!
He hath of gold galore,
And at usurious rates doth lend
Me small sums from his store.
Ah! wherefore should I squander labor,
Or waste my love on such a neighbor?

"Love thou thy neighbor!" Nay, not so;
This were too much to ask;
My heart with love is all aglow,
But finds a happier task.
Ah! not in vain my heart hath sought her;
You see? I love my neighbor's daughter.

How I Make Corn Fodder.

I have practiced planting corn for fodder for several years, and have always been successful. My plan is to plow deep and close, and get the land in the very best possible condition by harrowing and rolling, and plant about the middle of June with a corn planter. I go over my land, dropping three to five grains in a hill, fifteen to twenty inches apart in the row; then I turn about and straddle each row and drop as before, thus having my corn in rows two feet apart, and in hills fifteen to twenty inches apart in the row. I cultivate with a Thomas harrow and roller. When the corn gets too large for the harrow, it soon shades the ground and keeps down all the weeds. Now, for harvesting. I have my corn in hills and rows. The knife by hand is the most successful way to save it. I put twenty-four rows or hills square in a shock. First I count off twelve rows, and make my crotches to stack around by tying four hills together. Then I cut three rows on each side of my shock row and put them up in due form. Thus I go over my land cutting and setting up six rows to each shock row, and allow it to wilt and cure for several days, according to the weather. Then I commence where I first began, and cut and set up four rows on each side of my shock row, and so on over the land again. This time I tie the shock loosely with the wilted stock of the first cutting, and very near the top. Again I let it wilt and cure a few days. Then I begin as before and cut the remaining five rows on each side and set them up, and tie soundly with wool twine, as near the top as I can, and the work is done; and if well done the fodder will keep good until May. When the season is good for corn, I have nubbins from two to four inches long, and good sound corn. I cut before there is any frost to hurt the fodder. Some of my neighbors follow my example till the corn is ready to cut; then they cut it with a mower or reaper, and undertake to cure it like hay, and they as often lose all as save any, and it is poor, sunburnt, bleached and molded when they are done. Corn planted in this manner will make the most and best feed that I can get off of land.—Correspondence Rural World.

The Texas Border Troubles.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Gen. Ord arrived here to-day to have a consultation with Gen. Sherman on the subject of the Texas border troubles, and to explain to the War Department the necessity of his being allowed to pursue marauders into Mexico. Gen. Ord said this evening that he would not receive any special instructions on the subject at present. The Administration will await the reply of the Mexican Government to the letter of Secretary Evarts on the subject. It desires to exhaust every peaceable effort with the Mexican Government before going further. Secretary Evarts' letter is of a very peremptory character. If the Mexican Government fails to comply with its demands, then orders will be given to Gen. Ord to cross the Rio Grande in pursuit of the border ruffians.

Gen. Ord and Gen. Sherman had a long talk with President Hayes this evening on the subject of the Mexican border troubles. It is feared by the President that the mere giving permission to Gen. Ord to cross the Rio Grande in pursuit of maraunders may cost more than the plan is worth. People who are advocating the Sonora scheme take advantage of the present situation to press other plans upon the President. It has been suggested to him that our government should acquire the north provinces of Mexico by treaty or seizure. This would leave the mountain range as the boundary between Mexico and our possessions. Then, by stationing a few troops at the passes, absolute safety would be secured, more perfect than ten regiments could give to the present border.

THERE is no man in this world who knows which side of his bread is buttered better than Senator Morton. He knows that he dare not assail Mr. Hayes, for with one word Mr. Hayes could call the whole Democrat party, and at least half the Republican party to his support, and in the struggle that would ensue, Senator Morton would be ground to powder. The Presidential office is a great force in our politics, and the Indiana Senator is too discreet to come in contact with it.—St. Louis Republican.

The Effect of Tobacco on the Human System.

In the fourth annual report of the Michigan State Board of Health, Dr. Scott relates something new in the influence of tobacco on the human system, as follows:

"There has come under my notice for several years, but more particularly during the last two years, a kind of rheumatic condition of the walls of the chest. The patient complains of a dull, heavy pain in the chest walls. The disease, in a large majority of cases, is confined to the left side. The pain is circumscribed, and limited to a space of not more than two inches in diameter, just below and a little to the left of the left nipple. At times the pain is very severe, and always constant day and night, when the patient is awake. I have investigated the disease to some extent, and find it to be more common among tobacco users, especially those who use the weed to excess. Patients suffering from this complaint invariably come to their physician with the belief that they have heart trouble. I have not found signs of organic lesion in any of the cases that I have examined, but there does exist in some of them what might be called 'irritable heart.' I am convinced that the greater number of these cases are the result of intemperance, either in the use of tobacco or other stimulants, for the reason that, when the patient abstains from the use of them for a short time, his pain ceases and his condition improves. In one case, where the patient abstained from the use of tobacco for thirteen months, the pain entirely ceased; but at the end of this period the gentleman recommenced the use of tobacco, and after three weeks' use the old pain returned with all its severity. I am certain that quite a number in this vicinity are receiving treatment for heart disease, when, if they would reform in tobacco using, they would speedily recover."

Trouble in California.

Owing to the unprecedented drouth in California the present season, it is stated that the wheat crop in many localities will be nearly or quite a total failure. During the winter months as much rain falls in California as our lands receive during the entire year, and after April they get no rain until the next season. The consequence is that now the soil is arid, and there is no hope—even if it is not already to late—for rain for months to come. The farmers of the San Joaquin Valley have raised wheat almost exclusively, and have tried to cultivate too much land. They have become entangled in debt, and nearly all the land in the valley is heavily mortgaged. In putting in the spring crop the farmers were obliged to borrow the money used in the purchase of seed and the payment of labor. The grain grew two or three inches in height, and then, the rain ceasing, it withered and dried and the land is now barren. Intelligent men who are conversant with the facts prophesy that nine-tenths of the farmers will fail and be utterly ruined this year. It is almost certain that hundreds and hundreds will starve to death unless sustained by charity. In the north part of the State—the Napa Valley particularly—the chances are there will be a reasonably good crop. The farmers there irrigate their land, though only in a small way. Irrigation is too expensive, costing from $20 to $40 per acre, and is therefore practiced in only a fractional portion of the State. Instead of shipping grain this year, California will not raise more than enough to support her own population. These facts are not generally known, and while train-loads of people are leaving California with what they are able to escape with, there is yet a strong tide of emigration from the East.

Exit the Grasshoppers.

Scientists join the weather clerk in pronouncing the new crop of grasshoppers a failure. Professor Thomas of the Government Entomological Commission, who spent considerable time in Minnesota investigating the subject, recently informed a newspaper interviewer that after a thorough examination of the breeding grounds in that State he had found many localities where there were large deposits of eggs but no grasshoppers hatched out. He also reports that no locusts are heard from in the far northwest, from which region they have heretofore swarmed.

From these and other facts Professor Thomas draws the conclusion that the days of grasshopper invasions are numbered, and henceforth no trouble of that kind sufficient to effect the general prosperity of the West need be apprehended. The Professor is in Nebraska at the present time, securing data concerning the habits, dates of arrivals and the best means of destroying the pestiferous insects now hatching in that State. By some seemingly strange, but probably perfect natural cause, the grasshopper epidemic has nearly run its course.

Just as we receive this the Hawk Eye comes along with the following confirmation:

"Was prayer answered? The people of Minnesota observed last Thursday as a day of fasting and prayer in view of the threatened grasshopper scourge, and the very next day that fierce snow storm and cold rain which descended from the Rocky Mountains and swept across Dacota and Nebraska fell as a bosom of destruction upon the young locusts and slaughtered them in countless millions."

The Voluntary Principle.

They are discussing the subject of complete disestablishment of the Church in Scotland. This country, as always when the subject comes up, is appealed to for testimony against the necessity of establishments. The following statements, which we find in a Scotch paper, will be read with interest here as well as there:

"Without tithes, glebes, church rates, or any other public support, the United States contained, in 1872, 72,450 Christian churches or other religious organizations, and 63,082 religious edifices, containing 21,665,062 sittings; while the property possessed by the several religious bodies was valued at £70,896,716. The accommodation required in places of worship for the whole population is estimated at 58 per cent., and it is provided at 56 per cent. The churches in the large cities are surprisingly numerous, handsome and expensive. Very few of the smaller places are without a church or churches, and in new settlements the church or school-house, or one building to serve as both, is erected in advance of the population, as one of the first necessities of life. It is alleged that Voluntaryism cares for the well-to-do classes, but neglects the poor; but while America has nothing but Voluntaryism, the poor are as well cared for religiously as in our own land. 'During my journey,' writes Mr. Comingsby, a working engineer, 'I made the acquaintance of a much larger number of pious workmen, especially among native-born Americans, than I think it would be possible to do in the same time in England. Missionary and Evangelistic agencies abound, and are vigorous and aggressive. All the religious and benevolent organizations of the old world have their counterparts in the new. While the public day school is not relied upon for the religious instruction of the young, the Sunday-schools contain five millions of scholars, taught by three-quarters of a million of teachers, both drawn from all classes of society."

Warning to Literary Men.

There is a great subject of profound interest which ought to be noted from other than a professional or scientific—rather, indeed, from a social—point of view. It cannot have escaped observation that, with in the past few years, a dire mortality has taken place among the most brilliant and promising of our younger race of literary men—if that odious phrase must be employed. Names need not be mentioned—but they will recur to many memories—of men who have been cut off when life was in its meridian, and when their genius, or talent, was in the full prospect of triumph. Now, in the last century this would have been attributed to debauchery, drinking, and other idle habits of disolute, spendthrift, unscrupulous life. But it is not so at the present day. The evil is that men of excitable intellectual temperaments, belonging to little exclusive clubs, never care for rest, turn their nights into days, revel on strong coffee and strong tea, and go to bed in the dawn, with a swim of conversation in their heads. It would be safe to say, in respect to some of the late melancholy cases, that this is the true story of them all. Unnatural lives are led, and the penalty is paid in an early, untimely, disaster-bringing death. Of course it is painful to point a moral of the kind; yet the truth of it will not be denied anywhere, and the multitude of examples cannot possibly be passed by without commiseration. We hear of men writing with wet towels wrapped about their heads, smoking themselves into excitement over their tasks, almost imitating the sad excess of De Quincy, and doing in the dawn the work they should have done in the evening; but does no responsibility attach to this?—London Echo.

A Crusade Against Finery.

The Chelmsford (England) Newsman published an account of a strange and distressing scene which took place a few Sundays ago in the old parish church of Great Tey. The Vicar, the Rev. Roger Burton, after giving out his text, intimated that he had been very much grieved of late to observe the increasing taste of his parishioners for jewelry and fine raiment. "After mature deliberation," he said, "he had drawn up some regulations for the Sunday-school, providing that no collars or cuffs, artificial flowers, feathers, brooches, lockets or ear-rings were to be worn." Not content with prohibiting these vanities in the Sunday-school Mr. Burton next began to criticise in an unfavorable spirit the dress of his grown up hearers, whereat the hardened sinners became very excited, and a great many people left the church, banging the doors, and using strong language." This was, indeed, "a strange and distressing scene;" but that was not all. Mrs. Burton was equally resolved to rebuke human pride and performed prodigies in the Sunday-school. One child had a small penny locket on, which Mrs. Burton tore off. Another child was put on a form, and the other children told to go round and laugh at the peacock. Eight big girls were turned out because they had sprays of flowers on their hats. But the heroic lady was baffled by the cowardly tactics of the enemy. The teachers and scholars rushed out of the school, and, being joined by the older boys and girls and their mothers, the scene of hooting and yelling was painful in the extreme. All the more painful that this parish has hitherto always been noted for peaceful and respectable inhabitants.

A CAT-ASTROPHE.

I sat one night beside a blue-eyed girl—
The fire was out, and so, too, was her mother;
A feeble flame around the lamp did curl,
Making faint shadows, blending in each other.
'Twas nearly 12 o'clock, too, in November;
She had a shawl on, also, I remember.

Well, I had been to see her every night
For thirteen days, and had a sneaking notion
To pop the question, thinking all was right,
And once or twice had made an awkward motion
To take her hand, and stammered, coughed and stuttered,
But, somehow, nothing to the point had uttered.

I thought this chance too good now to be lost;
I hitched my chair up pretty close beside her,
Drew a long breath and then my legs I crossed,
Bent over, sighed, and for five minutes eyed her.
She looked as if she knew what next was coming,
And with her feet upon the floor was drumming.

I didn't know how to begin or where—
I couldn't speak—the words were always choking;
I scarce could move—I seemed tied to my chair—
I hardly breathed—'twas awfully provoking!
The perspiration from each pore came oozing,
My heart and brain and limbs their power seemed losing.

At length I saw a brindle tabby cat
Walk purring up, inviting me to pat her;
In idea cause electric-like at that—
My doubts, like summer clouds, began to scatter.
I seized on tabby, though a scratch she gave me,
And said, "Come, Puss, ask Mary if she'll have me."

'Twas done at once—the murder now was out.
The thing was all explain'd in half a minute;
She blushed, and, turning puss-cat about,
Said, "Pussy, tell him 'yes!'" her foot was in it!
The cat had thus saved me my category,
And here's the catastrophe of my story.

Boyhood Memories of Burlington in 1822.

From the Saturday News.

About the year 1820, Thomas Campbell, formerly a Presbyterian Minister, of the Seceder Church in the North of Ireland, moved with his family from Western Pensylvania to Burlington, Kentucky, where he engaged in teaching school in the log house described in my last article. He was a man of advanced ideas, possessing a mind highly cultivated and remarkable for his devotion and piety. Burlington was fortunate at that early day, when men of learning were not so numerous in Kentucky as now, in securing the services of one so wise, so good, and whose character was so pure, to instruct her youth and prepare them for the duties devolving upon them in after life. Thomas Campbell was the father of the distinguished Alexander Campbell, a man widely known in the religious world, who by the propagation of his views has produced the most profound impression on the public mind, not only in America, but in Europe. Since the days of Wesley no religious movement has spread so rapidly or commanded so much attention. It is but a little over half a century since its organization was established, and now numbers nearly one million people, having under their charge some of the best institutions of learning in the country, the University at Lexington (including in its corporation the farm so long the home of Henry Clay), being one of the best. Kentucky became early identified with the organization, and many of her purest minds and noblest citizens gave it their cordial support.

The school at Burlington was liberally patronized by the people of Boone County. Among its pupils I remember Julia and Lucinda, the accomplished daughters of Colonel Johnson, of North Bend. The former married ——— Bush, and lived in Rising Sun, where they were very much esteemed. The latter married Omer Tousey, of Lawrenceburg. John and Owen Kirtley, also from North Bend, whose father was about this time elected Sheriff of the county. Charles and Alfred Chambers, Joel, Elijah and William Kirtley, with their sister, a charming little girl, who afterward married Dr. John Percival.

I remember a stranger who once visited Burlington and remained for a time. He was a man of fine appearance, good address, and attracted much attention. This was Fuller, who was soon after hung at Lawrenceburg for killing Warren. The manner in which he perpetrated the deed, and his conduct while in prison under sentance of death, proved him to be a man of strong nerve and controlled by a sense of what the world falsely calls honor. Offended with Warren for interfering with a woman acquantance, Fuller deliberately invited his victim into a room, locked the door, and, drawing from his pocket a pair of pistols and placing them on a table, said: "Take your choice and defend yourself." This invitation was declined, when the doomed man's soul was instantly sent into eternity. Fuller was arrested, indicted, tried and sentenced to be hung.

Led by a boyish curiosity, in company with William Morrison, I walked to Lawrenceburg and witnessed the execution. On our arrival we found the village excited over a rumor that Kentuckians were going to attempt a rescue of the prisoner. Sheriff Tom Long had ordered out the militia, who were armed with clubs. The hour of execution had come. With apparent composure and firm step Fuller ascended the scaffold, the trap was sprung, the rope broke, and the scene that followed was indescribable. Women screamed, strong men trembled, and the Sheriff shouted, "Charge!" The militia, with upraised clubs, stood amazed. They saw no enemy coming to the rescue to charge upon, but they did see a prostrate and half-strangled human being, and heard him plead for mercy. They saw one who but a moment before in the prime of life and vigor of manhood they admired, not for the crime he had committed, but for the fine manly appearance he presented. The authorities were paralyzed for the moment, but in the midst of the confusion there was one who, by his admirable presence of mind, rendered important service in the cause of humanity. This was Dr. John Percival, who, with the agility of a squirrel, and the courage of a true and brave man, ascended one of the uprights which supported the beam to which the rope was fastened, and sliding out, balancing himself on his breast, made fast again the rope, which was handed to him by those below. Thus the sentence of the law was fully executed. For this humane and heroic act Dr. Percival was severely censured, but very unjustly. He was an acquaintance at least, if not a friend of Fuller. I had often seen them together, and doubtless a kind and sympathetic feeling for the doomed one prompted him to the act. Fuller had many friends who interested themselves in his behalf, and he vainly hoped up to the last moment for a pardon. It was rumored that while in jail, and even after his conviction, he left his prison and took regular baths in the Ohio River at his pleasure. I am able to partly confirm this.

Within the last few years, and but a few years before his death, I had the pleasure of a visit from Dr. E. D. C., of Hamilton County., O., a gentleman with whom some of your readers were acquainted, and whose statement would not be questioned by them. In talking over our boyhood days, reference was made to the execution of Fuller when he related the following: "My father, who resided in Harrison, had occasion to send me to Lawrenceburg on business, and being young and inexperienced, gave me a letter to his friend, Dr. ———, who received me kindly, inviting me to remain that night with him in a room adjoining his office. During the night we were awakened, and going to the door found Fuller in company with two others. A short conversation followed, which referred to my presence. Secrecy was required, when we went to the river, and after Fuller had taken a bath, returned to the jail, from whence we returned to our room. JAMES TAIT.

Habeas Corpus Case.

Chas. McCarthy was brought out of the State Prison on Saturday last under a writ of habeas corpus, issued by and returned before Judge R. A. Thomson. McCarthy had been tried and sentenced to three years in the State Prison by the Pendleton Criminal Court. After the adjournment of the Pendleton court a week or more, court began in Harrison County, and it appeared there was also an indictment in that county against McCarthy for a felony; whereupon the Judge directed the Sheriff of Harrison to go over to Pendleton, get McCarthy and bring him to Harrison for trial on the indictment there. The Sheriff went and brought him, as directed, and McCarthy pleaded guilty; and, without the intervention of a jury, as it would seem from the judgment, was sentenced again to three years in the State Penitentiary, to begin after the expiration of the Pendleton sentence. Now McCarthy, having served out the Pendleton County sentence, raised the question, through his attorney, Ira Julian, as to the jurisdiction of the Harrison Criminal Court to try him, as was done—

First—Because, having been committed to the custody of the Sheriff of Pendleton to be taken to the Penitentiary, there was no authority for removing him then to Harrison for trial.

Second—Because it did not appear from the judgment that there was any jury impaneled to try him in Harrison, but judgment was pronounced by the court only.

Judge Thompson released the prisoner, and he was discharged from the Penitentiary.—Frankfort Yeoman.

THE Detroit Post says of four American statesmen:

There's young Don Cameron, and old Sim. Cameron,
Who's young Don Cameron's dad,
And young Don Cameron's a pretty fair Cameron,
But old Sim. Cameron's bad.

And there's B. F. Butler, and Geo. H. Butler,
Who's nephew to Butler the first,
And B. F. Butler's a bad enough Butler,
But Geo. H. Butler's the worst.

Never Be a Government Clerk.

Robert Ingersoll is credited with saying the following, which, whether it came from the man eloquent or not, is worthy of him:

"If there is a young man in this audience, I beg of him, "never take a clerkship in the city of Washington." Don't you do it. Never do you put yourself where you have to duck your head and take off your hat to everybody else. Don't you do it. Don't put your happiness—don't put your fortune—in the power of another man's breath. Don't you do it. You never will have any manhood; you never will have any real, square spunk; you can not have it; and you will lose confidence, and you will begin to think, if you can not have a regular payment each month of $94 65, that you can not possibly make a living in this world. It will take all the pluck out of you. I beg of you not to discount your future. I beg of every young man, have the courage to take what comes, let it be feast or let it be famine; but don't sell the gift that fortune may have for you for a petty salary of $60 or $100 per month. Don't do it. Go West. I would rather have forty acres of land and a log house with one room—yes, and the woman I love, and some lattice work over the window, so that the sunlight would fall checkered on the baby in the cradle, and a few hollyhocks at the corner of the house—I would rather have that, and a nice path leading down to the spring, where I could go and hear the water gurgling; I would rather live there and die there than be a clerk of any government on earth."

HON. J. C. S. BLACKBURN made a speech here at County Court, day before yesterday, giving account of his stewardship. He accepted the occasion in the outset of his speech to pay a just compliment to the memory of the late Judge Hawes; an appointment to speak in Owenton the day of the funeral had kept him from being present here. Mr. Blackburn was rather severe on the Democrats who looked stamina to stand up and place Mr. Tilden in the Presidential chair, stating as his honest opinion that it only required a firm display of courage at the proper time to secure our rights. He had no fears at any time of a war, believing then as he believed now, that it was a big game of bluff that was being played, and the Radicals out-bluffed us. He had no thanks to return to Mr. Hayes for removing the troops from the South, as his de facioship knew he could never secure an appropriation from Congress for his army until the South was liberated. He was like a man who did justice at the muzzle of a pistol, and deserved no credit for doing right when he was forced to do it by the Democratic Congress. He thanked God and a Democratic House for the relief of the South, and not Mr. Hayes. Mr. B. continued his remarks for an hour, and the vast crowd that had gathered without any public notice were delighted with his whole speech. It is safe to say that the Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn has given the utmost satisfaction to his constituency, and they would be very much pleased if he should be chosen Speaker of the next House.—Paris True Kentuckian.

ANY one would suppose that the employment of sewing was the most peaceful occupation in the world, and yet it is absolutely horrifying te hear ladies talk of stillettoes, bodkins, gatherings, surgings, hemmings, gorgings, cuttings, whippings, lacings, cuffings, and bastings. A MERCHANT in a provincial town in Scotland had a habit of saying "It might hae been waur" to every thing that was told him, however sad the story might be. "How could it hae been waur?" "If it had been a reality."

A WIDOW about forty years of age, living on High street, and having the reputation of being one of the meekest and humblest ladies in Detroit, pulled hair with a servant girl before breakfast the other morning, clubbed two boys from the gate before eight o'clock, and had a fuss with a neighbor about a parrot ere the clock struck nine, run a peddler out of the yard at ten, "sassed" two of the sanitary police at eleven, and at noon she threw ashes over the alley fence on a man who was swearing at a bally horse. During the afternoon she was engaged in working the motto, "Let thy light shine."—Detroit Free Press.

I've spoke about this often enough, and if there ain't enough women around here to mend one shirt, I'm going to sleep in a coffee sack."—Hawkeye.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

BURLINGTON, KY., JUNE 7.

MY NEIGHBOR.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" I am mute.
He lives across the way,
And plays upon the German flute
Some twenty hours a day.
On him I do not waste my labor,
Nor even try to love my neighbor.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" I am dumb!
She lives next door to me—
A single dame, with years o'ercome;
Her age is forty-three.
Ah! it were surely foolish labor
For me to try to love my neighbor.

"Love thou thy neighbor!" Heaven knows
He hath of gold galore,
And at usurious rates doth lend
Me small sums from his store.
Ah! wherefore should I squander love on yes-
Or waste my love on such a neighbor?

"Love thou thy neighbor!" Nay, nay, nay!
This were too much to ask;
My heart with love is all aglow
But finds a happier task.
Ah! not in vain my heart hath room
You see? I love my neighbor.

THE Turks and Montenegrins met, last week, and after a four days battle the Turks were forced to retreat, having lost in the fight about four thousand men, while the Montenegrins lost but about seven hundred. This battle was fought at Duga Pass, and the Montenegrins were well protected by the natural advantages of the ground occupied by them. The Russians attempted to cross the Danube last Saturday, near Giurgevo but were repulsed by the Turks who were guarding that point. The Russians' loss at that place was considerable.

SHOULD the crop the present season (but we have no grounds to suspicion such a thing) be a partial failure it would bear down on the farmers uncommonly hard, they having for several consecutive years been blessed with abundant harvests. This series of good crops has educated them to anticipate large crops of everything planted except wheat, which has principally been abandoned. One season which would reduce the crop to one-half would cast gloom over the entire country. In no section of the Union have the farmers been more liberally rewarded for their labor than in this.

IN Illinois it has been discovered that a band of horse thieves and a number of ministers were conducting a partnership business in horse-stealing. One of the ministers, a short time since, got up a revival meeting for the purpose of giving his confederates an opportunity to prosecute their branch of the partnership business. Two of the ministers were arrested and are now in jail in Havana. It is thought the members of this band are quite numerous in Illinois and Missouri.

WEEK before last, the faces of the farmers wore a covering of despair, caused by the dry weather which they predicted would extend through the crop season. When it commenced raining, their countenances brightened and continued radiant with approval of the weather till the prolonged raining commenced to be a source of annoyance to those who have decided that there has been sufficient rain for the present. The prophecy now comes up that preparations should be made to enjoy a wet summer. This is exactly in opposition to the prophecy of two weeks since.

THERE is no change in the prices of tobacco since last week. The rains during the past few days will, doubtless, start the tobacco toward market again, the trade somewhat enlivened. The following sales were reported last week:

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 9, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Dull, duller, dullest is written on the countenance of every commercial man we have met this week. It is said by many, there is less business with us just now than there was the first year of the late war. We are just now, as it were, betwixt and between two seasons, and we can not reasonably look for a revival of trade for the next sixty or ninety days, and those that can afford it are having their wardrobes repaired and replenished for a trip to some cool, shady rill, or some place where rich people do most congregate during the hot summer months. The writer, having no money himself, or friends that will lend to a poor man, expects to fight and sweat it out on this line if it takes all summer.

We have had a superabundance of rain this week, but it is not considered growing crops are injured to any extent as yet. Rain set in about dark last night, and rained all night and up to 12 m. to-day without intermission. But this afternoon we have a partly clear sky with a very cool breeze; so cool, indeed, that several of our neighbors have fire in their offices; so we hope the rain is about over, for the present, at least.

On next Thursday all of our city schools will close, and there will be about 35,000 urchins, and about 750 of that enterprising class of our citizens known as school-marms, turned loose on the community until about the 1st of September next. Our Normal School, also, closes to-day, and gives diplomas and certificates to about forty newly made teachers, most of whom will teach as soon as places are assigned them; and the School Board is bound to give them places for two years, if they exact it.

Our Board of City Assessors completed their labors for the year a few days since, and we find the value of taxable property in our city for the year 1877 as follows: $147,989,810 real property, and $33,234,530 personaly. Taxes assessed for the State, $726,302; for the schools, $898,955; for the city, $4,795,228; total, $6,419,497. The tax rates are: State, 40 cents on the $100; school, 50 cents; city, $1 90; total $2 80 on the $100. This is a decrease of 63½ cents on the $100 from last year, and no tax on the poor dog. We, however, suppose this to be a little more tax than the good people of your county would like to submit to, but as it is we will have to be satisfied with a reduction of 63½ cents on the $100.

The RECORDER of Thursday came to hand the next day, and we noticed what was done politically in your town on Monday last, but we had observed about the same in the Cincinnati Gazette, of Tuesday last. The last named paper stated that Messrs. Conner and Rouse had a clear track; but in this we think the Mr. Gazette man was simply mistaken, as we suppose, when election day comes, they will find my "choice," the "Hon. James L. Henderson," on the track, and in due season thereafter on his way to the seat of government. At least, we "speck so."

Our grand jury found indictments this week against one of our oldest and most highly respected merchants for obtaining some $14,000 on fraudulent warehouse receipts. It is to be hoped he will be able to show up things in a better light when the final trial comes, since for at least twenty-five years no man in this city bore a better character than the aforesaid individual, and we are loth to believe he is guilty, as the grand jury has so determined.

The trio of babies are alive and doing well, and Mr. and Mrs. Dean are happy.

We have not a case of suicide to report for the entire week.

Prices of grain remain about the same as for the past two weeks.

Yours truly, BOB A. LONG.

Education, Its Value, and the Duties of Teachers.

The following address was read by Prof. H. J. Foster upon the opening of the first session of the North Kentucky Teachers' Association, which convened in Covington Friday of last week:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I am about to pursue a course to-day that I have never yet done since I have been a public speaker—that is, reading my address. But perhaps this will be the better, as it may prevent a good deal of rambling on my part. Having, then, been assigned the opening address of this Association, I feel gratified that I am permitted to appear before you for the purpose of complying with the request made upon me by your committee. Allow me, this morning, fellow citizens, to congratulate you that you are the recipients of a Father's blessings, and in His kind providence permitted to meet together for the exchange of views on the great and important subject of education.

It is said this is an age of improvement—everything is onward and upward. Great changes have taken place in the last century. In almost every department of business improvements are being made. In one word, everything is now assuming a much more practical and beneficial tendency. During the nineteenth century agriculture, mechanic arts have been greatly improved, and information is conveyed from continent to continent with lightning speed. A great man of the nineteenth century once said: "In this age of invention the winds and the waves, the rivers and the deserts, the mountains and the valleys are made to yield to scientific and mechanical skill."

Just here an important question arises. What is the cause of all this? From what do all these have their origin? Why does the present century surpass all preceding ones? Is not the answer, my friends, to be found in the superior education of the present age? Of course, we refer to human agency—to what man has done, under the guidance of Divine Providence. Considering this question from a different and higher standpoint, we should attribute its origin to the rise and progress of Christianity. But our question does not refer to what God has done, but what has man done, under the light and influence of the Bible, to bring about this state of universal improvement and refinement? We answer, it is the superior education of the present century. Education is the grand and important mainspring of all the plans formed by human instrumentality for the elevation, refinement and improvement of the human race. It is the foundation of everything that tends to enrich, adorn and lift up poor frail and imperfect man.

Lift your eyes and survey this beautiful land of ours, and of what can we boast? Is it not our civil and political institutions? Annihilate all that is properly implied in the art of education, and would you not at once paralyze everything purchased by the blood of our forefathers? Yes, my friends, you would not only do this, but you would seal the Book of all Books—the Bible—and man would not only be a savage in disposition, but as ignorant of his origin as the beasts of the field. All wisdom and knowledge requisite to the happiness of man would be forever gone. The fountain of human happiness would be closed, and our beautiful land converted into a rude and dreary wilderness.

Now, then, if education is such a blessing, should we not be earnestly engaged in order to make it as general as possible. We do not, of course, expect to make every man a wise and great philosopher. There is a natural limit to the development and growth of all vegetable and animal matter. So there must be to the human mind. We can not create anything, but we can cultivate and polish the raw material. Take the metal of any description in its raw or natural state, and it is of very little use or advantage to man. But let the mechanic polish, or, if you please, educate it, and it at once becomes a useful and beneficial article to the human family. So with everything that is susceptible of development. It requires training, polishing and educating in order to its perfection. Just so with the infant man. Of all created things he is certainly the most wonderful. His body is from the earth, but God infuses into him, directly from Himself, a pure, intellectual principle; so that man stands pre-eminently above all created beings, endowed with an intellect susceptible of education, improvement and the most wonderful developments, when the proper means have been applied.

Now, then, in the justice and wisdom of the people of this great Commonwealth, they have given us a system by which every child between the age of six and twenty years can obtain a fair English education. And every parent should look to the education of his children, and avail himself of the advantages vouchsafed to him by those who had the interest and welfare of the child in view.

Realizing, as we do, that about seventy counties pay no revenue into the treasury, but are truly paupers, reporting about three hundred thousand children within the school age, and perhaps a great majority of these dependent entirely upon the common school system for an education, therefore it is right, just and appropriate at all times to uphold that system which has for its object the instruction and elevation of those just starting on life's mystical journey, many of whom have not yet entered upon its broad, rugged and boisterous highway.

Again, my friends, allow me to urge upon you the great importance of sustaining a general system of education, in order that these poor, little, unfortunate children may be lifted from ignorance and vice, and raised in the scale of learning and refinement, which will result in their happiness and usefulness as citizens, and be the means of reflecting honor upon this glorious old Commonwealth.

Mr. President, what would be the condition of this world to-day had education been entirely lost or no schools established as means for educating man, or no effort whatever had been made in this direction? Where would be the million and million of copies of the Bible that have been translated into the different languages of the earth, thereby revealing to man a perfect system of divine philanthropy, calculated to promote man's happiness in the fleshly state, and secure the eternal felicity to all who will believe and obey it.

In conclusion, let us all cultivate and educate our moral natures aright, and strive to understand and appreciate all the relations which we owe to God and one another, and the duties resulting from these relations. Let us not stop to consult that which is popular, but seek the right, and, when found, engage in it promptly and fearlessly.

Before I take my seat, allow me to extend to one and all a hearty welcome, inviting you to participate and co-operate with us during the sittings of this association.

THE greenback dollar of the fathers is fast becoming extinct through the skillful manipulations of the Treasury Department and Long John Sherman. At the present rate it is being devastated it will require a search warrant, with all the power of an army of Revenue officers behind it, to discover one for a cabinet of curiosities three months from this time. And yet they say the greenback was the best currency ever devised by the wit of mortal man.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

June 8th—To A. W. Smith and wife, a son. Webb is happiest.

Personal Mention.

C. G. INGRAM is one of the cleverest fellows in Missouri. To him we return thanks for Marshall papers.

GEO WHITE, who a short time since moved to Missouri with the intention of making that his home, returned last week, being dissatisfied with that country.

AT Big Bone, last Saturday, Messrs. G. V. Rouse and Reuben Conner, candidates for Representative, met as per appointment. We have been informed that they had a warm set-to in speech making, but what was the cause of the overplus of heat and wind we failed to ascertain.

THE matrimony market has been dull in Boone for some time. It has been so long since Clerk the issued a license he has almost forgotten where he keeps them.

To Florence and Back.

Last Saturday afternoon, while the Weather Clerk was called from labor to rest, mistaking the temporary suspension of business for a regular clear-off, in company with the popular and handsome Deputy Sheriff, E. E. Foster, we started for the quaint city of Florence. When we pulled out of Burlington, the sun, for the first time during several days, was shining gleefully upon the rich green carpet Naturo has so neatly spread over both hill and forest. Everything seemed to rejoice at the appearance of Old Sol after his many days' absence, and gave him a hearty welcome. The corn, which but a few days since was reported as wearing a sad look and a coat of yellow, had assumed a lively and healthy appearance, and seemed to bid defiance to both cut-worm and drought.

When we passed Florence X-Roads, we noticed quite a number of the neighboring farmers, who had congregated at that place for doing their week's trading and counseling about the probability of too much rain being the result of the wet spell then pending. At this place we noticed quite an excavation being made in the hill that backs up against the north of town (or the hill that town backs up again). This excavation we concluded was being made for town lots, or, in other words, they are digging for town lots at that place.

There is some work being done on the end of the turnpike next to Florence, spreading stone and opening ditches for the benefit of weather such as that of last week. Some of the stones, we noticed, spread over a surface of about four inches square.

When we arrived in Florence, it presented an uncommonly quiet appearance. The tide of travel that is generally passing that way at all hours of the day was apparently suspended. It was a quiet evening there. While at Florence, for the first time we heard of the sudden and unexpected disappearance of two of its citizens—Mr. Starbuck, the druggist, and Mr. Robinson, a shoemaker. Mr. Starbuck, it appears, had a day or two before gone to the city for the purpose of buying goods. Not returning in a reasonable time, the citizens began thinking something was wrong. His store was opened and the stock of goods found in its place. Time passed on and Starbuck did not put in an appearance. A messenger was dispatched to the city, where it was ascertained he had been negotiating for goods, but did not purchase, having left saying he wanted to collect some money before he purchased. The disappearance became more mysterious, and the anxiety of the people of Florence to ascertain his whereabouts increased. Mr. W. Y. Crigler, knowing where Mr. Starbuck's brother resides, wrote him informing him of the matter. The brother came to Florence to assist in unraveling, if possible, the mystery, but at this writing (Tuesday noon) nothing has been developed leading to the probable whereabouts of the missing man. Mr. Starbuck had been in business in Florence but a short time, and was liked by all who know him. He owed no bills in the town, and therefore it can not be said he left to avoid paying his just debts.

The shoemaker, it was generally thought, absconded to rid himself of paying a board bill and other indebtedness contracted while in Florence. His departure is shrouded with unfavorable circumstances, and one or two parties are counted as losers by aiding him in setting up his shop. What amount Robinson fleeced his creditors for we did not ascertain.

The firm of Wagstaff & Cantler was up to its ears in work, but reports money one of the scarcer commodities.

Col. Milt Hamilton was upon the streets in the best of humor. The Colonel is certainly not "deadening aeross the line?"

The return trip was considerably enlivened by a two hours' shower, it having been dry weather about that length of time.

GEO. SLEET, present Sheriff, and, of late, a married man, has been, during his honeymoon, enjoying the measles. We have not been informed how George has been, but, under the circumstances, expect he was quite sick. There is one consolation; a person is not apt to have the measles more than once, George.

WE have heard it repeatedly asserted during the past few days that a young gentleman residing but a few miles from town, would, on the 15th, lead his affianced to the matrimonial altar. Up to the time of going to press we were not able to ascertain whether or not he is guilty of committing matrimony.

WE acknowledge the reception of an invitation to attend the strawberry festival given by the Temperance in Petersburg last Thursday evening. The "invite" came to hand after the time the delicious strawberries were being served.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Special Correspondence for the Recorder.]

COVINGTON STOCK YARDS, June 11.

Report of the Covington Live Stock Market for the week ending June 11, 1877:

CATTLE—The receipts for the past week were moderate and the demand good, shipping cattle selling from 5½c. to 6c. per lb. Butchers' stuff is selling from 3½c. to 5½c. per lb. Milch Cows—None on the market. Veal calves sold from 5½c. to 6½c. per lb.

SHEEP—Supply short, and sold readily at from 5c. to 6c. per lb.

LAMBS—Supply liberal, and sold quick at from 5c. to 6½c. per lb.

HOGS—Supply in excess of demand, and the market ruled dull at prices ranging from 3¾ to 4¼c per lb.

W. M. CONNER.

THE weather being favorable, there is no doubt that the Masonic Celebration under the auspices of the Burlington Lodge, on the 23d inst., will be an immense affair. Invitations have been extended to all Lodges in this and Kenton counties, as well as to several Lodges in the neighboring cities of Delhi, Ohio; Lawrenceburg, Aurora and Rising Sun, Ind. Members of the different committees have put their shoulders to the wheel, and arrangements for the different kinds of entertainment are progressing rapidly. The present indications are the crowd in attendance that day will eclipse any gathering ever known in the history of Burlington.

THE 1st Monday in July the bounty fund case will again be before the County Court.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Florence.

Mr. Mont Swetnam has filed his petition in bankruptcy. Mr. Lucien Stephens is the largest creditor—amount nearly $10,000. He is secured by a lien upon the farm on which Mr. Swetnam resides, which formerly belonged to him. Mr. Swetnam's total liabilities foot up nearly $23,000, part of which is secured. Those who are not secured will fare badly as there is not much to gouround.

Bishop Toebbe came out, last Thursday, from the city to administer the rite of confirmation. He was met on the pike about a mile below town by a cavalry procession of some fifty members of his church and escorted to town by them. He confirmed about thirty children, who were beautifully dressed for the occasion. At night he informed the congregation of his intention to change their pastor to Newport, after which Father Bent delivered his farewell address, thanking the congregation for their many kind actions toward him since he had been their pastor. During the address most of the congregation was in tears. There was a strong pressure brought upon him to make no change but he would not relent. Rev. Father Murney, of Georgetown, will be sent here.

Petersburg.

The most pleasant event of last week was the strawberry and ice cream supper given by the Murphyites of this place. It was a complete success in every respect, and, notwithstanding the hall was crowded with ladies and gentlemen, everyone present showed his or her appreciation of the good things provided by a hearty attempt to annihilate them. There was enough left, however, to have a pretty fair auction next day. A number of handsome bouquets were presented, calling for various speeches by way of acknowledgement, and a general compliment to the Society.

We are sorry to be compelled to believe that our old friend, General Rice, will not serve as United States Senator, but as that reliable old document, the Cincinnati Enquirer, says it is a fact, we have no alternative but to give it credence.

Mr. W. H. Grant, who lives near this town, sustained the severest loss one can have in this world by the death of his wife last Sunday morning. She had only been seriously sick about six days, and her death was a surprise to the whole community. She was a daughter of Armpstead Willis, who lived near Union, in this county, and is the eldest of several sisters, who survive her. The bereaved husband and family are truly left in great distress, for, although there are two daughters in the family, both are married and housekeeping, and the question of what to do is a perplexing one indeed. The sad reality of those expressive lines by Park Benjamin sweeps upon us at a moment like this with a sorrowful, yet softening, influence:

"The departed, the departed, they visit us in dreams,
And glide above our memories like shadows over streams;
But when the cheerful lights of home in radiant luster burn,
The departed, the departed, can never more return."

Bellevue.

The candidates for Representative were before us, according to appointment. First on the floor was 'Squire Conner, who seemed to touch lightly on the stock and dog laws, from the fact that he was impressed with the idea that a committee had been chosen to draft said laws and bring them before the people at the coming election. We were a member of a meeting on the 4th inst., called to take some action in regard to the stock law, but failed to hear anything about a dog law being drafted. If there is any truth in the matter, please inform us, Mr. Editor. Next was the gentleman with his fox hounds, who explained himself fully on all the different questions agitating the minds of the people. He soon brought his opponent to the floor to take a position in regard to the dog law. Capt. Terrill followed with a few remarks, expressing his heartfelt gratitude for the kindness and generosity shown him during the canvass. Last, though not least, was Dr. Terrill, sen., of Petersburg. He is very much in favor of a person's taking a position and working. He says while his brother was in the canvass he, of course, worked for him, and commanded others to come unto him, "like Mahomet with the mountain; but since they would not, he, like Mahomet, is going to the mountains and stay there until after the election."

Freiburg & Co. have recently taken away from our wharf the last of 10,500 bushels of corn bought some time since at 50 cents per bushel.

Crops generally look well in this vicinity.

Found—One pair of white morocco baby shoes and one pair of striped hose, near the junction of the Petersburg, Bellevue and Aurora Ferry roads. The owner will get the same by calling at A. Corbin's store, Bellevue, Ky. MICAWBER.

[In the meeting to which our correspondent refers, the dog law was not mentioned. The stock law was the only matter entertained by that meeting.—ED.]

BURLINGTON, KY., JUNE 14.

FORGET THEE!

Forget thee! If to dream by night,
And muse on thee by day—
If all the worship, deep and wild,
A poet's heart can pay—
If prayers, in absence, breathed for thee,
To heaven's protecting power—
If winged thoughts that flit to thee,
A thousand in an hour—
If busy fancy blending thee
With all my future lot—
If this thou call'st "forgetting," thou
Indeed shalt be forgot.

Forget thee! Bid the forest birds
Forget their sweetest tune!
Forget thee! Bid the sea forget
To swell beneath the moon!
Bid the thirsty evening flower forget
To drink refreshing dew;
Thyself forget thine own dear land
And its mountains wild and blue;
Forget each old, familiar face,
Each long remembered spot;
When these things are forgot by thee,
Then thou shalt be forgot.

Keep, if thou wilt, thy maiden peace
Still calm and fancy free,
For God forbid thy gladsome heart
Should grow less glad for me;
Yet, while that heart is still unwon,
Oh! bid not mine to rove,
But let it nurse its humble faith
And uncomplaining love.
If these, preserved for patient years,
At last avail me naught,
Forget me, then, but ne'er believe
That thou can'st be forgot!

Home Talk to Farmers.

It is well known that the gardener who owns a five-acre lot, well tilled, close to a large city, is the master of an independence and ultimate fortune, his profits being larger and his sales more steady than those of one who tills a good-sized farm in the backwoods remote from market. Agricultural profits are accordingly intimately connected with population; the products of the soil being valuable in proportion to the number of consumers who are accessible in short time, at little cost. And the home work for Kentucky, with her large territory, to do at present, is to give her farmers, miners and lumber men, in counties now so distant from market that production is almost profitless for want of consumers, ready access to the thickly settled districts and the counties of population and consumption. Considering that Kentucky entered the Union on the heels of its formation, and that in respect to the personal character of the early settlers her start was an unusually favorable and promising one, one must be amazed at the great lack of good roads, turnpikes and railways in her borders, and at the fact that many counties naturally capable of high production and rich in the elements of trade, above and beneath the surface of the earth, are practically as remote from market as though they were locked up in a secluded nook in the Rocky Mountains. In all the rich region lying outside of some half dozen so-called Blue-grass counties, not a turnpike exists worthy of the name. The dirt roads except in favorable seasons, are traveled with heavy loads at the risk of continual damages to teams and wagons, and the farmers lose enough money in the aggregate, every year, by their inability to take advantage of the fluctuations in the markets, to build a turnpike from one boundary of the State to the other. It is useless to talk of Kentucky improvement unless this serious defect be supplied. The farmers must take this subject up and devise means for supplying it. The city gardener on his five-acre lot accumulates a handsome independence, simply because he is close to market. The farmers in the interior counties make less money on two hundred acres because they are remote from market. Railroads and turnpikes will shorten the distance between himself and his customer greatly and bring him close to market. His loss now every year is greater than the subscription which he would have to make to construct a good road. In this connection the facts developed by Professor Shaler's report, and the pamphlet of Col. R. H. Fitzhugh on The Resources of Kentucky, Mineral, Agricultural and Forest, and How to Develop Them, are of practical value and worth far more to Kentucky farmers than any number of partizan speeches and pamphlets. All the region north of us is scamed with trade channels of every description, while over the larger portion of this State turnpikes and railroads are known by name only. The consequence is that a Fayette farm will bring one hundred dollars an acre cash more readily than one in the Green River region would bring one-third that price, one time, although the crops of the latter are more valuable.—Louisville Commercial.

COVINGTON has more lawyers than all of the Territories of the United States combined, and about as many as there are in the entire State of Vermont. There may be more lawyers in Covington than are needed, or that make any money out of the practice; but the profession has its allurements. It is the only avenue to a good many public offices. Judges of all grades, as well as Commonwealth, County and City Attorneys must of necessity be lawyers. In addition, many persons believe that nobody but a lawyer ought to be sent to Congress or the State Legislature. Every lawyer thinks he can improve existing laws; hence much of the tinkering of the statutes. Pretty much all of them have expanded notions about salaries and fees and additional courts.—Ticket.

Sensible Talk.

From the Henderson News.

On last Wednesday morning about sunrise a case of justifiable homicide occurred within the walls of our county jail. The news of this distressing case has been scattered with the unusual velocity attained by such cases, and of course with the usual rounds of error. In short, about the time above mentioned, Mr. Whitehead was called by Mr. Totten, from the jail, with a request to have some of his (Totten's) dirty clothing washed, at the same time exhibiting a large size paper flour sack, which appeared to be filled with something. Totten, on some trivial excuse, was admitted to the ante-room of the jail, and in a few moments drew from his sack an iron bar 2ft. 9in. in length, with which he struck at Whitehead, inflicting a dangerous wound just above his forehead, leaving a gash about 3½ inches in length. Mr. W. also received a heavy blow on the back of his right elbow which caused great pain in the shoulder. At a lucky moment Mr. Whitehead pushed Totten on the opposite side of the room and quickly siezed a pistol from his bed, with which he fired. Totten immediately dropped the iron bar, exclaiming, "you have killed me," rushed back through the same door at which he had entered, from thence up stairs and expired. Mr. Whitehead was weakened greatly by the blow received, and states that he does not know why he did not keep on firing.

The pistol was not a derringer, as has been stated, but was a five shooter, with the brand "Reliance." The bar used by Totten was obtained from one of the jail beds, which was used as a prop.

Totten, it will be remembered has been in jail only a short while, being arrested on a charge of passing counterfeit money.

Mr. Whitehead had a high fever for a day or two, but we are happy to state is now up and getting along well.

Mr. W. has the sympathy of whole community, as the verdict of the jury shows. Maj. Stone summoned a jury, which returned the following verdict:

"We of the jury find the dead body before us as that of G. W. Totten, a prisoner in the jail of Henderson Co., and that he weighed about 160 or 170 pounds, and is about 30 or 35 years old, about six feet high, and that he came to his death about sunrise, on the 30th day of May, 1877, from a pistol shot wound in the right breast, inflicted by Wm. A. Whitehead, deputy jailer, in self-defense and in discharge of his duty as deputy jailer.

Care of Cattle.

Very few will dispute that if it pays to keep live stock, the profits will be in proportion to the management of it; therefore, anyone would suppose, on first thinking of the subject, surely every stock raiser will have the very best attention paid that can possibly be contrived. Is it so? Alas! no. In every herd, in every flock, there are animals of the same age which differ in a great degree in their aptitude to carry flesh and in milking properties; also in the flock, the difference in the weight and quality of the fleece, as well as the contrast in mutton qualities, will be very great, and all these characteristics require a watchful and intelligent mind to note the cause of every peculiarity, so that weeding out or judicious counteraction may be resorted to.

A man who excels in the management of cattle has studied the disposition and habits of animals, and understands what kind of food suits them best at every stage of their existence, and how to treat them at all seasons of the year and under every circumstance, so that he has no sickness, excepting of such a kind as no human foresight could have prevented. Attention to cattle will pay, at all events, and if owner and attendant are both skillful in the science of breeding, so as to produce superiority in shape and constitution in the descendants, by the judicious mating of the parents, as well as in bringing every generation nearer perfection by forcing every good trait, success will follow to a greater extent. —Country Gentleman.

To a gentleman who called upon him recently, the President said that he had decided to adopt the Jeffersonian doctrine of changing all foreign Ministers who had been in office four years. In reading some of Jefferson's works he found this doctrine set forth at length, and it met with his unhesitating approval, and would now constitute a part of the policy of his Administration. "No American citizen," said the President, "ought to serve his country in a foreign land longer than four years, and he ought to be content to return to his country at the expiration of that term of service." The President said further that there would be no exception to this rule.—Evening Post.

THE most earnest Republican opponent of the President's policy could ask for no more powerful presentation of his case, no more lucid explanation of his motives, than are contained in Senator Morton's letter. The effect of that letter must be to intensify, rather than to modify, the repugnance which is felt within Republican lines to a policy that conscience can not approve nor consistency support. Was this intended by the subtle politician of Indiana? Who can fathom the workings of a politician's mind? The apology succeeds the arraignment, and is weak, indeed. —Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Avoiding Sunstroke.

The Board of Health of this city has issued a circular on the subject of sunstroke, which has been printed in English and German, and is to be circulated through the city, especially among the laboring classes. To an extract from the circular we add a word of preface of our own, which is that nothing is more important in the summer season, as a preventive to the evil effects of heat, than to keep the stomach in a healthy state. We believe that a large portion of the cases of sunstroke are caused by a disordered stomach. The brain is in the closest sympathy with it, as everyone knows from his own experience:

"Sunstroke is caused by excessive heat, and especially if the weather is 'muggy.' It is more apt to occur on the second, third or fourth day of a heated term than on the first. Loss of sleep, worry, excitement, close sleeping rooms, debility, abuse of stimulants, predispose to it. It is more apt to attack those working in the sun, and especially between the hours of 11 o'clock in the forenoon and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. On hot days wear thin clothing. Have as cool sleeping rooms as possible. Avoid loss of sleep and unnecessary fatigue. If working indoors, and where there is artificial heat (laundries, &c.), see that the room is well ventilated.

"If working in the sun, wear a light hat (not black, as it absorbs the heat), straw, &c., and put inside of it on the head a wet cloth or large green leaf; frequently lift the hat from the head and see that the cloth is wet. Do not check perspiration, but drink what water you need to keep it up, as perspiration prevents the body from being overheated. Have, whenever possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued, do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after 11 o'clock in the morning on very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place, apply cold cloths to and pour cold water over head and neck. If anyone is overcome by the heat, send immediately for the nearest good physician. While waiting for the physician, give the person cool drinks of water or cold black tea, or cold coffee, if able to swallow. If the skin is hot and dry, sponge with, or pour cold water over the body and limbs, and apply to the head pounded ice wrapped in a towel or other cloth. If there is no ice at hand, keep a cold cloth on the head, and pour cold water on it, as well as on the body. If the person is pale, very faint and pulse feeble, let him inhale ammonia for a few seconds, or give him a teaspoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia in two tablespoonfuls of water, with a little sugar.—N. Y. Observer.

A Good Cow.

There is no one thing of greater necessity than a good cow; and in accordance with the assertion of Scripture, a good cow is beyond price, more valuable than rubies; yea, than much fine gold. This may not be the literal quotation, but the substance is correct. A well-known landlord of our city, an old Virginia gentleman, whose boundless hospitality is only excelled by his accounts of remarkable adventures in field and forum—who has seen many of the ups and downs of life, has enjoyed his millions and as frequently been reduced to an elegant competency—has a fine cow, and delights to make her virtues known and to sound her praises on every favorable occasion. His guests, as they quaff the rich draughts of the lacteal fluid, are told of the source and immensity of the supply, and not unfrequently view with wonder and amazement the production of the bovine whose acquaintance they have not the honor of enjoying. Eleven gallons, three times a day, is the minimum of this cow's capacity in a dry season. The simple statement of this fact to an incredulous son of one of the first families of Virginia, a few mornings ago, caused the i. s. of the f. f. v. to violate one of the commandments. We are fully satisfied that he prevaricated for the sole and simple purpose of robbing a Fort Worth cow of her merited honors. He said "his father once owned a fine cow, which gave a great quantity of milk, and that she had to be milked very often and very promptly; that the duty was postponed one day, and, as a consequence, just as the old man sat down to milk the cow, one of her teats bursted from an excess of milk, and before it could be rescued the calf was drowned, and his father's life was saved only by the most strenuous exertions." The landlord and the guests of the house received this portion of the story very quietly and satisfactorily; but when he went on to state that "the milk ran all over the place and washed out the water gaps and carried off the fences," the landlord said he "was telling a lie." And, in our judgment, the thing was highly improbable.—Ft. Worth (Tex.) Democrat.

THERE has been considerable stir among the government officials of this county for the past ten days, caused by the discovery of some crooked whisky hid out in the neighborhood of Newtown, and extra exertion is being made to discover from whence it came. It is more than likely that it was stolen from some of the bonded warehouses, all of which are being overhauled, and the mystery will soon be solved.—Owen News.

DESTINY.

Three roses, wan as moonlight, and weighed down
Each with its loveliness as with a crown,
Drooped in a florist's window in a town.

The first a lover bought. It lay at rest,
Like snow on snow, that night on beauty's breast.

The second rose, as virginal and fair,
Shrunk in the tangles of a harlot's hair.

The third, a widow, with new grief made wild,
Shut in the icy palm of her dead child.

GOING HOME.

A SKETCH FROM REAL LIFE.

The boys all called him Corkey. By "the boys" I mean all the engineers, brakemen, firemen and baggage-masters who were employed upon this railroad. They always spoke it with a kind of tender intonation that proved it more a name of endearment than of raillery. He was a pitiful-looking object, with eyes that seemed to say, "Don't stare at me so! I am not to blame for my look." He obtained a miserable existence by selling fruit, papers and cigars to passengers of this railroad; and in consideration of his services as water-boy, the company "magnanimously" gave him a free passage.

He had once been a bright healthy fellow who filled the post of fireman; but one night the engine took offence at a tie that was spiked upon the track, and the result was that Corkey was mangled out of all shape of human form, and left with barely life. I think it would have been a mercy had he been killed outright, rather than to have left a sound life in such a crippled body, but the Fates thought otherwise. His face was terribly scarred, and one arm was helpless, while an absent leg was replaced by one of cork. His body was twisted to one side by hot steam, and for all practical purposes there was only about one-third of him that was available.

He never had any home or friends, as I could learn, except among his colaborers, and they were not wealthy. I had occasion to pass often over this road, and learned his brief history from his own lips.

Somehow, when he came through the car, hiching along with his cork leg, and his basket of fruit depending from his neck by a strap and steadied by one well arm, I could not resist the mute appeal for pity in his eyes, but felt impelled to buy something, whether I wanted it or not. He was different from the average "car fiend" who pelts innocent people with prize-packages, court-plaster, needle-cases, and horrible pictures of murders and suicides. He never operated that way, but passed silently throug the car as if ashamed of his looks. But the traveling public are apt to consider all such merchants a bore, and, if they buy at all, it is to escape them; so Corkey with only his appealing eye to push his wares, didn't do a very heavy business. He had hard work to keep his poor soul and poorer body together, and it would seem as if life was utterly desolate. But there was now and then a ray of sunshine to lighten its gloom, for once when the engineer—a rough, burly fellow who swore like a pirate—had received his pay, and knew the little roll of money was barely sufficient to pay for his past month's living, yet he tendered Corkey a crisp new dollar for a small package of candy to take home to his wee one, and met the offer of change with a "O, go to grass with your change!" said form of refusal being the engineer's idea of making the alms acceptable.

And once when the brakeman, a fellow who had served a sentence for burglary, detected a contemptible thief filling his pockets with Corkey's small stock of apples, he collared the scamp, and, after making him pay double price for the fruit, kicked him till his teeth rattled.

Once I noticed a suspicious resemblance in a coat that Corkey wore to one I had seen on the baggage-master, and, being ashamed of my own abundance, I searched certain dark closets in my own home, and the result was a sizeable package of cast-off clothing, whose acceptance by the cripple gave me more genuine pleasure than the wearing of them ever had.

But despite his ignorance and wretchedness, Corkey was blessed with a certain wise philosophy that wiser people have striven to attain, and that was the happy faculty of looking on the bright side of everything.

I had grown to pity the poor cripple, and when he saw my face on the evening train that bore me home, his own own would grow brighter, and he would say: "I am coming to talk with you." Perhaps it was my frequent purchases, or perhaps it was sympathy that won his confidence, or perhaps it was a little of both; but, any way, he dearly loved to confide in me, and I rather enjoyed having. His patient resignation to his poor, crippled fate made me ashamed of my trival faultfindings, and more grateful for the blessings of health. Said he to me once:

"Some folks is lucky, and some isn't, and I am one of those as isn't. It don't do no good to worry about it, and I am thankful I am livin'. It's party hard work to get along, but I manage to; and Sundays I goes out into the country and watches the birds, and sometimes I goes down the dock a-fishin'. Jim—that's my room mate—goes with me, and we takes some comfort. Jim is a strong feller, but he ain't very bright, so we gets along first rate."

It was a brief history, but it told all.

He did not look to be over fourteen, and I was surprised when he told me he was over twenty. But inside his crippled body was something of man's nature, and also some nobility. Pitiable as he was, and debarred forever from nearly all that makes life worth living, he yet had pity for a creature worse off than himself. This "Jim," I learned, was a poor demented fellow, who found a bed and shelter at Corkey's expense, and who earned barely enough to keep him from starving. Poor Corkey had shared many a scant meal with him, and the two had become attached to each other through the bond of mutual aid; for one had a poor body and a good mind, and the other a poor mind and a good body; so, as Corkey said, "they got along first-rate."

But Corkey had one sorrow that was to him a bitter one.

"I don't mind tellin' you," he said; "you seem kinder interested-like, and won't laugh at me, but—there is a girl as lives near me, and she is a mighty nice girl, and purty, sir; she smiles at me kinder sorry, and once I heard her say, "Poor fellow!" and so when I goes off into the woods I brings her a bunch of flowers. But she never can care anything about me, and it's no use thinking about it, but I can't help it."

Poor cripple! His simple words told the whole story.

One cold Christmas eve I walked up from the depot with him to the foot of the street that led to his home. The sidewalks were thronged with people with happy faces, whose hands were full of gifts, and who seemed to be all hastening toward some bright home. "It's nice to be goin' home, ain't it?" said Corkey. "Everybody is goin' home to-night. My home ain't much, but it's better than none."

I slipped a little remembrance of the holiday into his hand—for somehow I had grown attached to the fellow—and with a cheerful good-night I walked away.

That night I heard an alarm of fire, and the next day the papers said an unknown cripple had been badly burned in a brave effort to save a girl when no one else dared enter the burning building. Some presentiment told me who it was, and I sought the humble home of Corkey at once. I was shown up three flights of stairs and into his room by a woman, who said, "Och! but he's a poor sufferin' crayther, and 'll soon be layin' his pains behint him." The room was utterly devoid of ornament; except some clusters of autumn leaves and a few sprigs of bitter sweet. In one corner was the poor cripple's basket, and in the other a pile of half burned garments, that told their own story. "Jim" sat at the foot of the bed staring stupidly at the sufferer, while the girl, whose life he had saved to pay her for pity, sat by his side, crying bitterly. She said, "He had wrapped me in a quilt and carried me right through the fire!"—and then her sobs came afresh.

He was a pitiful sight as he lay on the bed—his face blackened and blistered, and his poor crippled body writhing with pain. He was delirious with suffering, and kept muttering unintelligible words; I spoke to him, but the fire had closed his eyes forever, and every breath seemed drawn with pain. My voice appeared to reach his reason, for he muttered, "It's nice to be goin' home, ain't it? Everybody is goin' home;" and then as if the burning house was before him, and in it the girl who was pitying him, he raised his head, beat the bed with his one arm, and cried, "Let me go! I will go in! She is a burnin'?" Then he dropped back, and was still. He had gone home.

A WRITER in the Baltimore Bee is of the opinion that black-eyed ladies are most apt to be passionate and jealous. Blue-eyed, soulful, truthful, affectionate and confiding. Gray-eyed, resolute, philosophical, literary, cold-hearted. Hazel-eyed, quick tempered, and fickle. Woman is either worth a good deal or nothing. If good for nothing, she is not worth getting jealous for; if she be a true woman she will never give you cause for jealousy. A man is a brute to be jealous of a good women—a fool to be jealous of a worthless one; but is a double fool to cut his throat for either of them.

"A MAN who cheats in short measure is a measurcless rogue. If in whisky, then he is a rogue in spirit. If by falsifying his accounts, then he is an unaccountable rogue. If he gives a bad title to the land, then he is a rogue indeed. If he gives short measure in wheat, then he is a rogue in grain." Exactly; and if he is false in his religion, then he is a graceless rogue. If he cheats in iron, he is an ironical rogue. If in peaches, he is an unpeachable rogue. If in grates, he is an ungrateful rogue. If in land-warrants, he is an unwarrantable rogue.

An Aged Woman's Trance.

The case of Aunt Sally Rinehardt, 74 years of age, of Seaford, Long Island, who about a month ago fell into a deep trance that so much resembled death that her friends began preparations for her burial, has occasioned much speculation and discussion among the people of Southern Long Island. A reporter of the Sun called at her house yesterday. She dwells with her married daughter, Mrs. Walter Wanzar, in a vine-wreathed, white painted cottage in the center of the beautiful little village of Seaford. The hamlet is two miles from the railroad station of South Oyster Bay, and is one of the quietest places in the world. Its streets are long, wide, grassy lanes, in which the rumble of a cart is seldom heard. Wide-branched trees arch the roads. Nearly every house-yard is a bower of shrubbery, and the perfume of flowers scents the air. The reporter tapped at the front door of the cottage several times, but only the sounds of birds in the trees replied. Mr. Wanzar was in his garden hoeing corn, and the reporter inquired of him in relation to the singular case of the old lady.

Mr. Wanzar leaned upon his hoe, and before directly answering the question said, as he pointed toward the distant sea line along which went the white sails of many ships, "I guess we'll get some rain here before midnight." Then he added: "Yes, it's all true. I'll give you all the particulars, if you'll wait one minute. Well, you see, she's been sick for some time, and a few months ago she took to bed, and you couldn't do nothing to help her. Before that she had been on a visit to her son, Gilson, who is a pilot on a Roosevelt ferry boat. I took her down there last fall, as she has had the fancy for many years of stopping with Gilson in the winter, and with me in the summer. Well, I brought her back a month or two ago, and Gilson's wife came with her. She left word with me when she went back to her home in Williamsburgh that I should telegraph to Gilson if anything happened. The old lady at once became melancholy, and would not leave her bed. She had the idea that the devil was pursuing her, and that she could not keep him away from her soul. You see, she'd been always a very strong Methodist, and probably too much religion made her crazy. When any one spoke to her, she'd say, 'Don't talk to me. I don't know anything about what you're talking.' Well, I guess it was about a month ago, and about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, that she suddenly folded her hands and dropped back on the bed. Her eyes closed, her chin dropped, and she became of a dead color. I lifted her hand, and it dropped like it was lead. She did not breathe, and when I put my ear to her heart there was no sound. I went at once to the station and telegraphed to Gilson that she had just died. When I got back the house was full of neighbors, who were assisting in laying her out. They were just beginning to wash the body, when she suddenly opened her eyes and sat up. The trance lasted over an hour. She had another about a week afterward which lasted nearly two hours. She'll probably go into another one before long. A doctor of Newbridge said he could do her no good, and that there is no settled disease, so we give her no medicine. I think it is all her fancy; that is what is the matter. The old lady has outlived two husbands and several children. There were ten children in all."

Mrs. Rinehardt lay almost lifeless upon her bed yesterday, and muttered constantly to herself. She would speak to no one, and, whenever she was spoken to, her answer was a silent nod of the head. She is of large frame, but her flesh is wasted. Her face is furrowed with many and deep wrinkles. —New York Sun.

Flitting Shadows.

While half a dozen persons were rolling along in a Michigan avenue car, yesterday, a man leaned across the aisle and said to another:

"Excuse me, but didn't I see a big bug crawl down behind your collar?"

"Ooh! Ouch!" exclaimed the other, as he leaped up and pulled off his coat. He looked the garment all over and there was no bug to be seen.

"Perhaps it crawled down under your vest," suggested the man.

Off came the vest, and it was closely inspected without making any discoveries. The attentive stranger then made the victim turn around two or three times, to see if the bug wasn't hidden under the suspenders, and, when a thorough search had been made, the stranger sat down and said:

"It was probably a shadow flitting across your collar, but I felt sure it was a bug. You can put on your coat and vest again."

The more the victim thought about it the madder he got, but before he put on his coat the other man left the car and slid down Twelfth street as if he had grease on his heels.—Detroit Free Press.

A YOUNG lady recently received the following note, and is now heart broken: "You need'nt 'spect me up Sundays no more, for a gal what le'ves gum a stickin' on the parlor chairs for a feller to set in arn't the gal for me."

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

BRAZIL has now about one hundred lines of railroad building, or under survey.

WHEN is a dog most like a human being? When he is between a man and a boy.

WHAT sort of essence does a young man like when he pops the question? Acquiescence.

WE may as well expect to grow stronger by constant eating as wiser by constant reading.

WHAT is the difference between a tunnel and a speaking trumpet? One is hollowed out and the other hollowed in.

WE know of no better way for a man to be hated by everybody than to become a base-ball umpire in a close game.

WHATEVER may be said of woman's right to vote and legislate, their right to bear arms is pronounced to be unquestionable.

IT is said that a man in Boston, who was converted under the preaching of Mr. Moody, has made restitution of $13,000 which he stole several years ago.

A LITTLE darkey slipped off a roof and exclaimed: Good Lord, ketch me! ketch me, Good Lord!" Just then his breeches caught on a nail and he cried out: "Nebber mind, Good Lord; a nail done cotch me."

TWENTY ladies voted on the question, "Has a young lady the right to kiss a gentleman with whom she takes an evening drive?" There were nineteen affirmative votes. The negative vote was cast by a woman with red hair and a glass eye.

A YOUNG lady from the rural districts entered a drygoods-store the other day, and asked for a pair of stockings. The clerk politely asked her what number she wore. "Why, two, you fool. Do you think I am a centepede, or that I have a wooden leg?"

"JESSIE, what was John's arm doing around your waist when you were at the front gate last night?" asked a precocious Aberdeen boy of his sister. "His arm wasn't round my waist; I won a belt from him and he was taking my measure," replied the indignant young lady.

WE will not encourage you to hope that you can buy your way to heaven, but, if on every Sunday you will put into the contribution box a nickel for each sin committed during the preceding week, you will soon have the satisfaction of knowing that you belong to a prosperous church.

THE King of Siam is yet a young man, being only twenty-four years of age, but withal a father of a son of nine years and husband of nine wives. His height is only about five feet seven inches, his form graceful and rather slight, and his complexion lighter than that of most of his race.

COL. HOWARD SMITH, the State Auditor, has issued circulars to Circuit and Criminal Judges, Commonweath's Attorneys and Clerks of Circuit and Criminal Courts calling attention to some serious irregularities in making out claims against the Commonwealth which should be corrected.

HE that loses his conscience has nothing left that is worth keeping. Therefore be sure you look to that. And the next place look to your health, and if you have it praise God and value it next to good conscience; for health is the second blessing that money cannot buy, therefore value it and be thankful for it.

PERFORMANCES are given in the Cincinnati theaters Sunday nights. The church people are making an effort to close them. The Mayor, who has the power, would like to please religious voters by enforcing the law, but to close the theaters and permit the concert gardens to remain open would be inconsistent, and he dare not offend German voters by closing the gardens.

A STORY is told of a shrewish Scotch woman, who tried to wean her husband from the public house by employing her brother to act the part of a ghost and frighten John on his way home. "Who are you?" said the guidman, as the apparition rose before him from behind a bush. "I am auld Nick," was the reply. "Come awa', mon," said John, nothing daunted; "gie's a shake o' your hand; I am married tae a sister o' yours."

THEY were out walking, enjoying the cool and refreshing air. The bright moon cast its rays over the lady, giving her an almost angelic appearance, and imparted to her flowing curls a still more golden hue. One of her soft white hands rested in his, and ever and anon she met his ardent gaze with one of pure love. Suddenly a change came over her features. Her full red lips trembled as with suppressed sighs; the muscles of her faultless mouth became convulsed; she gasped for breath, and, snatching her hand from the soft pressure of his, she turned away, buried her face in her cambric handkerchief, and—sneezed.

Announcements.

WE are authorized to announce Capt. L. C. NORMAN as a candidate for State Senator, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

WE are authorized to announce GRANVILLE V. ROUSE as a candidate for the office of Representative in the Legislature for the ensuing term.

WE are authorized to announce REUBEN CONNER, Esq. as a candidate for the Legislature, subject to the Democratic party.

WE are authorized to announce JAS. L. HENDERSON as a candidate for the Legislature.

GENERAL GRANT is feasting upon the fat of the land across the waters.

JACK WHARTON has his Commission as United States Marshal for the State of Louisiana.

THE Western Tobacco Journal has the figures showing that Cincinnati is at the head of the tobacco marts.

AFTER a fifty-five hours battle, near Krustaz, the Montenegrins withdrew to Banjane. The loss to both armies was heavy.

IT is estimated that Delaware alone will, this year, furnish one quart of peaches for every man woman and child in the country.

DURING the first of this month, San Francisco experienced excessive heat. At some points the thermometer ranged as high as 115° in the shade.

CHAS. FOSTER seems to be the favorite of the Administration for the Speaker of the next House. General Garfield is upon his ear about the manner in which he has been treated in regard to the office.

THE tobacco crop in Mason County, grown last season, is estimated at 3,780,850 pounds against 3,522,100 pounds the previous season. The proceeds of the crop will greatly inflate the purses of Mason County gentry.

LAST week was an uncommonly good week for the hangman. He was in the land and almost omnipresent. Harry Adams was swung into eternity at Dayton, Ohio; Adrian Evoque, Geo. Morris and Joaquin Florenzo at New Orleans, and Stephen Brinkle at Newman, Georgia.

THE New York Sun nominates a straight Republican ticket for President and Vice-President in 1880. Ulysses S. Grant, for President, and Edwards Pierrepont for Vice-President. The platform the Sun stands them on is, "No man worthy the office of President should be willing to hold it if counted in or placed there by any fraud."

A MEMBER of the Republican State Central Committee has written a long address in which he calls upon the Republicans of his Congressional district to have candidates for county Representative in each county where there is any possible show for their success, but where there is a strong majority against them, to vote systematically for the most liberal of the Democratic candidates.

THE Attorney-General has called upon the accounting officer of the Treasury for a copy of the accounts of Brigham Young, filed in the Treasury some twenty years ago when he was an Indian Agent appointed by the Government. The United States Attorney of the Territory of Utah wants to examine them, expecting to discover some illegal acts which will subject Young to a prosecution.

SHERMAN'S currency policy clashes with that of Hayes, and the Secretary is enjoying a state of uneasiness because he has staked his political prospects in Ohio on the approval of his views on the silver question by the Republican party of that State. Hayes appears very unwilling to yield to Sherman's views on the currency question and with this great difference between them, Sherman's place in the Cabinet is thought rather shaky.

THE Louisville Commercial takes issue with the Cincinnati Commercial on the currency question. The former wants both greenbacks and silver, but thinks one hundred million dollars of silver is all the country can float. This amount of specie, according to the Commercial's theory, will take the place of the seventy million dollars of one and two dollar notes now in circulation, and be used as change, while the larger currency notes will still remain in the land accompanied by the "the dollar of our fathers."

SINCE the commencement of the present canvass in the Democratic party for the nomination for the office of County Representative, there has been a great deal said about a majority choice among the candidates; and especially was this discussed while there were three candidates on the track. Now, that there are but two candidates before the people, the desire for a majority candidate should not be allowed to die, and but a small portion of the party attend the primary election on the 30th inst. The choosing of the candidate on the 30th is of interest to the entire party, and all its members should be at the polls that day and cast their vote, giving the successful man his entire strength in the party, for the choice made that day is virtually the choice on the first Monday in August. Let everybody vote, on the 30th inst., and the party shows its entire strength in the county.

THE weather being favorable for handling tobacco, the receipts last week in Cincinnati greatly increased, and the price was, toward the close of the week, somewhat cut down. These are the quotations:

254 hhds. and 1 box Owen County, Ky., (Dist.): 252 new: 18 at $2 90@3 85; 67 at $4@5 90; 67 at $6@7 95; 56 at $8@9 95; 37 at $10@14 75; 9 at $15 75@19 75. 2 hhds. old at $6 75.

177 hhds. and 3 boxes Pendleton County, Ky., (Dist.): 19 hhds. at $2 90@3 95; 53 at $4@5 90; 67 at $6@7 95; 32 at $8@9 95; 6 at $10@12 25; 3 boxes at $3 30@9 40.

37 hhds and 3 boxes new Boone County, Ky., (Dist.): 1 at $8 35; 17 at $4 10@5 80; 11 at $6 10@7; 7 at $8@9 85; 1 at $12 50. 3 boxes at $3@4.

THE Louisville Commercial occasionally takes a proper view of political capital. The following is its reply to the Cincinnati Gazette's growling about illicit distilling in the South:

The Cincinnati Gazette says that "defrauding the revenue by illicit distillation is regarded in the South as an honorable and high-toned business." That sort of talk is all nonsense, and it is very easy to retort that developments a year or so ago showed that a great many people in the North, who passed as "high-toned" and that sort of thing, were pretty deep in the business of defrauding the government by illicit distillation. The illicit distillation done by the members of the whisky ring that Bristow "busted," in one day amounted to more than all the illicit distillers in the South have done in the last year.

THE Murphy Temperance Movement is creating considerable excitement in the towns where it has made its appearance. The meetings are largely attended and hundreds are supporting the blue badge. This movement will do considerable good while the excitement lasts, but when this subsides there will, it is to be feared, be a reversion among the topers.

W. L. JACKSON, of the Louisville Judicial District, has been commissioned to try Smith N. Hawes in Covington. The Judge came to Covington, last week, and opened court on Thursday, when it was ascertained neither side was ready for trial. The cause was continued till Tuesday of this week, and court adjourned.

FATAL accidents. What's the matter in South Carolina? Chester District, which gave a majority of four hundred against Hampton for Governor, at the late election gave W. A. Walker, an ex-Confederate General, a majority of 1,298 for the State Senate. This is a remarkable change in so short a time.

PITKIN, of New Orleans, can weep with Packard. They were officially decapitated by a political weapon partly shapened by their own labor.

STEPHEN BRINKLE, after seven trials and as many convictions of the murder of his wife, was hanged at Newman, Ga., on the 15th inst.

LOUISVILLE is making preparation for a grand exposition this fall.

SENATOR CONKLING visits Europe for his health.

—Washington County Herald: A mule kicked a darkey square in the forehead on Mr. T. C. Montgomery's place, in this county, a few days ago. The darkey lost his balance for the time being, but regaining his equilibrium, he danced up to the animal with clinched fist and said: "Look here, if you wasn't a mule, I'd beat h——l out of you."

—A man selling liquor without license, a few days since, came to grief at Berry's Station. The ladies of that place, about fifty in number, came down upon the saloon keeper and after rather an exciting time gained an entrance to the saloon into which the keeper retreated and gathered his gun threatening to shoot the first one that entered. The ladies succeeded in having the saloonist cared for by the officers of the law.

—There is on the farm Mr. Elias Rasdall near Smith's Grove, quite a curiosity in the way of relics of a departed race. It consists of an Indian burying ground in a field which has been plowed and cultivated for near forty years. Recently some of the neighbors dug into several of these graves to the depth of two or three feet, unearthing large quantities of bones that had lain there for perhaps more than a century. Considerable interest is created by the discovery, and on next Tuesday the citizens propose meeting and exploring thoroughly the mysteries of this rude Golgotha. Developments are looked for from the many graves of a peculiar and interesting character.—Bowling Green Democrat.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 16, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

In the way of weather, we have had a delightful week—not a cyclone to disturb our equilibrium or a cloud above to tarnish the brightness of our daily walks. But, notwithstanding all this, man is yet man and full of trouble.

On Monday afternoon, a fine looking specimen of the human species, walked into J. Meyers' pawn shop, 317 Market street, and asked to be shown some revolvers which were exposed in the case. The proprietor and his wife were engaged in the back part of the store, and their son, a clever boy, waited on the customer. The latter behaved himself much as another man might, and there was nothing in his actions to attract special attention. He was as keen after a bargain as most of men who go into pawn shops to trade. The boy was keen for it, too, and he soon discovered his customer was determined to have a revolver at all hazards. One was selected and the price agreed upon, but the boy said he had no cartridges. The customer said he would not take it unless the cartridges were thrown in to load it. The boy said there was none in the house. The stranger said he was in no hurry, and that he would wait until the vender of pawned things could get some. The boy, being equally desirous of making a sale, ran out and got some that just fit the cylinder, and loaded it. The stranger, a powerful man, took the weapon, cocked it, placed it to his right temple and fired. He fell instantly, the blood pouring profusely from wounds on each side of his head, and he never spake again. He lay prostrate on the floor, and of course the sound of the revolver soon attracted quite a crowd. Policemen were also on the spot, but no one in the crowd seemed to know the unfortunate victim. He was soon removed to a doctor's office, but breathed his last shortly thereafter. In his pockets were found only thirty-five cents, and of course the pawnbroker made no sale of his weapon. The body, after death, was conveyed to the Morgue, and was, on Tuesday, identified as that of Thos. Bollis, "a fakir," who had traveled for several years with a side show. Out of funds, employment and friends is supposed to be the cause of the rash act.

On the same afternoon, about 6 o'clock, one Wesley Green, a gentleman of color, was leading Nannie Hughes, an intelligent "gal" of a like color, from her residence to that of a Squire for the purpose of making her the companion of his bosom for life, and, when wearing the last named happy spot, Rachel Nichols, a big, ugly, savage black woman, sprang upon Nannie and plunged a butcher knife into her side, swearing by all the "niggers of earth" Nannie should never be the bride of Wesley, as she had a prior claim on him, and nary another nigger should he ever wed. We suppose he will never wed "Nannie," as her physicians pronounce her recovery as altogether doubtful, and Rachel is in jail awaiting the result.

Tuesday morning came with a clear sky and a balmy atmosphere, and, from the way the birds sang, it would seem all nature was happy. But by 10 a. m. of that day the Coroner was called to 1,851 Decatur street, only to view the body of Andreas Shenck, who had just suicided by taking Paris green. Strong drink said to be the cause.

In the afternoon of the same day he was called to 900 South Seventh street to view the body of Eberhardt Schroeer, who that morning deliberately shot himself through the right temple. He at one time was in comfortable circumstances, but had gotten through with most of his worldly possessions, and seemed to prefer death to life.

Elder S. H. McGee, a preacher of the Christian Church, has been on trial at Dixon, Ill., for the past two weeks or more, for the poisoning of his wife. It would seem that it took him nineteen days to complete his work, but finally succeeded, as the jury on Wednesday last brought in a verdict of guilty. He being a preacher, and as preachers are not supposed to be as bad as other men, the jury fixed the punishment at the the lowest penalty allowed by law—fourteen years in the Penitentiary. His motive for the crime is supposed to be a desire to marry a young lady member of his congregation at Ashton, Ill., which is rather hard on the lady parishioner, as well as the parson. But the way of the transgressor was hard under the "old dispensation," and we suppose that it is right that it should be so under the new. We have not a doubt but what Col. Henderson would say we are right in this particular.

We had a pleasant dream the other night—a refreshing dream—but, like all other dreams of a pleasant nature, we awoke just before we reached the reality thereof. We dreamed we were over at Frankfort, and took a look in on that august body of lawmakers; and as we entered a fine specimen of Kentucky manhood was on the floor, holding, as it were, by his eloquence the Assembly spell-bound on things that were and things that ought to be. We, too, were charmed by his eloquence, and, turning to a good looking chap, we asked: "Who is that gentleman speaking?" "That," said he, "is the Hon. Representative from Boone County, of 'old dispensation' notoriety." We felt proud of our humble efforts in his behalf. He concluded one of his proudest and happiest efforts, and we arose to give him our hand for the first time, and to receive our merited congratulations, and just then we awoke, and "lo! it was only a dream." Well, we hope to see the reality some of these days.

This beginning of our letter is gloomy enough, and we have made a slight digression in order to give your readers a respite from the sadness thereof, and we will now return to our original theme of man of few days and full of trouble.

On Thursday, the 14th, Miss Evertson, aged 19 years, and daughter of William Evertson, of Quincy, Ill., suicided in the last named place by hanging. No cause can be assigned for the act, as she appeared to be in good spirits just before the unfortunate occurrence. Mr. Evertson is one of the most respectable citizens of the place, and much sympathy is felt for him and his afflicted family.

On the same day August Schuler, residing on Carondelet avenue, this city, ended life's woes by shooting himself through the head, causing death instantly. He was a shoemaker by trade, and in rather comfortable circumstances, but did not seem to get along pleasantly with his domestic relations, which is supposed to be the cause of the rash act.

On the same day Michael Keary, an attache of the Fire Department, was testing a new fire escape at the Lindell Hotel, lost his balance, fell to the street and was instantly killed.

About 4 o'clock p. m. the same day, Thos. Cook, a brakeman on the Iron Mountain Railroad, went between two cars in motion for the purpose of coupling them, and when near Schisener street his foot caught in the guard rail and he was thrown upon the track. Six cars passed over him, severing both his left arm and leg. He is alive, but not expected to recover.

We had the pleasure of taking by the hand our old friend Captain N. B. Fowler, formerly of your town. He is at this time Chief Clerk of the steamer H. C. Yaeger, and when not steamboating he is engaged on a neat little farm of his own forty miles east of the city. He is as clever a fellow as ever swung a pen, tread the deck of a steamer or hoed a potato patch; in fact, we think a good fellow generally. But my letter is already too long, and for the present I will say—quit. BOB A. LONG.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

THE Marshal of the town lodged a negro man in jail here, Monday, to await his trial on Wednesday, under the charge of horse-stealing. The negro's name is Williams. We did not learn the name of the man who lost the horse.

DIED—On the 14th inst., Mrs. Augusta Kirkpatrick, wife of John Kirkpatrick, aged 39 years. The deceased leaves, besides many friends and relatives, a husband and three children to mourn her loss, and with whom the entire town sympathize in this their saddest bereavement.

THE cry of mad-dog is heard in nearly every section of the State, and at last it is heard in Boone, and in the Big Bone neighborhood. It is advisable not to be too intimate with the canine race; give them plenty of room, and upon the appearance of strange actions a dose of cold lead judiciously administered will be the best thing to give.

CYRUS RIDDELL requests Joel D. Conner, Jas. H. Walton and E. M. Gaines, Commissioners appointed to establish the lines between the Florence, Taylorsport and Burlington Magisterial districts, to meet at the residence of Jas. Anderson, near Dry Creek, on the 12th of July, to attend to establishing said lines. M. S. Rice, County Surveyor, is requested to be present.

ON the 12th inst., Lawrenceburg was the scene of another murder. This time an old negro man was the victim of a lad about eighteen years of age. They fell out about a dog, belonging to the young man, going into the old man's yard, at night, and barking. A double-barrelde shot gun settled the quarrel and now the State is dealing with the lad under the charge of murder.

"TOUCH me Gently, Father Time," is the title of a new and beautiful song and chorus, by Charlie Baker, author of the famous "He Holds the Fort of Heaven." Dealers are ordering it by the thousand. The whole country will soon be singing "Touch me Gently, Father Time." Any music dealer will mail you this beautiful song for 40 cents. Published by F. W. Helmick, 50 West 4th St., Cincinnati, O.

WE are requested by Mr. G. V. Rouse, candidate for County Representative, to announce that he will speak in Hebron on the 25th inst., in Burlington on the 26th inst., in Florence on the 27th inst., at the East Bend school-house, near Sam Calvert's, on the 28th inst., and at Pleasant Ridge school-house, on the Florence and Union pike, on the 29th inst. Mr. Reuben Conner is respectfully invited to be present. Speaikng to commence at early candle light.

OUR Willow Vale correspondent writes us as follows: "One of your subscribers wants you to print the names of those that are to pay the bounty fund tax for Boone. Do you understand?" We understand, but fors everal reasons decline complying with the request. Among the reasons are, first, we do not know certain who the persons are. That is still a disputed question in the courts. Second, while there may be one man desiring the list of names published, there may be an hundred opposed to it. Third, were it settled beyond all doubt that the persons named in the judgment now on record are the persons we regard the request rather unreasonable.

THE matrimonial market, this summer, has been rather off till Wednesday, the 13th inst., when it eased up and Ben Crisler obtained license to lead Miss Laura Aylor to the hymenial altar. The market then shut down and remained closed till Tuesday morning, when one Enoch Barlow was granted the necessary documents to render valid his becoming a benedict by uniting in marriage with Miss Rhoda Aylor. Barlow had hardly vacated the Clerk's sanctum when in came one Philip Cayton, shoving at the Clerk a written instrument recommending a dose of marriage license authorizing him (Cayton) to commit matrimony with Miss Susan Reed. The boys all seemed in high spirits, and appeared to care nothing about the mercury's trying to kick the nineties of the thermometer.

Personal Mention.

MONDAY, Rev. R. K. Graves, of Newport, favored us with a brief call.

MR. R. K. DULANY and lady, of Kenton County were in town Monday.

MR. G. V. ROUSE, candidate for County Representative, graced our shop, Monday. Mr. Rouse was in good spirits.

MR. REUBEN CONNER, candidate for County Representative, was in town, Saturday. 'Squire had been out on a political tour.

MESSRS. JOSEPH CLEVELAND and Francis Kriley, of Kenton County, called upon us Wednesday of last week, just in time to see the muscle of the office exercised. Call again gents—glad to see you.

County Court.

His Honor, Judge Phelps, dispatched the following business in the County Court, on Wednesday of last week:

Joseph Anthony Meyer made declaration of his intention of becoming a citizen of this country. Joseph Anthony Meyer hails from Prussia.

Elizabeth Rogers was appointed administratrix of the estate of her husband, Warren Rogers, deceased. M. B. Green, L. P. Arnold and Michael Clore were appointed appraisers.

Elizabeth Rogers was appointed guardian for Webster and Louelia Rogers.

Arthur Blythe was released from paying tax on two lots with which he was erroneously charged.

Jno. S. Huey was appointed a member of the committee to lease the Big Bone Springs.

W. B. Adams was appointed administrator of Jno. Lewis Adams.

Gallatin County Democracy.

At a mass meeting of the Democracy of Gallatin County, pursuant to the call of the Executive Committee, at the Court-house in Warsaw, on the 18th of June, 1877, Hon. A. G. Craig was elected Chairman, and Rod Perry, Secretary.

The Convention nominated Clem. Ambrose as a candidate for County Representative.

Rod Perry then offered the following, to-wit:

WHEREAS the Democracy of Boone County in mass meeting assembled, having selected Capt. L. C. Norman as the choice of said county, and presented his name as a proper person to represent the counties of Boone, Owen and Gallatin in the State Senate, now be it

Resolved, By the Democracy of Gallatin County in mass meeting, that we heartily indorse Capt. Norman as a man fitted in every way to grace the position of State Senator, and we join the Democracy of Boone in presenting his name to the Democrats of the Twenty-third Senatorial District as a candidate for that position.

The Convention then resolved that Jas. W. Tatem is the choice of the people of Gallatin County for State Treasurer.

Both resolutions were adopted by a unanimous vote.

The meeting then directed the Secretary to send a copy of the proceedings of this Convention to the Courier-Journal and Boone Co. RECORDER for publication, and adjourned.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Trade is very quiet, and the market has been exceedingly dull during the past week.

Tobacco quiet. The offerings good but the sales were few. Prices about the same as last reported.

The stock market was fair. About 75 or 100 head of horses were sold at auction last week, prices ranging from $35 to $100. Only a few head of mules sold, bringing from $50 to $125. The demand was good, with but few on the market.

Cattle scarce and in demand. Prices from $4 50 to $6 for good, and $3@4 for scrubs.

Poultry—Spring chickens brought $1 50@3; old cows, from $2 to $2 50, with no demand. Butter dull at from 9c. to 13c. Eggs, 10 @11c.

The vegetable market was pretty well filled up with the exception of potatoes. New potatoes bring from $5 50 to $6 50 per brl. Cabbage, Early Yorks, from $1 25 to $1 75 per brl. Peas, from $1 to $1 75 per brl.

Corn brought from 48c. to 50c. Oats, from 50c. to 52c. Wheat, from $1 50 to $1 75.

Wool in the grease, 18c. to 20c.; tub washed, 30c. to 32c.

Strawberries have been plenty, bringing $2@6 per stand. Green apples are coming in at 75c. to $1 25 per bushel. Cherries bring $3 to $5 per stand.

Hogs brought good prices this week, but there were few in market, and there was a good demand. Prices ranged from $4 to $4 50, an advance of from $1 to $1 25 over last week.

Good sheep are selling at 3@4c., and the market dull at that. LESTER.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

COVINGTON STOCK YARDS, June 18.

Report of the Covington Live Stock Market for the week ending June 18, 1877:

Receipts—Cattle, 1,555; hogs, 1,319; sheep and lambs, 1,860.

Cattle—Receipts in excess of demand, and the market ruled dull with prices considerably lower than last week's quotations.

Shipping cattle sold to-day at from 5c. to 5¾c. per lb.; butchers stuff sold slow at from 3c. to 5c. per lb., for extra fine.

Milch Cows—But few on the market, selling from $25 to $45 per head.

Veal calves sold from 5c. to 6c. per lb.

Hogs—The market a little firmer, but not much change in prices—selling from 4c. to 4¼c. per lb.

Sheep—Supply and demand about equal—selling from 3c. to 5c. per lb.

Lambs—Supply in excess of demand, market a little dull and prices a little lower—selling from 5c. to 6c. per lb.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Florence.

I see that your St. Louis correspondent takes me to task for being on too familiar terms with Jas. Henderson. He thinks we ought to style him "the Hon. James Henderson." Now, we never know what the Hon. stood for, but always supposed that it meant Honest, and our Jim needs no such handle to his name to advertise him as such, for his reputation for honesty and integrity has passed into a proverb, and when one says of a man that "he is as honest as Jim Henderson," it is the highest encomium that can be passed upon him. However, we are glad to learn that Jim is running well in both St. Louis and New Orleans. Bob Willis informs us that Jim has just canvassed Gallatin County, chaperoned by that prince of good fellows, Jeff Utz, and that he will carry Gallatin solid.

Pitching horseshoes is the favorite pastime in town at present. We notice some men who are too feeble to work their gardens, but who can pitch a pound shoes all day long. Luckily for some of them, they have wives or mothers who do the gardeu work for them while they are ill.

Everybody seems to be arranging to attend the Masonic celebration at Burlington next Saturday.

Dr. Scharbuck's whoreabouts still remain a mystery. Some relatives from Ohio have been here trying to find out what has become of him, and have employed Cincinnati detectives to ferret out the matter. Last Tuesday our Constable levied on the goods in favor of Mullins & Crigler for a debt of $88. The only other debt known of amounts to about $30, and his stock of drugs is valued at from $600 to $800.

Willow Vale.

We have enjoyed a splendid rain since our last communication. The hauling of the weed has been the business for a time.

Everything is lively now, and oven the circular saw hardly meets the demand.

We were called on to pay the last tribute of respect to our friend, Lewis Adams, on the 7th inst. Lewis was loved and respected by all who knew him, but now he is gone to try the realities of another world, and we hope the change is best for him. Thus is given us another evidence that we have no lease on our lives. This is the third member of Mr. Adams' family he has buried in little more than one year, but "God giveth and God taketh," and no one dares murmur or repine.

Park Holton gave us a call the other day. He wanted fifty men to go to Gallatin from which to choose a jury in a murder case. In this way we pay Gallatin just for the one hundred men chosen there for the Terrell case, which our readers will remember. You had ought to have heard the millers beg off. They were finally excused.

Hydrophobia is now the topic of the day in this section. A few days since a large and rabid dog, pursued by several men, passed here. Mr. Parsons passed it between Big Bone Church and the springs. Mr. P. was walking and driving a wagon, but lost no time getting aboard the wagon and giving the dog all the road it wanted. A dog which was accompanying Parsons was bitten. It is known that one dog belonging to Uncle Tom Rich and two belonging to Dr. Wood were bitten by this dog. The last heard of the crazy animal, it was seen below the lick.

We have learned, since writing the above, that the mad dog that passed along here the other day belonged to Marion Marshall, who lives just below the lick. The dog was killed near Steele's Creek, on Wednesday, after biting a dog at nearly every house he passed during three days and nights.

KATE KEARNEY.

Petersburg.

Our City Fathers have got to business at last, having appointed a street warden (a kind of miniature City Marshal) and are enforcing a certain town ordinance which prohibits, under an expensive penalty, any horse, mule, hog, duck or goose from perambulating, grazing upon or otherwise infesting our streets, sidewalks or alleys. The new move, which, by the way, is one in the right direction, has brought a shower of wrathful adjectives upon the smooth and shining head of the President of the Board, but it is like pouring water on a duck's back; it makes no impression, and nothing but a valuable compensation, in accordance with the law, will liberate the unlucky brute when he is once incarcerated.

There was another break-loose in the Academy, last Friday, with a select picnic on Jordan on the programme; but, as the water was so high as to literally overflow the banks, it was marked out with a piece of blue keel.

Last Saturday afternoon was the time set for Hon. J. L. Henderson to address this people on the subject of his claims. An unusual number of county people were in town to hear him, and as hour after hour flew by until 4 o'clock had been struck, and his arrival unannounced, the ears of the Conner and Rouse men could be seen to elevate their length, inspired with the hope that H. would not come, and therefore they could lay about among his supporters here with a prospect of inducing them to join their ranks, while the caudal extremities of the Henderson constituency were gradually lowered to half mast, and then to ignominious trailing in the mud (there was no dust), when "Here he comes!" burst from hundreds of mouths. There was a sudden reversion of ears, &c., as the Colonel gracefully mounted a pile of dry goods boxes, and with one thunderous, sulphurous war whoop from Gunpowder, he burst into a volume of political eloquence in defense of the "old dispensation." His speech lasted perhaps fifteen minutes, and, although he did not succeed in proselyting very many from the opposing forces, still he left his own force intact, and he will receive as many, if not more, votes at this point in August as he would if he had failed to keep his appointment.

By a short confidential letter from our old sister, Mrs. Grundy, we learn that there is to be an exodus from this city to the land of flowers next fall. As the political complexion (with perhaps one exception) of the party of pilgrims is decidedly Democratic, we shall look for a better return from Florida in 1880 than we had in 1876.

At the Murphy's strawberry festival, two weeks since, a young tobacco chewer, mistaking friend Schramm's new brown silk hat for a new-fangled spit-box, gave it a handsome coat of tobacco worm juice inside, and deposited several fourteen-ounce quids in it to hold it to the floor. S. is like Judge Oliver, he did not complain, but sent the spit-hat-box to the buck-town laundry next day. It returned looking like a brown silk clothes line, and now he needs another new hat. He is a deserving young man, and deserves sympathy; but it is good for the hat business; used up fourteen hats in fifteen months; several of the hat factories East are about resuming business in consequence.

GALLATIN COUNTY—Glencoe.

While at Warsaw, during the progress of Brown's trial, we were pleased to encounter many of our respected acquaintances from Boone. We presume they were returning the visits with which they had previously been honored by some of our citizens. Mr. Editor, you can not fail to perceive that we practice the system of retaliation, doing unto others as they do unto us.

The party that departed from Glencoe en route for the Black Hills are not realizing such fabulous profits as were anticipated by them. A letter received from A. D. Noel, bearing date of June 3d, discloses the fact that they are "halting between two opinions," not fully resolved to desert their claims, yet fearing if they remain the supplies of water will be cut short, thus forcing them to suspend operations for an indefinite period, and undergoing the severe privation s occasioned thereby. From the tone of the letter, we can hastily draw the conclusion that, of all places suitable for amassing fortunes, the country surrounding Deadwood City is the least.

The Rev. J. H. Young, of the Methodist persuasion, conducted a series of very interesting meetings at this place last week. This is the third time that Satan has been besieged here since the first of March. The attack was opened by Revs. Beasley and Coppage, of the Reformation, who for three weeks gallantly struggled to banish this enemy to all righteousness from our midst. After a short intermission, the assault was renewed by Rev. T. H. Salin, a popular Baptist minister, who, with undaunted energy, prolonged the attack for two successive weeks. And last, but not least, came the Rev. J. H. Young, making in all one month and a half's preaching, twice a day, in the short period of three months; and still there are those that have never made any open manifestation of the spirit's moving. The good people of the surrounding community are uniting their efforts, and we hope that ere long the two churches that are now being erected will be completed, in order that regular services may be held in each. This speaks favorably for a village containing only about three hundred inhabitants.

Profs. McDowell and Witt, assisted by the Misses Emma and Lillie Dale, favored us with a very pleasant evening's entertainment on the eve of the 9th inst. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, the attendance was not large, yet everyone departed highly delighted with the performances, which consisted of sacred, sentimental and comic songs. Many of our young gents were perfectly enamored with the ladies. "Will O. Dale," the celebrated Owen News reporter of Glencoe, is among the list of unfortunates. We can extend him our hand with a cordial grip, with the assurance that he has the tenderest sympathies of "Malcolm" in this his great affliction. The Professors propose teaching a singing class, provided a sufficient number of pupils can be obtained.

On Tuesday last J. H. Miles, of Bagdad, Shelby County, conducted to the hymenial altar Miss Minnie Foster, one of our most estimable young ladies. The attendants were Misses Nannie Anderson and Allie Swope, and Drs. J. H. Williams and W. E. Foster. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Thos. Daniel. Immediately after the happy twain were made one, the assembled guests, which consisted mostly of the bride's schoolmates, repaired to the sumptuously furnished tables and partook of the many delicacies accumulated thereon. Some of our boys appeared to enjoy this period of their existence the most, while others, who were endowed with grander conceptions of "solid comfort," were more inclined to grasp at the opportunities afforded by the occasion, and "taste the sweets of life" by mingling with the many fair ladies with which the parlor was so exuberantly decorated. The following morn Mr. and Mrs. Miles, accompanied by Dr. Williams and Miss Anderson, proceeded to the residence of the bridegroom at Bagdad. When they reach the end of life's voyage, may they be able to look back with satisfaction over the tempestuous waves, and feel assured that the vinculum matrimoni has ever been held sacred is the earnest wish of MALCOLM.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

BURLINGTON, KY., JUNE 21.

THE POOR FARMER.

BY MRS. W. BRAINERD.

Too poor to take a paper,
Too poor to join the Grange!
So, when the price was raising,
He did not know the change,
And sold his wheat for a dollar—
'Twas worth a quarter more—
And now the man is poorer
Than he had been before.

His neighbor, Lookout, told him,
This side the market town,
He should have come in sooner,
While groceries were down.
"But then, perhaps, 'tis even,
Since corn is on the rise,
And what you gain by waiting
Will pay for your supplies."

"Corn raising? Why, I sold it!
The chap who bought my wheat
Said this year corn was plenty,
But mine was hard to beat,
And so he paid three shillings—
What! everywhere 'tis four?
The difference would give me
A hundred dollars more."

He drew the reins and started
With spirits sadly down,
And did a heap of thinking
Before he reached the town.
The upshot of the matter—
Of course you can not doubt it—
He takes his county paper,
And can not do without it.

Texas Cattle.

The Special Commissioner of the Edinburgh Scotsman has been to Texas, and this is what he says about the cattle that he saw there: Regarding the history and characteristics of the Texan cattle, a sentence of two will suffice. They are indeed none else than Spanish cattle, direct descendants of those unseemly, rough, lanky, long-horned animals reared for so long and in such large herds by the Moors on the plains of Andalusia. The Spaniards who discovered Mexico, and afterward settled in Texas, brought cattle with them, and so exclusively have the descendants of these been reared in Texas that the Texan Cattle of today may be called the full-blooded Spaniards, inheriting and displaying all the characteristics of the herds that roamed on their native plains. In Texas, these imported cattle, though comparatively tame and quiet at home, had such unlimited ranges to wander over that they soon became perfectly wild, bounding off with furry at the sight of a human being; and even yet many of these herds are in a semi-wild state, and so furious that a man on foot could not venture to approach them. The herd boys are all mounted, and the wild cattle know a man on horseback, and run from him; but a man on foot is a stranger and an enemy to them, and they at once give battle. Under these circumstances, it is not at all wonderful that these millions of cattle now roaming at large in Texas deserve no higher praise than was bestowed on the original breed. The characteristics of the Spanish breed, as generally recognized, may be summed up thus—long, spreading, half-turned back horns; long legs, thin, lanky body; big, ill-put-together bones, throwing the body high at the hooks and low on the ramps and loins; coarse head, thin thighs, light waist; a great amount of offal compared to the weight of the beef; and various colors, generally yellow, red, roan, dun, and black, with very often an iron colored stripe along the back. They have never been regarded as good milkers, and their beef as a rule is inferior. I have already seen nearly twenty thousand Texan cattle, and though there certainly were a few very fair beasts among them, I could not modify any of the above terms in describing an average specimen.

Fighting for a Home.

A woodpecker's hole is such a very convenient place for a nest that many other birds are glad to find one unoccupied. Sometimes a pair of wrens will watch the motions of the woodpeckers while they are at work, until an unfinished hole is left unguarded, when they will take possession of it. As soon as the lawful owners return, the thieves are driven off, but they are so persistent and troublesome that, although a woodpecker is larger and stronger than twenty wrens, the owners sometimes abandon the place, and make a new nest. Still, the wrens are not always allowed to keep the house they have stolen, for the blue birds are equally covetous of it, and sometimes fight fiercely with the wrens in their attempt to gain possession of it. Occasionally both wrens and blue birds are driven away by the martins, for these birds also prize woodpeckers' holes very highly. The fierce battles between these various birds over an abandoned hole are very amusing, and often last several days; for they are all very obstinate birds, and as each one is determined not to give up, the matter is not very easily settled.—Prof. W. K. Brooks, St. Nicholas for June.

How many horses suffer by the want of attention to the axles of carts and wagons. We often see the wheels running at an angle ten or fifteen degrees "out of true," the teamster seeming not to realize how much this increases the burden. If the wheels only revolve, it seems all that is needed by the reckless driver. Then, again, want of care in greasing the wheels is another source of unnecessary labor for the horses. It is only fair that, while we require reasonable labor from our animals, we shall grant them reasonable facilities for doing it.

Discovery of Gas.

Great was the amazement of all England when, at the close of the last century, William Murdoch discovered the use of combustible air of gas. So little was the invention understood and believed in by those who had not seen it in use, that even great and wise men laughed at the idea. "How could there be a light without a wick?" said a member of the Parliament, when the subject was brought before the House. Even Sir Humphrey Davy ridiculed the idea of lighting the town by gas, and asked one of the projectors if they meant to take the dome of St. Paul's for a gas meter. Sir Walter Scott, too, made himself merry over the idea of illuminating London by smoke; although he was glad enough, not long after, to make his own house at Abbottsford light and cheerful on winter nights by the use of that very smoke. When the House of Commons was lighted by gas, the architect imagined that the gas ran on fire through the pipes, and therefore insisted on their being placed several inches from the wall, for fear of the building taking fire; and members might be observed carefully touching the pipes with their gloved hands and wondering they did not fell warm. The first shop lighted in London by this method was Mr. Ackermann's in the Strand, in 1810; and one lady of rank was so delighted with the brilliancy of the gas lamp on the counter that she asked to be allowed to take it home in her carriage. Mr. Murdoch was, however, too busy with his other pursuits to continue to study the use of gas; and though he was undoubtedly the first to apply it to practical purposes, many others laid claim to the honor, and other people quickly reaped the benefit of his cleverness and ingenuity. In this he shared the general fate of inventors.

The Horrors of Chinese Warfare.

A correspondent of the London Times, writing from Shanghae of the Chinese rebellion, gives a thrilling account of the capture of Manas by the government troops and the terrible scene of bloodshed which ensued. The Mohammedan commander of the insurgents sought and obtained permission to surrender, and marched into the government camp with three thousand fighting men armed to the teeth. The government general ordered them to throw down their arms, when they suddenly made a rush for their besiegers, who had, however, been suspecting this movement, and soon repulsed them. The insurgent leader was captured and beheaded before his line of battle. And his troops were all finally captured and killed to a man. Another body of the government troops had, meanwhile, captured the city and put to death every one of the inhabitants, sparing only the old men, women and children. Hai-gen and other insurgent leaders were captured alive and put to death with extreme torture. The corpses of various other leaders, together with the remains of the "Prince of Pure Religion," so called, who had died or been slain during the siege, were sought out and exhumed and cut to pieces before the troops and survivors of the rebels as a public example. In short, all the able-bodied males in the city were massacred, to the number of several thousand. The account of the affair is not taken from rumor, but from the official report of the imperial viceroy and of the commander of the government forces, Gen. Kin-Shun.

THE old-fashioned log-rolling at the farm of Mr. A. Furnas, three and a half miles south of Danville, on Saturday last, honored as it was with the presence of Gov. Williams, was the occasion of a grand holiday turnout by at least one-fourth of the population of the county. The Governor was in attendance in fulfillment of a promise made long ago to Dr. Furnas, when the two had disagreed about some point in the science of log-rolling during the meeting of the State Board of Agriculture. He entered into the work of the occasion with a keen zest, lifting logs and driving a team of oxen to the admiration of all beholders. After the bountiful lunch which had been provided by Mrs. Furnas, Gov. Williams made a short address, giving amusing reminiscences of early days in Indiana, and winding up with some excellent advice to young men.—Indianapolis Journal.

DR. L. E. BROWN, of Eminence, Ky., says he has purchased a Cotswold buck in Canada, which he expects to bring over soon, and with which he expects to clear the decks at the approaching fairs. We look forward to the exhibition of fine sheep this summer and fall with much interest, knowing that many very fine animals have been among the importations this year.—Farmer's Home Journal.

OUT of reports of crops from two hundred and eleven points in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky, published in the Cincinnati Commercial, one hundred and seventy-nine indicate a good crop of wheat, thirty-one a fair crop, one a light crop, if any; forty-seven a good crop of fruit, seventy-four a fair, and ninety-eight a poor crop, if any.

IN the absence of any political excitement the New Haven newspapers are engaged in trying to discover the person who has the largest hand in the State. At the present the distinction rests with a citizen of an interior town, who has performed the interesting feat of holding twenty-eight eggs in the palm of his open hand.

The All-Important Thing Pointed Out by Mr. Tilden and Mr. Hendricks.

The importance and significance of the brief speeches of Mr. Tilden and Mr. Hendricks lie in the fact that both speakers indicate the main feature of the politics of the future, which is the main feature of the politics of to-day. It is the crushing of the fraud which was begun in November and consummated in March. Mr. Tilden dwelt on this, to the exclusion of everything else. After characterizing the fraud as the "most portentous event in our political history," the "greatest wrong that has stained our national annals," he said:

The question now is whether our elective system, in its substance as well as its form, is to be maintained. This is the question of questions. Until it is finally settled, there can be no politics founded on inferior questions of administrative policy. It involves the fundamental right of the people. It involves the elective principle. It involves the whole system of popular government. The people must signally condemn the great wrong which has been done to them. They must strip the example of everything that can attract imitators. They must refuse a prosperous immunity to crime. This is not all. The people will not be able to trust the authors or beneficiaries of the wrong to devise remedies. But when those who condemn the wrong shall have the power, they must devise the measure which shall render a repetition of the wrong forever impossible.

Mr. Hendricks was no less emphatic than Mr. Tilden in his words on this subject. Said he:

The result (the counting in of Hayes) is not, and can not be made, satisfactory to the country, for the obvious reason that it was not true. A great and sincere people will rest their final judgment only upon truth, and never upon fraud successful through technicality. The people can not allow the selection of their Chief Magistrate to become a thing of chance or of sharp practice. The fraud first triumphant in American history must be assigned to its proper place among the crimes against popular government, and made so odious that no party will dare to attempt its repetition. He who is elected President must be inaugurated. Until that is settled and made sure, no Democrat can be seduced from his devotion and allegiance in any way.

These remarks of Mr. Tilden and Mr. Hendricks are sound, just and sagacious. They indicate the doom of Hayesism, and give assurance that fraud will be overthrown and punished.—New York Sun.

Official Salaries in Kentucky.

Kentucky has always been averse to paying large salaries to public officials, and large salaries have never been paid by the State. Before the war the annual compensation of State officers was notably small, from the Governor down, and it was a matter of great difficulty for a man with even a small family to pay his necessary expenses out of his salary. For instance, the Governor received only $2,500, the Secretary of State only $750, the Treasurer $1,700, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction $750, while the Judges of the Court of Appeals got only $1,500 apiece. When the unavoidable expenses of these officials at the seat of government are considered, these salaries appear unreasonably small, as they really were, the consequence being that, at the end of his term, the officer invariably found himself in debt.

In 1872-3, the Legislature of the State, looking at the costs of living, very justly increased the salaries of these and other officers, keeping, however, within the limits of prudence and economy. The salary of the Governor was made $5,000; that of the Secretary of State, $1,500; that of the Treasurer, $2,400; that of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, $3,000; that of each Judge of the Court of Appeals, $5,000. These salaries are only reasonable. They are not a cent too large for the abilities required and the services to be rendered. Any one of the men occupying the respective offices can make as much, if not more, money per year in the ordinary walk of business life, freed from much of the expense unavoidably connected with an important official station.—Louisville News.

THE Cincinnati Commercial continues to insist on giving the silver dollar "its old place." As a matter of fact, it never had any place that amounted to anything. The question of adopting silver as part of our currency is an important practical question, and the discussion of it ought to be kept free from exaggeration, falsification, humbuggery, demagoguery and sham sentiment. It is true that no discussion of a public question in this country was ever kept free from those things, but we are gradually improving all the time, and this is a good occasion to have the proper sort of discussion. If we can get a currency of two metals circulating freely together as legal tenders, we will get something we never had before, and we would no doubt get a good thing. The question is, can we get it or keep it?—Louisville Commercial.

IT is quite natural that the indignation within the Republican party at the course of Hayes should be both deep-seated and wide-spread. He has not acquitted himself as the masses of the party who voted for him expected that he would, and it will be a long while before these will be able to understand how Louisiana cast her electoral vote for Hayes, but did not choose Packard Governor, when the latter's vote, by every count that has been made in the State, was seven hundred in excess of the average vote cast for the Republican Presidential electors.—Detroit Free Press.

I WOULDN'T—WOULD YOU?

When a lady is seen at a party or ball—
Her eyes vainly turned in her fits of conceit,
As she peers at the gentlemen, fanc'ying all
Are enchain'd by her charms, and would kneel at her feet,
With each partner coquetting—to nobody true—
I wouldn't give much for her chances—would you?

When an upstart is seen on the flags strutting out,
With his hat cocked aslant and a glass in his eye,
And thick clouds of foul smoke he stands puffing about,
As he inwardly says, "What a noble am I,"
While he twists his moustache for the ladies to view,
I wouldn't give much for his senses—would you?

When a wife runs about at her neighbors to pry,
Leaving children at home, unprotected, to play,
Till she starts back in haste at the sound of their cry,
And finds they've been fighting while mother's away,
Sugar eaten—panes broken—the wind blowing through,
I wouldn't give much for her comfort—would you?

When a husband is idle, neglecting his work,
In the public-house snarling with quarrelsome knaves;
When he gambles with simpletons, drinks like a Turk,
While his good wife at home for the poor children slaves,
And that home is quite destitute, painful to view,
I wouldn't give much for his morals—would you?

When a boy at his school, lounging over his seat,
Sits rubbing his head and neglecting his book,
While he fumbles his pockets for something to eat,
Yet pretendeth to read when his master may look
Though he boasts to his parents how much he can do,
I wouldn't give much for his progress—would you?

When a man who is driving a horse on the road,
Reins and whips the poor brute with unmerciful hand,
While it willingly strives to haste on with its load,
Till with suffring and working it scarcely can stand,
Though he may be a man, and a wealthy one, too,
I wouldn't give much for his feelings—would you?

When a master who lives by his laborers' skill,
Hoards his gold up by thousands, still craving for more,
Though poor are his toilers, he grindeth them still,
Or unfeelingly turns them away from his door,
Though he banketh his millions with claims not a few,
I wouldn't give much for his conscience—would you?

When a tradesman his neighbors' fair terms will decry,
And keeps puffing his goods at a wonderful rate,
E'en at prices at which no fair trader can buy,
Though customers flock to him early and late,
When a few months have fled, and large bills become due,
I wouldn't give much for his credit—would you?

When in murderous deeds a man's hands are imbrued,
Though revenge is his plea and the crime is conceal'd,
The severe stings of conscience will quickly intrude,
And the mind, self-accusing, can never be healed;
When the strong arm of Justice sets out to pursue,
I wouldn't give much for his freedom—would you?

When a husband and wife keep their secrets apart,
Not a word to my spouse about this or on that;
When a trifle may banish the pledge of their heart,
And he naggles—she snaggles—both contradict flat;
Though unequaled their love when its first blossom blew,
I wouldn't give much for their quiet—would you?

When a man who has lived here for none but himself,
Feels laid on his strong frame the cold hand of death,
When all fade away—wife, home, pleasures and pelf—
And he yields back to God both his soul and his breath—
As up to the judgment that naked soul flew,
I wouldn't give much for his Heaven—would you?

The First Watch.

At first the watch was about the size of a dessert plate. It had weights, and was used as a "pocket clock." The earliest known use of the modern name occurs in the record of 1552, which mentions that Edward VI. had "one larum or watch of iron, the case being likewise of iron gilt, with two plummets of lead." The first watches may readily be supposed to have been of rude execution. The first great improvement, the substitution of springs for weights, was in 1560. The earliest springs were not coiled, but only straight pieces of steel. Early watches had only one hand, and being wound up twice a day, they could not be expected to keep time nearer than fifteen or twenty minutes in twelve hours. The dials were of silver or brass; the cases had no crystals, but opened at the back and front, and were four or five inches in diameter. A plain watch cost the equivalent of $1,600 in our currency, and after one was ordered it took a year to make it.

The National Credit.

There is a class of disinterested patriots in the East who are addicted to the practice of dragging the national credit into every discussion that involves in the remotest degree their incomes and interest. If they desire a certain thing done, they demand it in behalf of the national credit; if they desire a certain measure defeated, they demand its defeat in the name of the same high consideration. At present, they are greatly concerned about the popular demand for the reinstatement of the silver dollar in the coinage, and, as usual, they bring out the national credit as a bugaboo to deter the country from the proposed measure. "The most serious feature in the movement for the unlimited issue of legal tender silver dollars is the effect which such a measure would have on the national credit"—is the way they begin their opposition; and then they solemnly proceed to tell us that "a necessity rests upon us to preserve the credit with the utmost care and fidelity," and that "it is perfectly clear that the issue of an unlimited quantity of legal tender silver coin would have the most serious effect upon the standing of our bonds."

It the American people are living for the sole purpose of paying debts and raising the the price of the $1,000 national bond, it might be advisable for Congress to pass a law declaring that $1,050, or $1,100 would be paid for that bond when due. That would be upholding the public credit very effectually. But if the people exist for other purposes than paying debts, a little less ot this interminable sermonizing about the national credit would be advisable. The good faith of the government has never been brought in jeopardy yet. The government has not failed to pay its creditors a single dollar less than it owed them; on the contrary, it has paid them a great many more than it owed them. In fact it has so repeatedly constructed its contracts with its creditors, in the interest of those creditors, that the latter have got the idea that have only to ask and receive—particularly if they ask in the name of the national credit. It might be properly suggested to the holders of the national bonds that the people, not they, are the custodians of the public faith, and the people are not to be dictated to about the means of discharging the trust. They propose to pay every dollar of the national debt faithfully and fairly; they have been doing it for twelve years. No people on the face of the earth ever accepted more cheerfully and performed more loyally the task of meeting a burden some obligation than the American people have their public debt. But they have a great many other things to look after in the meantime, and it is neither just nor wise for those who are the holders of that debt to be constantly taunting them with the purpose of repudiation. The less said about the national credit the better. It will be time enough to make an out-cry when it is in danger.—St. Louis Republican.

As to Blaine's plans in relation to national politics, there are many rumors. A few days ago he was reported as the instigator of a movement looking to the organization of a new political party. This Washington meeting he has since repudiated. That is not a part of his programme. The news now comes from Washington which gives a sensible exposition of his purpose. He means to be the champion of the simon-pure Republican party, and all his abilities will be directed to arouse the ancient fervor of the ancient faith. The administration and the would-be leaders of the administration party will be attacked, on the ground that they have abandoned the ancient faith, and deliberately, with corrupt intent, attempted to destroy the Republican party. The purpose of Blaine is to carry high the standard of the simon-pure Republican party, and to rally to it the loyal element of the North, which was so irresistibly strong during the war and through the reconstruction period. Blaine struck the key-note of the last campaign in his Andersonville speech, and the entire canvass on the Republican side was made on the issue he then so sharply and forcibly raised. There is an apparent apathy in the public mind which, for some time, deceived the administration. But, as there was no popular uprising, no public demonstrations, and no general outcry by the Republican press, Hayes and his advisers flattered themselves that disaffected machine politicians like Blaine, as they termed this popular leader, would soon be forced to pull in the administration traces; but, after two months' experience, they begin to discover that the disaffection is much more formidable than they thought possible.—Calais (Me.) Times.

It is time that the people were demanding of their representatives that mode of legislation which will do away with this system of legalized robbery, warring upon the better elements of society, and making deeper and broader the cesspools of vice and crime. The well-being of the State and the safety of the citizens demand it.—Washington Co. Herald.

The First Shirt Button.

Young Charley Overblower married about a month ago, and when he came back from his wedding tour, he and his pretty little wife, Emma, took possession of a charming flat up town. Early one evening, after they were fairly settled, and the last of Emma's sisters had been induced to conclude her visit, Charley proposed to Emma that they should go to the theater. The woman assented, and both began to amend their toilets. In a few moments Charley said:

"Darling, I am sorry to trouble you, but really I think I shall be obliged to have to ask you to sew a button on this shirt."

"Of course; why not?" said Emma, delighted at a chance to show her skill. She took the garment, seated herself, and said:

"I can't remember, for the life of me, where I put those buttons. Charley, look in that box and see if you can find one."

Charley looked in that box, which was a case of perfume bottles, and not finding the desired article, concluded he would not bother Emma for further information, so he pulled a button from another shirt.

"Now, Charley," said Emma, "look in the top bureau drawer and get me a paper of needles and a spool of white cotton—be sure to get the white cotton."

Charley found in the top bureau drawer a copy of Tennyson—he remembered it well, and picked it up and looked at the marginal marks and comments, dear, affectionate little girl that she was!—and more perfume bottles, and a pattern of a Flor de Fumer overskirt, and the beginning of a sofa cushion, and various other things, but no needle or cotton. Then he remembered that he had a fancy "housewife" that he had bought from a girl at a fair, and he got the needles and cotton out of that.

"Thank you, dear," said Emma, and she began to stitch vigorously, humming a dreamy Italian air. Presently she said:

"Oh Charley, won't you bring me the scissors? I think they're in my writing desk. I had them there to-day cutting a poem out of a paper."

The scissors were not in the writing desk, nor on the mantel, nor in the bureau drawer, nor in the case of perfume bottles, nor even the receiver; so Charley drew on his "housewife" again. Emma took the scissors, snipped the thread and exclaimed:

"There, darling; and now make haste or we shall be late."

Charley wriggled into the garment, and then put up his hands to button the band at the neck, but no button was there.

"Why, Em, where in thunder did you sew that button?"

"Oh, Charley, ain't you ashamed," exclaimed his wife; "where are your eyes?"

"If they were in the back of my head," answered Charlie, "perhaps I could see that button."

Emma raised herself on her tip-toes and looked at the band.

"Why, that's strange!" said she; "take it off and let me look at it."

The shirt was inspected thoroughly, and the button was found neatly and deftly sewed on just beneath the tag of the bosom, so as to button to that appendage in a most elegant manner.

"Well, by Jove!" exclaimed Charley; "if I didn't know any more about sewing on a button than that, I wouldn't get mar——I'd learn how."

"You were going to say you wouldn't have got married," cried his wife, putting on her hat hastily and bursting into tears.

"Where are you going?" demanded Charley, savagely.

"I'm going home, and I'll get a separation from you and your old shirts; that's where I'm going," blubbered Emma. "I thought you wanted the button there to fasten to your what-you-call-'ems."

It took Charley an hour to persuade Emma that if she went home there wouldn't be strawberries and cream enough to go around, and that she could get all she wanted at Delmonico's and he'd pay for it.

Our neighborhood was the scene of one of the darkest crimes perhaps ever committed in the county—it was that of a son choking to death a father. It seems from the testimony that on the morning of the 7th inst., between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock, that David Watt, an old and respected citizen of our neighborhood, and his son, John Watt, became engaged in a quarrel and then into a scuffle, when John got the old man down, siezing him with both hands upon the throat, exclaiming, "Father, I've got the nerve," and choked him to death. One witness stated that he remained on him about five minutes. The above was stated before the inquisition, which was held by Esquire Chinoweth. After the inquest the body was turned over to its friends and properly cared for, and was buried on the evening of the 8th inst., at the family burying ground at the residence Mr. Richard Denton's, in the Nobob neighborhood, in the presence of a large assembly of friends and relatives.—Glasgow Times.

Sights in the Museum of Pompeii.

A traveler who has been visiting the museum at Pompeii writes to the Detroit Free Press: Here are fish-hooks, curved and pointed and barbed as perfectly as those which anglers are using to-day; one of them with a snap hook attachment quite similar to that which is selling at a high price at home as a patented invention; and dentists' tools of the same horrifying and appalling construction as those which scare away toothache on their production in our dentistry parlors; and huge iron knob-stubbed money-chests, like the Salamander safes of our counting-rooms: and vases and reliefs in alabaster, through which the light comes softly, beautifying each stroke of the engraver's tool; and cameos and intaglio cut gems, which, when viewed with the naked eye, present on the surface but a mass of scratches, but when examined under a powerful magnifier show groups of figures of graceful design and exquisite drapery, a score or more; iron bedsteads of pattern and ornament fit for the most luxurious chambers to-day; nests and rows of brass kettles, large and small, of various designs and for divers purposes; candelabra whose graceful forms are the models for the most costly workmanship of the present time; and tiny hand lamps to go to bed with, each one an artistic study; apothecaries' and traders' scales and steelyards, and sets of weights, and (alas!) some of them ingeniously but fraudulently hollowed; children's toys, droves of animals like "Noah's Ark," dolls with movable arms and legs, and "Jumping Jacks," ready even now to be twitched by the pendant cord into convulsive movement; castors, with bottles for oil and vinegar, and little vases for spice; glasses of all graceful shapes and for all kinds of uses (one great "Pokal," for festive occasions, with the inscription, "Drink, my friend, and pass to the next!"); pretty porcelain cups, exactly like teacups, resting on little legs on the saucers below; beautiful vases of blue and silver, of most tasteful shape and delicate tracery.

He Scratched His Toe.

A Brewery Hill man took a bath the other Sunday morning, and the memory of that bath still clings to him, even as a piece of court-plaster clings to a sore spot. He had finished his ablutions, and before rubbing himself in entirety, backed up to the stove to get well dried off. There was a rousing fire, and the surface of the stove glowed and glistened with heat. The man stood within a few inches of it, absorbing the genial warmth, when all of a sudden his left big toe began to itch. He stooped down to scratch it. The stove seemed to move a few inches nearer him, and with a fearful yell he sprang four feet into the air. Coming down his feet struck on a bar of soap, which slid from under and sat him down on the floor. He got right up and began a Sitting-Bull war dance around the room, yelling at his lungs' best. His wife rushed to the door, and in anxious tones inquired through the key-hole:

"William Henry, what under the sun is the matter?"

"Sat—down—on—the—stove!" the injured man snorted at intervals, as he hopped about the room, and the odor of burnt meat which floated about the room, and through the key-hole confirmed the terrible tale.—Norwich Chronicle.

Done.

A man who looked like a countryman was lately walking in the street with a packet in his hand, sealed and addressed with a memorandum that contained a thousand dollars in bank notes. As the bearer appeared to be at a loss he was accosted by a man, who asked him what he was looking for. The simple countryman placed the packet in the inquirer's hands, and requested that he would read the address, as he was unable to do so and had forgotten it. The reply was made as with agreeable surprise, "Why, this letter is for me! I have been expecting it for a long time." The messenger upon this demanded a dollar for the carriage of the packet, which was readily paid. The new possessor of the packet hastened to an obscure corner to examine the prize. He found nothing but a few sheets of paper on which was written the single word "Done."

THE delay on the Danube is satisfactorily accounted for. The Russians as well as the Turks have been contemplating the war maps in American newspapers, and dare not move; they would be absolutely certain to get lost, and a Russian or Turkish army lost in the labyrinths of an American war map must certainly starve to death before it could be rescued.—Covington Ticket.

"DOCTOR wants to know if you will please pay this bill now?" Old gentleman looks over the items and replies: "Tell the Doctor I will pay him for his medicines and return his visit."

A LITTLE urchin accosted a drug-store man, the other day: "Mister, please gimme a stick of licorice; your clerk goes with my sister."

The Indians appear to be assuming a hostile attitude, and one thousand stands of arms have been ordered to Oregon, five hundred to Idaho and five hundred to Washington Territory. The Indians are becoming more troublesome on account of their being better provided with arms.

The trial of Smith N. Hawes, in Covington, last week, under the indictment for forgery, resulted in his acquittal under the one indictment, but there are several indictments of the same character against him, and to which he will be required to plead this term. He may be bagged yet.

The Court of Appeals has reversed the judgment of the Boone Circuit Court in the case of the Commonwealth against W. G. Terrell, because of error in the instuctions given the jury, and the admission of improper testimony prejudicial to the defense. The rulings of Judge McManama, in the late trial, were remodeled in many respects.

Simon Cameron is a "wicked old sinner." He compares the different attitudes of Hayes and Sherman on the silver question to the inscription he once saw on a signboard at the forking of a Pennsylvania road. The inscription read thus: "Take either road you choose, and before you have gone half way you will wish you had taken the other." It appears that Simon has but little faith in Sherman's and Hayes' positions on the silver question.

It seems that some of the voters have obtained an idea that, there being but two candidates for the nomination for County Representative, there will be no Convention, or in other words no delegates chosen. This is a mistaken idea. There will be a Convention, just as ordered by the Executive Committee, and districts that don't want to be counted out of the Convention should choose their delegates. There is but one way for a candidate to get before the Convention his strength in any voting district and that is through the medium of delegates. A precinct not chosing delegates, will, under the order of the Committee, have nothing to say when the time comes to count noses.

The Russians have at last crossed the Danube and occupy the northern portion of the Dobrudscha. After the troops commenced the crossing, there was no delay until the army was crossed. The main body of troops which crossed the river quartered near Matchin. Servia is reported making preparations for war, and open hostilities on her part are expected to commence at no late day. The Montenegrins have been successful in recent battles, and now have the Turkish army hemmed in and occupying a very critical position. The Montenegrins state that they have lost one-seventh of their army in the recent battles since they went into the field. The Turks have been in high spirits occasioned by the reported success of the Ottoman army. One of the Turkish Captains who commanded a monitor that was destroyed in the Danube has been court-martialed.

Tuesday evening, Messrs. Rouse and Conner, candidates for County Representative, delivered themselves of speeches in the Court-house. Mr. Rouse in his opening remarks said he had been misrepresented in the county, in regard to his position on the road law, and he made the appointments to speak at this and other places that he might set himself right in regard to that subject. Mr. Rouse spoke upon the several different subjects that have been discussed during the canvass. Mr. Conner's remarks were very brief, touching but few of the subjects alluded to by Mr. Rouse. These gentlemen are now making the second heat which will be concluded Friday evening. Saturday, vox populi will make the third heat and decide the race for them.

Twelve States will hold elections during the present year, to wit.: Kentucky, August 6; Vermont, September 4; California, September 5; Iowa and Ohio, October 9; Maine, September 10; and Massachusetts, Mississippi, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia and Wisconsin, November 6. In four of these State Legislatures are to be chosen which will furnish successors to a like number of United States Senators, whose terms expire on March 4, 1879, viz.: Kentucky, New York, Ohio and California.

The June report of the Department of Agriculture shows up a better prospect than usual for wheat. The report for the month of June makes the average for the country thirteen per cent. below the normal condition. The average for winter and spring wheat together is one hundred, winter wheat being below and spring wheat above that figure. The returns from California indicate the half of a full crop from the deficiency of winter and fall.

That there may be no mistake about the law governing the primary election, next Saturday, we this week reproduce the action of the Executive Committee, and suggest to the officers who conduct the election to have a copy at the polls and adhere strictly to the order. A single deviation may stir up more dirt than can be settled in the next four years.

STATE NEWS.

—Two large black Berkshire sows have a habit of sousing themselves down in the mud-hole in front of the Yeoman office.—Frankfort Yeoman. Stab 'em with your Faber.

—Mayfield Monitor: The tobacco crop is planted, and from the farmers we learn that it is the heaviest ever set in this county. With good seasons from this time on the crop will be by far the largest ever raised in Graves.

—Lebanon Standard: Farmers have commenced cutting orchard grass and will commence harvesting their wheat within a day or two. The wheat prospect is excellent, but the crop may have received some damage from the wind and rain of last Monday night and yesterday afternoon.

—Woodford Sun: The farmers generally all over the county commenced cutting their barley this week. The frequent and heavy rains however have impeded them in their work. It is thought that the yield of small grain in the county will be greater than for thirty years past.

—Frankfort Yeoman: More horse-thief troubles have broken out in Lewis County. The celebrated Underwood gang has again made its appearance, and late dispatches from that section give an account of a bloody fight, in which several members of the gang are reported killed. George Underwood is among the number.

—Clinton Democrat: The harvesting of the wheat crop is being vigorously pushed this week. The bulk of the crop will be cut this and next week. Some apprehensions were felt for its safety last week on account of the heavy rains, but notwithstanding the growth is unprecedently luxuriant, but little has fallen or tangled so far.

Primary Election.

At a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee for Boone County, held in Burlington on the 16th of April, it was ordered that, for the purpose of choosing a Democratic candidate for the Legislature and a candidate for the State Senate for this Senatorial District, a primary election be held on the last Saturday before the 1st Monday in July next.

That a poll be opened at the place of holding the regular election in each precinct on the day above mentioned, at 6 a. m. and kept open till 7. p. m.

That no person shall be allowed a vote unless he has identified himself with the Democratic party, or (never having voted) will pledge himself to support the nominee of the convention.

That the names of the candidates for both offices shall be on the poll-books, and at the same time a voter votes for Representative he shall vote for the number of delegates his district is entitled to under the rule hereinafter laid down.

That the delegates chosen in the several districts shall meet in the Court-house in Burlington on the 2d day of July, 1877, at 1 p. m. and cast the pro rata vote of their districts, the candidate receiving a majority of all the votes cast by the delegates to be the nominee of the Democratic party for the office of County Representative.

That, after the first ballot, the hindmost candidate be dropped after each ballot till a ballot results in a nomination.

That the vote for Senator shall be cast, at the primary election, directly for the candidates for said office, the delegates to be chosen only in the matter of candidates for the Legislature.

That the clerks of the election in each precinct shall foot up and certify the result of the vote cast and the names of the persons chosen as delegates.

That the clerk, immediately upon the closing of the polls, and in the presence of the Judges, make out his certificate and seal it and the poll-book in the same package which he shall deliver to the County clerk at 10 a. m. the 2d day of July, 1877.

That each district shall be allowed, in selecting delegates to send to the convention to nominate a candidate for the State Legislature, one delegate for every 50 votes cast for Tilden and Hendricks and one for every 25 or fraction over 25.

The following is the vote cast for Tilden and Hendricks in the several districts in the county, and upon which the number of delegates to which each district is entitled in the convention, is based:

PRECINCTS.	Votes.	Delegates.	PRECINCTS.	Votes.	Delegates.
Bellevue	88	2	Taylorsport	201	4
Burlington	223	4	Union	189	4
Carlton	146	3	Verona	144	3
Hamilton	182	4	Walton	156	3
Florence	268	5
Petersburg	206	4	Totals	1802	36

The following named were appointed officers to conduct the primary election to be held on the 30th inst.:

Burlington—B. K. Sleet, F. Riddell, Judges; Lewis Dills, Clerk.

Petersburg—Nathan Walton, J. Frank Grant, Judges; F. P. Walton, Clerk.

Taylorsport—Cyrus Riddell, John Stephens, Judges; A. Whitlock, Clerk.

Bellevue—L. P. Arnold, A. Corbin, Judges; J. A. Akin, Clerk.

Carlton—Thos. N. Stephens, Wm. Nelson, Judges; J. A. Wilson, Clerk.

Hamilton—Wash Huey, W. W. Garnett, Judges; Mitchel Black, Clerk.

Verona—W. M. Rogers, S. J. Hume, Judges; Jas. M. Sleet, Clerk.

Walton—Geo. T. Gaines, L. B. Stephens, Judges; Sam Hind, Clerk.

Union—Henry Banister, John Riley, Judges; Capt. Stansifer, Clerk.

Florence—Judge Ashley, Frank Varner, Judges; Butler Carpenter, Clerk.

Should any of the officers appointed refuse to act, the remaining officers are authorized to appoint other persons to fill the vacancies, and in case all the officers herein appointed fail or refuse to act, the Democrats at the voting place where such is the case are authorized to choose officers to conduct the election.

A. Sayer, J. C. Terrill,
L. P. Arnold, V. Dickerson,
Committee.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

St. Louis, Mo., June 23, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

If you had enough ready cash about your person to pay for the strawberries and cream for two, it would be a pleasure to have you with us this week, so we could sit down in some nice cool place and discuss the aforesaid luxuries, and quietly and leisurely tell you the news. The weather is too hot, and we are too dull, to write.

It would seem as if our people generally are, just about this time, afflicted with a chronic stupidity or inactivity. Nothing excites or moves the masses with us just now. A committee of our best men was appointed about two weeks since to devise ways and means for having a grand second Centennial fourth of July celebration. Several meetings have been held and numerous drinks taken, and that is about all that is done so far; and, the way matters stand at this time, it would not surprise us in the least if the committee finally decides that fourth of July celebrations don't pay, and advises every fellow that feels like it to play patriot on his own hook. We have not heard of a dollar being raised or a plan adopted, as yet.

On Tuesday last the National Bank of the State of Missouri, the oldest and by far largest bank west of the Mississippi, suspended, and yet there is no excitement whatever. In ordinary times, in case of such a calamity (for it is certainly a great calamity, not only to this city but for the entire West), men having money in banks would be running here and there to find out if their bank would not be the next to close doors. But, as it is, business men generally seem to look upon the affair as an ordinary occurrence. Nobody seems the least alarmed or concerned. It did not create half the talk or excitement the four Dean babies did. The aforesaid bank was organized nearly forty years ago as the Bank of the State of Missouri, with a capital of $3,500,000, and has always been considered the most solid and substantial bank of the West—went through all the panics without a shudder, keeping their paper always as good as gold. In 1868 the company cut their capital down to $2,500,000 and organized under the National Banking system. In closing doors, Tuesday, they owe to depositors about two million dollars, which will probably be paid in course of time dollar for dollar, as individual stockholders are liable for that, but it is generally considered stockholders will come out without a dollar on their investments.

On Wednesday last August Neuhaus, a young unmarried man employed by the firm of Bosse & Prabbe, No. 2,725 Franklin avenue, ate a hearty supper about 6 o'clock p. m., and at that hour was seemingly as cheerful as usual. But about one hour later his body was found hanging by the neck in the ice-house on the premises, life being extinct. No cause whatever is assigned for the rash act. The same day, an unknown man was seen by several parties to jump from Wiggins' wharf-boat into the Father of Waters and disappear.

We will have to ask you to excuse us with this, as the two cases are all we have to report this week so far. It would seem that our people are improving in morals and stability of character, or else succeeding in becoming unpopular. We have had hot days and cool nights the week through. It has been a good week for sleeping.

Quite a number of our clergy, as well as a goodly number of their rich parishioners, have gone to their usual summer resorts, leaving their poorer brethren to get along through the hot months as best they can. We don't know whether this is orthodox or not, and we do not care about discussing it just here; but it rather strikes us the preachers under the "old dispensation" didn't do that way. We would like to hear from "Col. Henderson" on this particular subject.

One of our friends had gotten his wife and children ready, had his own wardrobe repaired and replenished, had gathered up three thousand dollars, upon which he expected to have a good time this summer among the fashionable places of resort; but, being not quite ready to start, he deposited the three thousand dollars for safe keeping until he was ready to board the train in that soundest of all banks, the National Bank of Missouri, and now he ain't a going to start this week, as the bank ain't ready, and it may be that his money has gone where the woodbine twineth, and he will be cheated out of a nice trip. But "sich" is the way of the world. We will venture the prediction that that fellow is more unhappy to-day than any gentleman in Stringtown or Taylorsport.

If people would only live as they did under the "old dispensation," there would not be half the failures in business that we are having from day to day. We scarcely ever pick up a paper but what the first thing we notice is a failure of some kind or a suicide; and generous people are kind enough to say shrinkage in values is the cause of the first, and the first is the cause of the last, nine times out of ten. Who ever heard of a fellow suiciding under the "old dispensation" on account of having no money or being disappointed in business?

The Recorder of Thursday is to hand, and we are pleased to notice that your Florence correspondent has spoken wisely, truthfully and in a becoming manner of "our choice;" and we are more than pleased to see "our choice" has so many admirers in Gallatin and Petersburg. Sensible people always appreciate true merit, and we always knew there were sensible people thereabouts. If Col. Henderson is not elected, it will be because people don't vote for him or neglect their own interest. One or the other is true, just as certain as you live.

We have had light receipts of grain the week through, particularly so as regards wheat. Of this latter cereal, we have not received more than 20,000 bushels for the entire week, and, stocks in store being about exhausted, prices for the week have run up fully 20c. per bushel above quotations of this day a week ago. We quote No. 2 red, $1 90 @1 95; No. 3 red, $1 75@1 80; No. 4, $1 60 @1 63. Corn, 42@44c.

We received, last Tuesday, the second car of new wheat for the season. It came from Texas, and was of only fair quality, and sold at $1 68 per bushel, and was made into flour the next day which sold at $8 75 per barrel.

The weather for the week is just such as farmers need, both for growing crops and those that are being harvested; so everybody, as yet, are hopeful of an abundant harvest. Let it be so, for prices of breadstuffs are entirely too high for the laboring classes at the present prices of labor.

Yours truly, Bob A. Long.

—Candidates for County Representative are getting scarce in Clark County—only fifty-seven on the track.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

PROF. THOS. H. STEPHENSON'S school closed Tuesday. The pupils acquitted themselves in a manner that was highly complimentary to both scholars and teacher. MR. CLEVELAND SCOTT, of Kenton County, left with us, Saturday, a sample of oats known as Tennessee winter oats. He got the seed from Tennessee, sowed it last fall, and now has his oat harvest near at hand. The hundle left with us is composed of stalks bearing large and well-filled heads. No doubt but this variety will, in a few years, become quite popular, should they be sufficiently tough to endure the severe winters of this section.

THE last relict of the original business houses of the town is now being torn down, removed and converted into a stable. We have reference to the old Carding Machine building which has been abandoned for several years. This taken off blots out the last of the buildings occupied as factories or shops in this town at an early day. These old buildings have gone the way of those who erected, and at one time conducted within their walls a thrifty and profitable business.

JOHN L. SCOTT, Esq., of this city, from four stands of bees, has already had eleven swarms. He pronounces this an extraordinary bee season.—Frankfort Yeoman.

We can beat that slightly. F. Riddell, of Burlington, has three hives, which have turned out ten colonies this season. But of all the bees, those belonging to Richard Utz, about three-fourths of a mile north of town, are the most industrious. He has a swarm which, in eighteen days, filled a gum and cap with honey and sent out a large swarm.

MASONIC.

St. John's Day Celebrated at Burlington—2,000 People Congregate to Hear the Speeches—A Fine Day and a Pleasant Time.

The celebration of St. John's Day by the Masonic fraternity at this place, on last Saturday, was an event, the equal of which, in many respects, is unknown in the history of Burlington. The day, had the Committee of Arrangements had control of the weather, could have been no more favorable in any respect. By 8 o'clock Saturday morning the crowd commenced pouring in from off every road that diverges from the town, and the rattle of wheeled vehicles and the clatter of the feet of horses under the saddle kept up the din till noon. A large portion of the crowd made no halt in town, but passed immediately through and on to the woods in which the picnic was held.

The Masonic lodge was opened at 9:30 a. m., and, after some delay, occasioned by the music's being half an hour behind time, a procession was formed at the hall in the Court-house and marched down to the street, where it was joined by the Covington Cornet Band, and the march commenced on Mr. W. T. Smith's beech grove, which is about three quarters of a mile from town. Although a large portion of the persons had gone before the procession, it required the entire length of the road traveled to contain the crowd that followed the procession to the grove.

By 11 o'clock the entire crowd had assembled in the woods, which then resembled a sea of human beings, all anxious to get a view of those notorious for riding the goat and bearing the brands made by the red hot iron, applied in the third story of some old shaky building, the entrance to which is guarded by an old, gray-bearded, toothless man with a rusty sword in hand. This multitude was composed of persons from far and near, and contained many of the handsome belles and gallant young men for which Kentucky has acquired a national reputation.

Shortly after 11 o'clock the exercises were commenced on the ground by a beautiful and touching prayer offered by Rev. Lafe Johnson, of Walton. At the conclusion of the prayer, Geo. G. Hughes introduced Past Grand Master Chas. Eginton, who entertained the crowd something over an hour with an eloquent and instructive history of the Order, in which he alluded to the benefits derived from the Masonic brotherhood in the past, and what they are now laboring to accomplish for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the deceased Masons in this State. The speech was highly entertaining and instructive to all those who were so fortunate as to hear it.

While Mr. Eginton was speaking, the members of the Chapter from Union arrived, they having been delayed till too late to make connection with the procession when it moved from the hall. The Chapter members formed a procession at the entrance to the grove, where they were met with the music and marched to join the regular procession, which was then organizing to move on the table, some distance from the speaker's stand.

While the crowd was clearing the provision off the table, a force was engaged clearing the benches off of the floor, which was prepared for the dancers, who were to take possession of it after Rev. Lafe Johnson concluded his speech in the afternoon.

Immediately after dinner, Rev. Lafe Johnson delivered a highly interesting and able speech, which commanded the attention of all so fortunate as to get within earshot of the stand.

The speech-making part of the programme having been concluded, the exercises were varied to the tripping of "the light fantastic" on the dirt. The dancing part of the crowd "went in" with a vim, and, despite the grounds being heavy, they kept up the dance as long as the musicians could be persuaded to pipe for them.

When the music quit, of course the dance quit; and when the dance quit everything else quit, save getting away from the grounds as soon as possible. Quite a number of the young ladies and gentlemen from a distance remained in town and attended the ball given at the Morgan Academy that night by the Burlington String Band, which was a pleasant and enjoyable affair.

The crowd at the grove that day was estimated at two thousand persons, and when we remember that it is known, by actual count, that 220 wheeled conveyances came in on the Florence, East Bend and Bellevue roads alone, we are constrained to believe the estimate not too large.

Another interesting fact is that the good people for quite a distance around brought large baskets filled with everything that the most fastidious appetite could desire, and the result was the immense crowd was well and highly fed, feasting on everything that "the fat of the land affords."

The day was marked with quiet and peaceful behavior, there not being an incident to mar the enjoyment during the entire day.

It has been the custom of the citizens of the citizens of Burlington to compare large crowds assembled here with the crowd that came to see Pete Blim hung; but that crowd is now only second in magnitude, that of last Saturday outnumbering it by many.

NOTES.

Messrs. G. V. Rouse and Reuben Conner, candidates for County Representative, were present and shaking hands, but the day was too short for them to get around.

The percussion-cap-gun man done a good business Saturday. He was a good shot, knocking 2½ cents out of the boys' pockets every crack.

The collection taken up Saturday will defray the expenses by several dollars less than $000,000.

The floor upon which the dancing happened was rather soft, or, at least, section four in range seven was.

Some secrets were told at the celebration, Saturday, but they were not Masonic.

We tell a plumb-level square truth when we say the celebration was a grand success, with a single exception.

Of the newly-married, we noticed, Saturday, L. H. Voshell and lady and Benjamin Crisler and lady. We would hate to tell how many couple we saw apparently coasting that way.

Having Eyes, He Saw Not.

And it came to pass on the 23d day of the sixth month in the year eighteen hundred and seventy and seven, when there was a great feast for the people, and when much people had assembled themselves together to partake of the passover near the temple of justice in the city nigh to the Jordan, there came one whose surname was Cayton, from the hilly country once inhabited by the great beast, called in the books of antiquity the mammoth, and supposed by our forefathers to be one hundred cubits long and sixty cubits high, with great tusks of finest ivory, in weight a full burden for six camels. And this same man called Cayton came from his far-off land to the feast; but hearing that one Joseph, a son of Goss, and of broad shoulders and heavy muscles, and much given to contending with Mace, and Allen, and all other mighty giants that chance to come nigh unto him, desired in his heart to see Joseph, that he might feast his eyes upon his mighty limbs and open countenance, that he might return to his home, and call his wife and his children and his servants before him and say to them: "Lo! how much greater am I than thou. For verily I say unto you, of a truth, these eyes of mine hath seen Joseph Goss in all his glory; yea, even my right eye hath winked at him in the streets of the city on the day of the feast of the passover."

And Cayton called to Samuel, the keeper of the inn, saying:

"Samuel, Samuel; show unto me the man called Goss; I have traveled these many miles to rest mine eyes upon him. Wilt thou bring him before me—from out the inn into the broad daylight—that I may see his comely shape, and measure his arms, his chest and his mighty thighs."

And Samuel said, "Yea, Cayton; as thou sayest, so shall it be."

And now Samuel brought before Cayton the man of valor and many battles. And along with him also came Thomas, a teacher of ancient books, and of figures, and many other mysteries. This same Thomas is by some called Professor, because he is a learned man in his art, and has no mean build of body, but he hath a broad back and thick shoulders, and appeareth to be a man of strength and able to do battle.

And Samuel saith to Cayton, "Look where I point and see Goss."

And Samuel pointed to Thomas. And thus Cayton looked upon Thomas and believed in his heart that he saw Goss, and then straightway proceeded to measure and admire Thomas's symmetry and great strength, saying to Thomas:

"Surely thou art a perfect model of manhood, and thy strength is as the lion's; thy activity is that of the cat; but thy countenance is sweet and kind as the young of the doe. No man in this great land darest contend with thee."

And Samuel then said to Cayton, "Look thou upon the one I now show thee."

And Samuel showed unto him the man Goss, and said: "How thinkest thou that this man could stand before him thou so much hath admired?"

And Cayton, answering, said:

"Samuel, thinkest thou that I be as a fool, or as one without mind to direct me aright in these matters? Know thou, then, that this man thou now showest me would be as a suckling in the hands of this Goss thou first showed me. Can'st thou not see he hath the lubbers, and is filled with green grass and bulgeth out over his waistband. Yea, Samuel, my man can stand before three-score and ten such. Away with him."

And now Cayton sayeth unto Thomas:

"This day thou should'st escape in the confusion of this multitude, and peradventure thou should'st pass through my country, call upon me, and I will divide with thee to the last crust. Inquire for Cayton as thou journeyest homeward."

And so Cayton departed with much wisdom in his heart, for he hath not yet learned that he hath been fooled by Samuel and Thomas.

Grange Harvest Feast.

There will be a grand Grange Harvest Feast, under the auspices of the Patrons of Husbandry of Boone, in W. T. Smith's grove, near Burlington, Ky., on July 10th, 1877. Bro. Whitehead, Past Master of the New Jersey State Grange, and Sister Julia A. Garretson Pratt, lately Lecturer of the Iowa State Grange, have promised to be present on the occasion and give addresses. Also, Bro. Davie, Master Kentucky State Grange, and Rev. L. Johnson are expected. These persons are speakers noted for their ability, and no farmer should fail to attend and listen to the speeches. All Granges of the county are requested to meet at the grove, near the toll-gate, about 9½ o'clock a. m., bringing with them their banners, regalia and implements, and there form a procession and march to the stand. They are especially requested to meet at said grove promptly at the hour named, as the speaking is to commence at 10 a. m. Arrangements have been made to throw open the toll gate between Burlington and the grove for the occasion. So, come one, come all (and we might add here, come with your baskets well filled with eatables), and let us have a day of recreation during harvest which will inspire us to go forth on our labors with renewed vigor and strength. Every Patron should feel it his imperative duty to be present on this occasion. Good music will be in attendance. Should the weather be inclement, the meeting will be held at the Court-house in Burlington.

No births, deaths or weddings to report this week. The human family hereabouts is at anchor.

THE best information that we can get from our exchanges is the crops throughout the entire State are now promising. The tobacco crop planted during the past ten days is equal in acreage to that of last year. It is looking well, there being nearly plants sufficient to meet the demand the first season that came.

QUITE a wind storm, accompanied by thunder, lightning and hail, passed over this section last Monday afternoon. The wind was heavy, ripping up shade trees, slamming window blinds, breaking out window glass, and stirring up things generally. The hail that fell was the largest ever seen at this point, many of the stones being as large as walnuts. These large stones were not numerous, and had they been vegetation would have been entirely destroyed by them.

Owen County Democracy.

At a mass meeting held in Owenton, Owen County, on the 25 inst., Dr. E. D. Bainbridge was nominated as the Democratic candidate for County Representative, and a resolution passed approving the action of the State Central Committee in not calling a State Convention.

The following preamble and resolution were adopted:

WHEREAS, Capt. L. C. Norman, of Boone County, has been endorsed by the counties of Boone and Gallatin as their candidate for the State Senate and we see in him a man well suited for the position to which he aspires. Now, therefore,

Resolved, That we the Democracy of Owen County in mass meeting assembled endorse the action of Boone and Gallatin Counties, and declare Capt. Norman as our candidate for the State Senate from this district.

The meeting endorsed J. W. Tate for the office of State Treasurer.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Business was fair last week, and the tobacco trade was lively. The offerings were numerous, with a well sustained demand, and no material change in the prices. The sales aggregated about 460 hhds.

The horse and mule trade was very good, with very few on the market. About 75 horses were sold at auction, at from $40 to $100. Only 10 or 15 mules sold, at $45@125.

There was a slight decline in the cattle market. Extra shipping cattle brought $5@5 75; butchering cattle, $3@4 50.

Good old sheep brought 3@4c.; lambs from 4c. to 5½c. The offerings were light and the demand slow. There were a great many shipped.

There was a demand for hogs at 4¼@5c.

Wool about the same as last week.

Feathers—Prime goose brought 43c.; mixed lots, 26@33c.

There was a fair demand for corn at from 47c. to 54c.

Oats dull at 43@46c.

Butter advanced a little. Good country butter is worth from 12½c. to 15c.; common, about 10c.

Eggs are worth 8@9c.

Old chickens, $2 25@3 per dozen. Spring chickens, $1 25@2 50. Young ducks, full feathered, $2@2 75 per dozen. Young squirrels are worth $1 50@2 per dozen.

The vegetable market was pretty well filled. Kentucky potatoes brought $3 50@4 per brl.; Southern potatoes, $4@5 per brl. Cabbage, 75c.@$1 25 per brl., and $3@3 50 per crate of three brls. Snap beans, $3@4 per brl. Peas, 75c.@$1 25 per brl. Beets, $1 25@1 50 per brl. New (home) onions are worth $3 15@3 75 per brl.

Fruits—June apples bring from $2 to $5, according to quality. Raspberries, $5@7 per stand; currants, $4@5 per stand; cherries, $3@4 50 per stand; gooseberries, $2 25@2 75. Plums are worth $1 25@2 per crate of six gallons. LESTER.

The great question that is perplexing the brains of our deepest thinkers just now is, "Who spit in Schramm's hat?" It is painful to have a whole community thus kept on the tenter-hooks of suspense in an important matter like this, but such is the inexorable decree of fate, or some other powerful authority.

A picnic excursion on the Steamer Minnie, one day last week, to Cincinnati, and thence by various means of transportation to the Garden where the festive hip-on-top-of-us gambols in the frog pond and the entertaining monkey climbs the pole, was enjoyed by the members of the Sunday-school of the Reform Church especially, and by the neighborhood generally. Our old friend, N. S. Walton, was of the party, and he liked the Garden so much that he cautiously approached the proprietor, who was kindly pointed out by a knowing friend, and undertook to negotiate with him for the whole concern, with the avowed intention of leaving Boone and taking up his residence permanently along with the other animals. Those of his numerous friends who prefer that he should remain where he is, will draw a long, deep breath of relief when they learn that the proprietor declined to sell his show.

On Thursday of this week the Sunday-schools of the Universalist Church at Aurora and of the M. E. Church of this town, propose to join in a picnic excursion by the Minnie to Orange Grove. Shaking hands in brotherly love across the "bloody chasm" you see. By the way, the proprietor alluded to above will preside at the Grove.

Next Saturday is the day when, in accordance with the advice of the Executive Committee, the Democracy of Boone will apply a magic healing plaster to the big sore that has been attracting such a buzzing swarm of green, political flies for the past two months. (I believe I have put the word "green" where I did not intend it should go; but let it alone, it is about as expressive in one place as another.) Then on Monday following, as per second edition of said advice, the Convention will hoist said plaster (magic, healing, &c.) from said sore, and if some good, sound Democratic hide don't come along with it, then we will throw aside our robe of prophecy, and turn the whole business over to the said Committee.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

INDEPENDENCE, WASHINGTON CO., TEX., June 12th, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Thinking a few lines from this section of the country might be of some interest to your readers we take this occasion to furnish them.

The grasshoppers have left this part of the State, and the crops now look well; in fact, the people expect the best crops this year that have been raised here for some time. No time during the season have we been in need of rain. That necessity has been furnished just as vegetation and the farmers desired it.

The fruit is ripening, and there have been ripe peaches for two weeks. This crop will be heavy.

The commencement at Baylor Academy last week, was a grand affair, and demonstrates the fact that there is much talent in the rising generation of the Lone Star State. J. H. MITRICK.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

BURLINGTON, KY., JUNE 28.

A ROYAL BOY.

Among the fine old Kentucky homes
Upon a simple, wooded throne,
There's one with but a small domain;
But, mark you, it is all his own.

And though upon his rustic towers
No blazoned standard waves its wing,
Thick, leafy banners, flushed with flowers,
From all the fragrant casements swing.

And here, in royal homespun, bow
His nut-brown court at night and morn;
The bronzed Field Marshal of the Plow,
The Chancellor of Wheat and Corn,

The Keeper of the Golden Stacks,
The Mistress of the Milking Pail,
The bold Knights of the Ringing Ax,
The Heralds of the Sounding Flail,

The Ladies of the New Mown Hay,
The Master of the Spade and Hoe,
The Minstrels of the glorious lay
That all the Sons of Freedom know.

And thus, while on the seasons roll,
He wins from the inspiring sod
The brawny arm and nerve of soul
That serve his country and his God.

Two Great Crops.

The United States produced last year a cotton crop worth about $250,000,000, and a corn crop worth about $583,000,000. Of a total agricultural product of $4,000,000,000 the corn crop forms the largest item, being largely more than double the value of the crop which used to be called the King of American commerce. The King has now laid aside his purple robe and crown of jewels and become a highly respectable citizen, who is well received everywhere, but the whole of his estate is far less than that of his plebeian neighbor, Indian Corn, who enters into the business of society in a wonderful variety of forms. His guests sit down to a homely bill of fare, offering hominy, griddle cakes, egg bread, roasting ears, pudding, Johnny cake and popcorn. He shows with pride his well filled stock yards of corn-fed beeves and porkers, which supply the home and foreign markets with the finest meat in the world, from the sweet beefsteak to the fragrant sugar-cured ham, fit for the table of a king. He has immense factories employed making starch and sirup, consuming millions of bushels. He runs great distilleries, which send out alcohol enough to float a fleet of war vessels, furnishing material to the arts, revenue to the government, rascality to the whisky rings, and themes to the temperance lecturers.

The developments and applications of the great Western crop being so much greater than the Southern crop, it is not strange that the former is the stronger of the two. The principal use of cotton is for clothing; and while it has an excellence for that purpose, there are many substitutes for it, and its extinction would be a serious but not an irreparable loss to commerce. The extinction of the corn crop would not only take from commerce a merchandise of more than twice the value of the other, but it would revolutionize many departments of trade.—Louisville Commercial.

Value of the Earth Worm.

The common earth worm, though apt to be despised and trodden on, is really a useful creature in its way. Mr. Knapp describes it as the natural manurer of the soil, consuming on the surface the softer part of decayed vegetable matters, and conveying downward the more woody fibers, which there molder and fertilize. They perforate the earth in all directions, thus rendering it permeable by air and water—both indispensable to vegetable life. According to Mr. Darwin's mode of expression, they perform a kind of under tillage to the land, performing the same below ground that the spade does above for the garden and the plow for arable soil. It is, in consequence, chiefly of the natural operations of worms that fields which have been over spread with lime, burnt marl, or cinders, become, in process of time, covered with a finely divided soil, fitted for the support of vegetation. This result, though usually attributed by farmers to the "working down" of these materials, is really due to the action of earth worms, as may be seen in the innumerable casts of which the initial soil consists. These are obviously produced by the digestive proceedings of the worms, which take into their intestinal canal a large quantity of the soil in which they feed and burrow, and then reject in the form of the so-called casts. "In this manner," says Mr. Darwin, "a field manured with marl has been covered, in the course of eighty years, with a bed of earth averaging thirteen inches in thickness."—Encyclopœdia Brittanica.

Girls as Accountants.

"My daughter keeps my farm accounts, sir, and she is as systematic and particular as ever my son was, who kept them before he left home. I tell you it does girls (and he might have added boys also) good to give them some responsibility, and set them to watching things about the farm and household. They learn, I find, economy by it, and soon discover that their father is not necessarily a crabbed old curmudgeon because he doesn't loosen the purse-string whenever they see something they happen to fancy, for they discover the real reason why the purse should not be opened." So said a progressive farmer, a kind, appreciative father, and a big-hearted man on general principles.

Save the Boys.

Do American boys learn trades any more? One would suppose not, if the multitude of purposeless, aimless young men out of employment is any indication. There was a time when the master mechanic had his house filled with hearty young apprentices, and when his journeymen went from under his roof to set up in life for themselves. To men in middle life, the recollections of those far off times when the master, his men and boys, formed a strong productive group, seem like the memory of a primitive age. Sons of rich and educated men did not think it beneath them to swing the broad-axe in the shipyard, or the sledge hammer at the anvil. Or they went to sea before the mast, and climbed to the quarter deck from the forecastle.

In a large family of boys, one would be sent to college, one might possibly go into mercantile pursuits, and the others chose their trades after many anxious but cheery family councils. Now-a-days the young lads shrink from the irksome confinement of the mechanic's shop. If they can not go to college and so while away their youth, they must "go into a store"—anything but work. We do not belittle the vocation of a clerk or salesmen when we say that to be in either one or the other of these callings appears to most young men the most comfortable thing. Of all the pursuits which men follow, this seems to require the least preparation. At any rate the men who are willing to make themselves generally useful more naturally turn to the shop of the retail dealer than to any other source of employment. They have never learned a trade. They like to wear good clothes and keep their hands soft and white. If they can not stand behind the counter or desk, or secure political influence sufficient to push them into an office of some sort, they drift aimlessly about, looking for employment which never comes.

False ideas of living and extravagant notions are responsible for a great deal of this hopeless misery. Young lads are brought up to consider manual labor degrading, and fond, foolish parents sometimes seem to prefer that their children should go into the world helpless rather than they should learn a trade. But the selfishness of mechanics and the outrageous tyranny of their unions, have had a hand in bringing to pass the present state of things. About twenty-five years ago there began a series of experiments in trade-unions which has resulted disastrously. The times were good, work plenty and wages fair. To maintain a monopoly of these, associations of mechanics began to limit the number of apprentices which might be employed in each shop, factory, or company of working men.

Men who had sons to equip for life actually voted to shut the trade against their own offspring. The consequence was that the supply of skilled workmen did not keep up with the expansion of the country, and with the legitimate demand. Employers were obliged to send abroad for workmen, and it came to pass grown men from foreign parts took the places in American workshops for which American boys should have been educated. Where now are those neglected, cheated boys? Some of them are in jails and alms houses. Some will be found lounging on the benches in public parks, vainly waiting for something to turn up. Others, willing enough, are advertising for situations where they can make themselves generally useful.

The Benefit of Grasshoppers.

What is the use of grasshoppers? Can any benefit be discovered arising from a visitation of these pests? We think so. The average farmer will crop and crop his farm until it becomes as barren as an Arabian desert. When it is "played out" he trades it off or abandons it and pushes farther West. It needs no foresight to see that this thing repeated by hundreds of thousands of nomadic agriculturists will leave the fat lands of the Missouri Valley without a grain of nutriment to feed the generations that follow their unwise predecessors.

Much as people may smile at the idea, we can see the hand of Providence in the myriads of locusts that sweep down from the Rocky Mountains, stopping the average farmer's little game and compel him to pull up stakes before he has quite ruined the soil on which he has squatted; the grasshopper digests everything; they give the land a general manuring; all weeds are destroyed; the larvæ and insects that consume so much produce perish for the want of food; the ground gets rest, and as their visitation is but once in seven years a connection may be observed between the necessity of mankind resting and that of the earth we tread.

After grasshoppers we have years of plenty, and if we lay aside nothing, but choose to live from hand to mouth and trade every year down to the last hog and bushel of corn, it is clear evidence that we need a hard lesson in the school of adversity. There are vast stretches of once fertile land in Georgia and Virginia on which nothing but the poorest kind of dogfennel will now grow, and if numberless acres in the Missouri Valley do not reach the same condition it will be because of the periodical visitations of the dreaded locusts.

POPULAR Definition of Conscience—My rule for another man's conduct.

Colored Light and Plants.

A correspondent of the Globe, Toronto, Ont., gives the result of some experiments in 1876, showing the effects of colored light on plants, as follows:

I planted in a box some curled cress seed, and so arranged bottles of carmine fluid, chromate of potass, acetate of copper and the sulphate of ammonia that all but a small space of earth was exposed to light which had permeated three-fourths of an inch of these media. For some days the only apparent difference was that the earth continued damp under the green and blue fluids, whereas it dried rapidly under the red and yellow.

The plumula burst the cuticle in the blue and green lights before any change was evident in the other parts. After ten days under the blue fluid, there was a crop of cress of as bright a green as any which grew in the full light, and far more abundant. The crop was scant under the green fluid, and of a pale, unhealthy color. Under the yellow solution but two or three plants appeared, yet they were less pale than those which had grown in green light. Beneath the red bottle the number of plants which grew was also small, although rather more than in the spot the yellow covered. They, too, were of an unhealthy color.

I now reversed the order of the bottles, fixing the red in place of the blue, and the yellow in that of the green. After a few days' exposure the healthy crests appeared blighted, while few more unhealthy plants began to show themselves from the influence of the blue rays in the spot originally subjected to the red.

It is evident from this that the red and yellow rays not merely retarded germination, but positively destroy the vital principle in the seed; prolonged exposure uncovered with genial warmth, free air, and, indeed, all that can induce growth fail to revive the blighted vegetation. I repeated the experiments many times, varying the fluids, but the results have been the same. I have the above facts strikingly exemplified where the space covered by the bichromate of potassa is without a plant. These results merit the attention of those who are engaged in the study of vegetable economy.

Potatoes an Exhausting Crop.

Potatoes are by far the most exhausting crop usually sold off the farm. Turnips come next when they are sold off. Grain crops remove a comparatively small quantity of the manurial constituents. These facts show the reason why, while wheat can be grown successfully year after year on suitable soil, without the return of any of the ash constituents, the same can not be done with either potatoes or turnips. While potatoes and turnips contain much nitrogen, a nitrogenous manure is scarcely required for their growth if the soil is in good condition. The fact that green crops are so far independent of nitrogenous matter in the soil is no doubt due to their having broad leaves to take the ammonia from the air, and keep spreading roots to gather what they require through the greater mass of soil. The same remark applies to the leguminous crops—beans, peas, vetches, clover, etc. During the growth of clover, for instance, nitrogen even accumulates in the soil. So, although leguminous crops contain much nitrogen, nitrogenous light manures are found, in practice not to be required. On the other hand, an application of phosphoric acid, sulphuric acid and lime, which can cheaply be applied as a mineral superphosphate, generally produces a most marked effect.—Prof. Stewart in North British Agriculturist.

What Makes a Sea-Shell Sing.

When the sea-shell is held up to the ear there is a peculiar vibratory noise which children assure each other is the roar of the sea, however distant they may be from it. Philosophically investigated, the peculiar sound thus recognized is a phenomenon that has puzzled scholars for a long time. The experiment is easily made by pressing a spiral shell over the cerebra of either ear. If a large shell, the sound is very much like that of a far-off cataract. Now, what causes it? Every muscle in the body is always in a state of tension. Some are more on the stretch than others, particularly those of the finger. It is conceded that the vibration of the fibers of those in the fingers, being communicated to the shell, it propagates and intensifies them as the hollow body of the violin does the vibration of its strings, and thus the acoustic nerve receives the sonorous expressions. Muscles of the leg below the knees are said to vibrate in the same way, and, if conducted to the ear, produce the same result.—Boston Watchman.

Shooting Affray.

A difficulty occurred at Oxford, Thursday evening, between Thomas Ewing and J. M. ("Bud") Furnish, in which pistols were used, and Ewing was the sufferer. The parties stepped into the street, for the purpose of settling the affair after the manner of a duel. Ewing's pistol failed to "go off." Furnish fired three shots, one passing through Ewing's hat, another passing through his arm, and a third entering the body just above the right hip and ranging round toward the backbone. The latter wound was probed, but the physicians were unable to find the ball. While Ewing's injuries are severe, it is thought that they will not prove dangerous, and that he will be able to be out in few days.—Georgetown Times.

SITTING AROUND.

They are sitting around, upon barrels and chairs,
Discussing their own and their neighbors affairs,
And the look of content that is seen on each face
Seems to say, "I've found my appropriate place."
Sitting around.

In bar-rooms and groceries calmly they sit,
And serenely chew borrowed tobacco and spit,
While the stories they tell and the jokes that they crack
Shows their hearts have grown cold and undoubtedly black
While sitting around.

The "sitting around" is a man of no means,
And his face wouldn't pass for a quart of white beans,
His name is not found on the laborers' list,
Yet he somehow or other contrives to exist
While sitting around.

The loungers they toil not nor yet do they spin,
Unless it be yarns while enjoying their gin;
They are people of leisure, yet often 'tis true,
They allude to the work they're intending to do
While sitting around.

They've a habit of talking to other men's wives
As they whittle up sticks with their horn handled knives—
They're a scaly old set, and wherever you go
You will find them in groups or strung out in a row,
Sitting around.

Hayes Defended by a Democrat.

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—I like Mr. Hayes. He has repudiated the traditions of the Republican party. He has utterly ignored the precedents established by Lincoln. He has rebuked the Radical elements which kept the party in power since the death of Lincoln. He is arraying in bitter opposition to his Administration most powerful and popular leaders—men like Roscoe Conkling, James G. Blaine, Ben Butler, Ben Wade, Wendell Phillipps, the Chandlers, Camerons, Boutwells, Tafts, &c. His Administration has so far been of benefit to the country and the Democratic organization. He has not acted in the interest of the Republican party. He has adopted Democratic doctrines of government. He has discarded every ordinary obligation of gratitude and honor to men like Packard and Chamberlain, the Chandlers, and the Camerons who stole the Presidency and presented it to him. He has, by his own deliberate act, plead quietly and put the official seal of the Presidency to the record that every single electoral vote of three Southern States was stolen to put in the man who never was elected by the people and has no legal title to the Presidency.

I like Mr. Hayes. I like him because he represents innovation and ideas. No longer can it be said that the receiver is no better than the thief. No longer can it be said that there is no honor among thieves. No longer can it be said that the creators are stronger than the created. No longer can it be said that the office should seek the man and not the man the office. No longer can it be doubted that there is such a thing as irony of fate. See how, almost with the very first breath of official life, Mr. Hayes destroys the very authors of his being! No longer can it be doubted that conscience doth make cowards of us all. See how Mr. Hayes utterly repudiates Republican and vindicates Democratic doctrines.

I like Mr. Hayes. He is doing much better than could be expected. He strives assiduously to wash away the letters of that terrible syllable which is stamped upon his brow. He struggles hard to lull his troubled conscience into repose, to calm the consciousness of crime and atone for it by improved conduct. For Mr. Hayes has read the classics and history, has heard of Banquo's ghost. If even a Richard III. had visions what must be the slumbers of a Hayes? There are tales that no walls unfold, and secrets that human lips never utter. They remain forever buried in that most mysterious and inscrutable thing called the human heart. Whose heart is freer from regret, reproach, wrong or guilt—that of R. B. Hayes, or that of Samuel J. Tilden? Who doubts that amid all the ceremony and servility, all the show and glitter, all the feasts, fun, and fawning at the White-house, there does not often appear, like Banquo's ghost, the reproachful vision of him who of right should be the occupant? They have kept from the White-House the body of Samuel J. Tilden only, not his spirit.

I like Mr. Hayes. I like the way he has snubbed Blaine and Conkling and Cameron, the real representatives of his party, and one of whom was its real choice for the Presidency. I like to see three members in the Cabinet who for six years were in bitter opposition to the President's party and predecessor. I like to see his "Southern policy." Mr. Hayes and all his organs call it an "experiment" only, and ask for a suspension of judgment until time has shown its wisdom or unwisdom. Yes, it is an experiment. But it will prove to be an experiment that will cost the very life of the Republican party. It will be like the experiment of the mad medical scientist, of whom I read in boyhood. He killed a body to have a vivisection, and to test whether, by putting the various parts together, he could not vivificate it. The result of the experiment of Mr. Hayes will be the same. After he gets through with it he will find that the life spirit of his party has departed, and that all the notions and theories of Evarts, Schurz & Co. can not again restore the dead corpse to life. His policy may be an "experiment" to himself and the country; to the Republican party it is a vivisection.

I like Mr. Hayes. He does not know what he is doing. For the last ten years, at least, the Republican party has owed its ascendency mainly to its daring, defiant, able audacity. There may have been abler political parties in the past; there never was one as bold as the Republican party since the death of Lincoln. From the day which drove Seward and all of Lincoln's Cabinet, excepting one, out of the party, to the days of military reconstruction and robbery, the impeachment of Johnson, the adoption of the Fifteenth Amendment, the disgrace of Sumner, Greely, Trumbull and Schurz, the exposure of Credit Mobilier, and Belknap and Babcock, boldness alone has saved the party from destruction. I remember well how one day, shortly after Grant's first inauguration, a gentleman who was then a Republican Senator, and is now one of the most influential Cabinet Ministers of Mr. Hayes, turned pale in reading the telegraphic dispatches, and exclaimed: "This is terrible, terrible! It will inevitably destroy the party." It was the evidence in the Black Friday investigation, tracing money from the hands of Jim Fisk and Brother-in-law Corbin to the White-House. I remember the consternation of the same distinguished gentleman at the failure of the impeachment of Johnson. Then, too, he saw the inevitable ruin of the Republican party. I remember, too, his grave fears on account of the Fifteenth Amendment. It was then a most unpopular measure even with Republicans. Whenever the question of negro suffrage had been submitted to the people, it had been defeated by overwhelming majorities, tens of thousands of Republicans voting against it. The influential member of Mr. Hayes' Cabinet, to his honor, be it said, never would have dared to force negro suffrage upon the people. But the party leaders did. If anybody spoke about Black Friday the answer was, "Rebel!" If anybody spoke against negro suffrage the answer was, "Rebel!" If anyone spoke against robbery and corruption, violations of law and Constitution, the answer was still, "Rebel!" Even last fall the main answer we received upon the stump when we spoke of Belknap, Robeson, Colfax, Credit Mobilier, Babcock, Whisky Ring, and the like, was simply, "You are a rebel!" All this is now over. Mr. Hayes has broken the spell. He has taken a rebel into his Cabinet, is appointing rebels to offices, and openly concentrating all his efforts upon gaining the support of the rebels to his Administration by making it especially agreeable to rebels.

I like Mr. Hayes. He follows the advice of that distinguished member of his Cabinet whose opinions on past critical moments of the Republican party I have alluded to. Had the leaders of the party acted in accordance with those opinions and not according to their, diametrically opposed, own, there would have been no Republican party for some years. As it is, there will soon not be much of one, if Mr. Hayes will only stick to his "policy" and his experiments through his term. He has repudiated the men and measures, the principles and precedents, the very spirit and character of his party. He has broken the spell of the bloody shirt and silenced the cry of rebel. He has kicked the men to rear who have saved the Republican party in the past, and made him what he is, and showered honor upon those who did their best to destroy his party. A house divided against itself can not stand. Nobody can live without breath. A party can not exist without principles. An Administration can not succeed without a party. I like Mr. Hayes!

JOSEPH PULITZER.

SHE was a noble farmer's daughter. He a son of ditto. They had journeyed back to the hog pens, and were sitting on an old log, gazing at the beauties of nature, and listening to the music of the tree-toads, and now and then the mellow tune of the distant jackass, that was wafted to their ears by the gentle winds that sighed among the jimson weeds, and was heavily laden with the odor of hen roosts and pig pens. The last rays of the setting sun were falling fast. One of his arms was around Samantha Jane's waist, his head resting on the small of her back. She looked like a grasshopper dying with the hiccups, and he felt like a mud-turtle choked on a toad. "Samantha Jane," says he, with a voice like a dying swan, "will you splice?" She turned toward him, clasped her hands, had an attack of the heaves and blind staggers, and with a sigh that brought her shoe-strings to her throat, said "Yars!" She gave out and squatted in his—lap and he hugged her till he burst his muslin suspenders.

Let John Sherman Quit His Shams.

The idea that a great national act like the resumption of specie payments can be promoted by a trick, could be conceived only by the brain of a small politician. The further notion that a seeming resumption is as good as a real one, is the offspring of the same sort of parentage.

Secretary Sherman stands before the country as the author of both these notions. He thinks he can artificially reduce the legal tender circulation by the dodge of inducing some of the banks to ask for more circulating notes, which they do not want, and which they intend not to use, but to return into the Treasury as fast as issued. Under the law, he is empowered to contract the legal tenders to the extent of eighty per cent. of such bank issues. Such a bald piece of trickery is wholly offensive to every upright understanding, and can meet nothing but public contempt. Indeed, we believe this result to be already pretty well accomplished. The wonder is that public men of experience can expose themselves to general derision in this manner. It is only to be accounted for on the theory of the universal demoralization of our politics. Men in power do the shabbiest things in public without being conscious of the exposure they are making of themselves.

It is, perhaps, proper to say that since the scheme has evoked so much censure, Mr. Sherman denies that he was a party to it, and we must give him the benefit of his denial. But he will not deny that he is now presenting an equally precious spectacle. We refer to the proposed resumption of specie payments in silver.

Mr. Sherman thinks, or at least avers, that the paying out of silver by the Treasury for greenbacks will be deemed by the public a satisfactory resumption of coin payments. He still clings to the thousand times exploded notion that an artificial value can be imposed by Government upon coin or paper, that will over-rule the laws of trade and set aside the universal standard of value. Under the stress of Ohio politics, he holds that there are advantages to the country in having a depreciated standard. How this absurd idea ever found a lodgment in the public or private mind, we are unable to understand. But since silver has become a depreciated metal in consequence of its superabundance, and has, therefore, commended itself to the Ohio mind, Mr. Sherman finds a reason for advocating its substitution for greenbacks; and he is just now engaged on a scheme of specie payments which has this idea for its basis. If he can succeed in getting the greenbacks in, and getting the depreciated silver out, he professes to think that he has resumed to just the extent of his exchanges of silver for paper. He takes pay for his dogs in pups and calls it a sale.

We should be no better off with a circulation of depreciated silver than we are with a circulation of depreciated paper; and when the exchange is completed, the trade and finances of the country will not be relieved of perplexity. Gold still stands in the way. It is the more valuable metal. It is the standard of the whole commercial and financial world. All transactions are measured by it and settled by it, notwithstanding all the legal tender laws that can be passed, and all the shams and subterfuges that financial charlatans can contrive or put in the way.—N. Y. Sun.

TIMES like these not only present to the people the necessity of economy in dress, tablefare and other overtaxed luxuries, but they also present to parents the power and law they should exercise in regard to their children. Some idea, in particular, should be inculcated in the minds of the older sons or hopefuls, in regard to the needless expenditure of money for cigars, strong drinks and unnecessary outlays, which are considered by many as necessary to hold one's place in society's fashionable foolishness. Many a promising son has been bereft of fortune, a considerable home and friends, by the social glass, excess in tobacco, and over-dress beyond one's moderate income. To such we would give brief advice: Live within your income; abandon the foolish, and unnecessary cigar; give over to less wise brains the honor (?) of performing in society that which is beyond your means to do; live the life of honor; guide against temptation in all their minute forms, and when success has crowned your efforts, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you honored the parents that ushered you into existence, and when the lamp of life had burned out, the honor of a son's noble aim will furnish peace and happiness to his relatives and friends. He who has lived temperately, dutifully and honorably, however low his sphere may be, has accomplished much in the way of guiding other men aright—of showing them the path of rectitude and honor.—Boston Cultivator.

A YOUNG fellow who indulges in the use of strong drink says, at night he feels as if he owned all the property in the world, and in the morning as if he owned none, and was in arrears for tax on what he owned the night before.

A Gambler's Sermon.

His clothes were good, of the latest pattern and most fashionable cut. His watch chain was the heaviest of the heavy, and as fine as the gold of Ophir. It surpassed in richness the gold chain that the King hung about the neck of the young prophet Daniel. His boots were highly polished, and shone like the exterior of fine black walnut coffins. His diamond pin twinkled like the evening star in a summer sky. His shirt bosom was as white as an infant's soul, but his eye was sad and his voice was as sorrowful and sorrowing as the wailing of the winds in the drooping branches of the weeping willow. He tapped his boot with his natty ivory-headed cane, slipped down in his chair to give the base of his spinal column a rest, pulled his hat over his eyes and languidly said (which painfully indicated that the gambler had struck a loser—had coppered in the wrong place):

"Faro is a h—l of a fascinating game. In all the games for gambling it has no equal. A man's a d—n fool to play it, but it catches the oldest of 'em. The chances, on the closest calculations, are three to one on each play at the outset against the player; occasionally we strike a winner, but we only win to lose. The most prosperous of us die in the gutter, unknown, forgotten and deserted. Luck only smiles on us for a brief season, and when fickle fortune deserts us, she never roosts above our doors again. Few of us are wise enough to save in luck in order to live in a rainy day. But while we live, we live, and after all that is all there is of life. The hereafter is a chance, and the Old Man has put up the cards so well that nobody has ever called the turn. It's a 'cat hop' at the best. We are not utterly heartless. It makes my heart ache to see how many young men are drawn into the vortex and down to ruin. They begin on a game of baseball. They lose on a horse race, get caught at a friendly game of draw, and in an evil hour try to get even on faro. They often win on the first venture, but it is a terrible success. They always pay 1,000 per cent. on the first winning, and often they play life and blood on the investment. The first winning opens the fascinating road to hell—builds up a barrier behind them which few ever climb over to reformation. A little sentimental, ain't I? Have something? You don't drink? Good! Bar-keeper, give me a whisky punch light. I'm blue to-day. Gambling and its attendant excitements burn all the stamina out of a man, but, thank God, it can not, does not, blot out his sympathies! I wish I had never touched a card, but I am a born gambler. It's in me; it always was, and I'm in for it until the deal is out. I have to see young men of promise at a gaming table. They have mothers and sisters who love them; they have good situations and employers who trust them; but the day they set foot inside a gambling room their fate is sealed. The Recording Angel enters up the books ahead ninety-nine times out of a hundred, and loafs around the gate of St. Peter to notice the arrivals and say tah! tah! to the boys who are assigned rooms lower down. I have a case in mind now. A fine fellow, who a short time since was agent for a New York varnish house, and commanded a salary of $5,000 a year, in traveling got lonely. He gambled for amusement when his business was over. He fooled with the tiger, put his hands through the bars, petted the beast, and suddenly found himself torn to pieces. To-day he is an outcast, drunken, broken, deserted. I would advise every young man who has a business never to cross the threshold of a gambling house. I have made big winnings and I have made big losings. I lost $6,000 in Chicago trying to make ten. I was broke and down, and stayed down for a long while. I'm up again. If I had a business, you would never catch me gambling again. Guess I'll go and buy a couple of stacks of reds and see how luck runs to-day. Good afternoon."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

An Artificial Mammoth.

M. Martin, a German naturalist, has recently constructed artificially a mammoth (elephas primogenius) of the quarternary epoch, after the many fine fossils of that extinct animal now existing in the Natural History Museum of Stuttgardt. The form of the body of the gigantic creature, its trunk, tusks and hair (the latter a close imitation of that of the real animal found in the Siberian ice) have been wonderfully counterfeited, so that the resemblance is as accurate as if the mammoth's skin had been stuffed. The animal measures 16 feet in height by nearly 26 feet in length. It is made upon a wooden framework, covered with wire cloth, the latter being coated with papier mache. The hair is reproduced from the fiber of an Indian palm, the tusks are of wood, and the trunk is ingeniously made of paper.

We are glad to notice that this valuable work has been purchased by Prof. H. A. Ward for his Museum of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy in Rochester, N. Y. It has already been packed, and is now on its way to this country.—Scientific American.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

W. L. RIDDELL,
Editor and Proprietor.

BURLINGTON, KY., JULY 5.

THE Court of Appeals has adjourned till the first Monday in September.

THE northwestern portion of New York was visited by a snow storm last week.

THE Work house question will be brought before the people at the August election.

BEECHER comes to the defense of the Jews and makes them out a little ahead of everybody. This Rev. gentleman gives Hilton a hitch for excluding the Jews from the Saratoga Hotel.

EPH HOLLAND, of Cincinnati, who figured so extensively in election frauds last fall, has been sentenced to thirteen months in the Ohio State Penitentiary. Holland's attorney will appeal to the President for a pardon.

LAST week, John T. Wegginton, Elias T. Haynes, Edward Smoot and Jordan Jackson were appointed Revenue Storekeepers and Gaugers for the Seventh District of Kentucky. Smoot and Jackson are descendants of Ham.

A GANG of counterfeiters has been discovered in Pendleton County. Some three or four were arrested and some material for the manufacture of the article was found. The discovery created no little commotion in that section. It had been suspicioned for some time that a band of these criminals existed in that part of the State.

THE contest at the Primary election in the Democratic party in this county, has become nearly as interesting and as productive of strife as were the races for offices in the days of Democrat and Whig. Every primary election opens a fresh chasm in the party, and if there is not something done to suppress the sectional feeling that emanates from these elections, in a few years, independent candidates will appear in the political arena and the party organization be over-ridden entirely.

THE Southern Railroad seems an elephant on the hands of the city of Cincinnati. The first appropriation of ten million of dollars only put the work of construction under way when it became evident to the management that six millions more money was necessary to put the road through. This sum was given to save the amount that had gone before, and expecting to complete the road. The six millions has been expended and the road is still in an unfinished condition, demanding about four million dollars more of the city's money. The Common Carrier Company, created by the Ohio Legislature to operate the road, have failed to come to time with the Board of Trustees, and the road is now in somewhat of an embarrassed condition.

STATE NEWS.

—In Daviess County the wheat crop is in the shock.

—A $1,000 flock of sheep, belonging to J. M. McKee, of Harrison County, was, last week, rediculously mantinated by wortless curs.

—Some of our farmers are harvesting, and report a splendid yield, much better than that of last year. Shrites & Clark, near town, are said to have the finest crop raised in Bourbon for ten years, their 30-acre field promising a yield of 35 or 40 bushels per acre. We learn that Robert Langston has 100 acres in wheat, and expects a yield of about 30 bushels per acre. From all parts of the county we hear cheering news in regard to the cereal.

—Our reporter last week took a railroad ride down along the E. & P., the Southwestern and the Louisville, Memphis and Great Southern railroads, and from close observations and careful inquiries he is pleased to state that no such crops of wheat as those now being gathered in Southwestern Kentucky and Western Tennessee ever met his gaze in any country. Thousands of acres line the different roads upon either side, and in fields where the grain has been cut, the shocks stand as numerously as stumps on a newly-cleared farm. The reporter learned from several farmers with whom he conversed on the cars and at the different stations, that their crops would average all the way from twenty-five to thirty-five bushels per acre. The corn and other crops, in most localities, look as well as we ever remember to have seen them at this season of the year, and with no unforeseen difficulties the farmers of Kentucky and Tennessee will go into winter quarters next December with the largest stores of corn, wheat, oats and grass that have been theirs to boast for a dozen years.—Owensboro Examiner.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

A Noisy Time and a Split on the Executive Committee Rock—The Candidate Nominated Refuses to Accept, and Announces His Intention to Run Independent.

Upon the assembling of the Democracy at Burlington, Monday morning, it was evident that trouble was brewing in the camp. The political atmosphere grew more sultry as the day advanced, and the number of voters were increased in town. Those of long experience in politics commenced, at an early hour, prophesying that an eruption in the Convention which assembled in the afternoon was inevitable.

At 1 o'clock the Convention was called, and commenced being constructed of red-hot material. Dr. W. H. Terrill, of Petersburg, called the house to order and requested the delegates to take their seats in the bar.

This being done the confusion commenced. The first move was to choose a Chairman. The idea struck some that a temporary Chairman should first be chosen. Several persons were nominated, when it occurred to the delegates that it was the duty of the chairman or some member of the Executive Committee to occupy that position. After some persuasion, Volney Dickerson consented to take the chair simply to organize the meeting. W. L. Riddell was then chosen temporary secretary for the meeting.

A motion was then made and carried, ordering a list of the delegates of the respective districts furnished the Secretary. The following names were handed in:

Petersburg—J. F. Grant, J. H. McWeathy, Elijah Parker and W. H. Terrill.

Bellevue—A. Corbin and D. M. Snyder.

Verona—J. T. Roberts, J. H. Callahan and Thos. Hall.

Walton—T. F. Curley, W. A. Fullilove and Wm. Brooks.

Carlton—J. J. Ryle, Whitmill Ryle and T. N. Stephens.

Burlington—Jno. H. Smith, Jno. Crisler, Richard White and Edward Fowler.

Florence—H. T. Snyder, B. A. Dulany, A. Sayre, Marion Stephens and T. J. McNeal.

Union—C. T. Rice, R. L. Willis, W. H. Blanton and Wm. Adams.

Taylorsport—Jno. Stephens, Cyrus Riddell, Enoch Mannin and Jerry Murphy.

Hamilton—Jno. Green, R. L. Howlett, J. P. H. Adams and J. A. Wood.

At this point the confusion became so intense, and the Court demanding the room, the Convention moved to the grand jury room and excluded all persons not delegates. 'Squire Cochran was appointed a committee to wait upon the County Clerk and obtain the poll books of the primary election. The committee reported in a few moments.

The Convention then went about appointing a committee on credentials. This got up a small breeze, and finally a motion to appoint a committee composed of one delegate from each district prevailed and the committee was appointed as follows:

Petersburg, J. Frank Grant; Bellevue, D. M. Snyder; Walton, J. F. Curley; Carlton, T. N. Stephens; Burlington, Ed Fowler; Florence, B. A. Dulany; Union, R. L. Willis; Taylorsport, Cy Riddell; Hamilton, Jno. Green; Verona, Thos. Hall. The committee took the poll books and retired to another room for conference While they were deliberating the delegates were in small groups about the room caucussing in a very quiet manner. The committee was out about thirty minutes when they came in and reported the following as delegates from the respective districts:

Bellevue—D. M. Snyder and A. Corbin.

Walton—W. H. Brooks, J. F. Curley and W. A. Fullilove.

Burlington—J. H. Smith, John Crisler, Richard White and Edward Fowler.

Petersburg—Owen Alloway, W. H. Terrill, J. H. McWeathy and J. Frank Grant.

Florence—T. J. McNeal, A Sayre, B. A. Dulany, H. T. Snyder and Marion Stephens.

Hamilton—Jno. Green, R. L. Howlett, J. P. H. Adams and J. A. Wood.

Union—C. T. Rice, W. H. Blanton, Wm. Adams and R. L. Willis.

Verona—T. J. Roberts, Thos. Hall and J. H. Callahan.

Taylorsport—John Stephens, Cyrus Riddell, Enoch Mannin and Jerry Murphy.

Carlton—T. N. Stephens, Whitmill Ryle and Jno. J. Ryle.

The adoption of this report was opposed by J. M. Stansifer, Wm. Cochran and T. J. McNeal on the grounds that Conner's minority vote in several districts was not represented by Conner delegates. Dr. W. H. Terrill took the ground that Mr. Conner's share of the vote in each district would be correctly given him.

T. N. Stephens, of Carlton, counseled a calm proceeding, giving each man his pro rata share of the vote in each district. The vote was put and the report adopted.

J. Frank Grant, of Petersburg, was elected permanent Chairman of the Convention.

Mr. Dickerson then, in substance, made the following statement in regard to the position of the members of the Executive Committee when the election and convention were ordered. Dr. Sayre, the Chairman, was strongly in favor of letting all the candidates run, and the August election settle the matter. Dr. Jonas Terrill was for a Convention, and he (Dickerson) for a primary election—Arnold after much persuasion was induced to come to him—that Mr. Conner was in favor of the Convention.

J. Frank Grant then took the chair and the Convention elected B. A. Dulaney as permanent Secretary. The following preamble and resolution offered by Dr. S. S. Scott, were then unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Democracy of Boone County in mass meeting assembled at the Court-house in Burlington in June, 1877, by a unanimous vote presented to the voters of this Senatorial district, the name of Capt. L. C. Norman as a suitable candidate for State Senator, and,

WHEREAS, The Democracy of Gallatin and Owen counties have indorsed said presentation in mass conventions assembled in their respective counties, and Boone having ratified her former action by a formal vote at the polls, now therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Democracy of Boone County, declare said L. C. Norman the nominee of the Democratic party, and pledge ourselves to use all honorable means to secure his election at the August election, 1877.

The following resolution indorsing J. W. Tate for State Treasurer, met with slight opposition on the part of Esq. T. N. Stephens, on the ground that there might possibly be another candidate for the office. The resolution was adopted and is as follows:

Resolved, That in our present State Treasurer, J. W. Tate, we recognize an efficient, able and honest official, and cheerfully endorse him as the proper candidate of the Democratic party for said office for the next ensuing term.

A motion was then made to have the vote as cast at the primary election read by the Secretary—motion lost.

Dr. W. H. Terrill then made a motion that the Convention proceed and cast the pro rata vote as ordered by the Executive Committee. Jerry Murphy offered an amendmemt to this motion, (the amendment we failed to get a note of) and was getting a pretty good send off in a speech saying they asked nothing but fair play, when the Chairman ruled him down. The amendment was put, the Conner delegates voting for and the Rouse delegates against it. This amendment being slaughtered, the vote was taken on the original motion which was carried.

This motion created considerable discussion between Dr. W. H. Terrill on the one side and Jerry Murphy and T. J. McNeal on the other.

The Conner delegates, with two or three exceptions, so soon as Murphy's motion was lost, rose to their feet when it became evident they intended to withdraw. 'Squire Hall acted as spokesman, saying there was no chance for them to get a fair show, several delegates who should be in the Convention being shut out. They quietly walked out, some of the Rouse delegates hallooing good-bye to them as they left the room.

On motion of Dr. W. H. Terrill, the Secretary was ordered to call the districts and the delegates to cast their votes.

Petersburg was the first called. Dr. W. H. Terrill stated that the Convention was about to go into a ballot when there was no nomination; he thereupon nominated G. V. Rouse, and cast for him 3½ votes. He also put Reuben Conner in nomination and cast for him 5-6 of a vote.

Bellevue was called. Mr. A. Corbin also nominated Mr. G. V. Rouse, and cast 1 5-7 for him, and 2-7 for Conner.

Burlington, by Edward Fowler, cast 2 votes for Rouse and 2 votes for Conner.

Carlton, by T. N. Stephens, cast 1 79-89 votes for Rouse and 1 10-89 for Conner.

Hamilton, by Jno. Green, cast 1 6-7 votes for Conner and 2 1-7 for Rouse.

Florence, by B. A. Dulaney, cast 1 57-118 votes for Rouse and 3 61-118 for Conner.

Taylorsport, by Enoch Mannin, cast 2 74-161 votes for Rouse and 1 87-161 for Conner.

Verona called, no answer was made when by order of the Convention the Secretary announced the vote to be Rouse 39-71 of a vote and Conner 2 32-71 votes.

Walton, no answer, the Secretary announced her vote to be 24-77 of a vote for Rouse and 2 53-77 votes for Conner.

This vote when footed up was reported to stand 17 5-12 votes for Conner and 18 5-12 votes for Rouse, there being two twelfths of a vote lost somewhere in the calculation.

The vote having been cast, it appeared to the Chairman that it might be a question whether or not the Convention had any right to cast the vote of Walton and Verona as it was done, and gave the body privilege to reconsider if they desired, but it was considered legal and all right.

The Convention made the nomination of Mr. G. V. Rouse unanimous.

The Convention then appointed B. A. Dulany and C. T. Rice a committee to wait upon Mr. Rouse and inform him of his nomination, and then repaired to the court-room to make public the result of their deliberations.

The house was crowded with anxious friends of both candidates, although it was known what the Convention had done. The Chairman, J. Frank Grant, ascended the Judge's stand and proceeded to give an account of the stewardship of the Convention. He gave the crowd to understand that the result they had obtained was reached by acting exactly as the Convention understood the order of the Executive Committee. Dr. Terrill also made a statement to the same effect. The Doctor also claimed that the order of the Executive Committee acted as a boomerang, its return having slain those who directed its course when started on its journey.

The committee appointed to inform Mr. Rouse what the Convention had done, by its Chairman requested him to say whether or not he accepted the nomination. Mr. Rouse took the stand and said in substance that a few years since when he was a candidate, squabbling was commenced in the party, and some persons came to him and requested him to withdraw, to secure harmony in the party. That he withdrew, and he supposed these persons wanted him to withdraw again. Mr. Rouse said but little, but signified his desire to hear from Mr. Conner. The house roared with shouts, "Conner, Conner." Mr. Conner mounted the the Judge's stand and thanked the "good people" for their votes and popular majority of "69" votes. He said the recollections of their gratitude would forever be a green spot in his memory. The speaker took his seat, the house roaring with the wild shouts for Conner.

The crowd again commenced calling loudly for "Rouse, Rouse." Mr. Rouse responded and said he surrendered all claims to the nomination given him by the Convention, and declared himself an independent candidate for the Legislature. Mr. Rouse took his seat, the crowd seemingly going into convulsions with shouts.

Mr. Conner then arose and declared himself a candidate. This brought another volly of hurrahs.

The Convention here adjourned and the meeting reorganized as a mass-meeting, J. Frank Grant being elected Chairman.

Both candidates were called out again, as was also Capt. G. W. Terrill. The speeches made were brief and contained nothing of importance.

During the existence of the Convention W. H. Baker made two or three passes at it, and was loudly applauded, but just about that time the meeting seemed to be in a fit state to applaud any and every measure proposed.

Above we have given the vote as cast for the respective candidates by delegates; below we give the popular vote cast at the primary election. We omit the vote given for Senator, because in some districts Capt. Norman's name was not on the poll book, his frinds thinking it not necessary to vote for him. In those districts where he was voted for he received nearly every vote cast.

Conner's majority over Rouse, 68.

We have been in a great many meeting, some of which were said to be boisterous, but never did we see one of as small dimensions as that of last Monday, that would compare with it after the delegates came from the room in which they accomplished their work. The yell of an entire tribe of Sioux Indians compared with the noise made by the crowd in the court-room would be as the mew of a cat compared to the braying of a dozen of those animals so famous for immense auricular appendages.

—The grape crop, reported entirely destroyed some time ago, now gives a different appearance. In some localities there will be a fair average yield, though in others there will be none at all.—Frankfort Yeoman.

—In Washington County they failed to make a nomination for the Legislature, W. O. Cunningham, editor Herald, and Thomas R. Phelps being tied in each ballot. The convention adjourned sine die.

—At Nicholasville corn is selling as low as two dollars per barrel.

Announcements.

We are authorized to announce Granville V. Rouse as a candidate for County Representative, at the August election, 1877.

We are authorized to announce Reuben Conner as a candidate for County Representative, at the August election, 1877.

We are authorized to announce L. C. Norman as a Democratic candidate for State Senator, at the August election, 1877.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. Conner.

Harvesting is in full blast.

We'll all get another shake.

Six good brooms at Dudley Rouse's for $1.

Raspberries are upon the market in quantities.

Two candidates to shake with the dear people yet.

Men's Plow Shoes, custom made, only $1 50, at the Red Boot.

Men's brogans, only $1 20, at the Red Boot, 622 Madison street, Covington.

The storm that swept over the North and West, last week, destroyed much property.

The candidates for County Representative will now put a second story on their canvass.

If that mass meeting Monday was a Democratic lovefeast it was the loudest we ever saw.

The whereabouts of the missing druggist, Mr. Starbuck, of Florence, still remains a mystery.

Some of the farmers complain that insects are working on the corn in some sections of the county.

Every pair of Custom Made Boots and Shoes sold at the Red Boot will be repaired free of charge.

Ladies' Goat Side-Lace Shoes, only $1 90, custom made and warranted, at the Red Boot, 622 Madison street, Covington.

Peace and harmony are said to be the strength of all institutions. Be this the case, those meetings Monday were very feeble.

Pol. I. Ticks kept the Boone yeomanry in a perfect state of excitement, Monday. It is doubtful if some of them are not a little nervous yet.

On the first Monday in next month, Pol I. Ticks will have the attention of the citizens of Kentucky, regardless of race, color or previous condition.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

St. Louis, Mo., June 30, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

We have had storms and rumors of storms this week, but no damage is done to our immediate vicinity. On Monday afternoon last, a terrible tornado struck that water wicked place on our western borders known as Kansas City, passing over the entire Northwest and Northeast Missouri, and striking that terrible wicked city of Chicago, visiting many other places where the people are not as good as they ought to be, and leaving immense destruction in its wake. But the quiet, sober city of St. Louis was, in the evening of that day, visited only with a gentle rain, a cool, refreshing breeze and one or two vivid flashes of lightning, accompanied with the usual peals of thunder. We will say, for the benefit of Col. Henderson and other humane individuals, that the storm seemed to visit more particularly those places where the people are opposed to the "old dispensation" or given to much wickedness. Nearly every place where there is much damage done the people are given to high taxation; but in cities like ours, where the dog tax is not thought of, and the people generally favor mild taxation, refreshing showers, with just enough lightning to purify the atmosphere, seemed to be their desert or reward.

The cyclone gave the people of Cincinnati a great reminder that they, too, are not as good as they ought to be; for they have many times told the unsuspecting that they can beat us in manufacturing, consequently they can undersell us, and do thereby cheat us out of considerable trade. But the push and stir of Kansas City, is well-known, and they have got some of the not-well-posted people of the rural districts to believe that they have a larger city than we have, and that they are just twice as clever and accommodating as we are, and thereby they, too, give our trade a clip now and then. But the check and brazen-facedness of Chicago is far famed. They tell the good people of the country that they have a much larger city than we have; that they have bigger hotels than any city in the world; that they have larger stores than we have; that they are willing to work on smaller profits than we do; that the people of New York are talking about having their morning papers published there; that they are a mighty people generally; and they sometimes come down and sell goods to the small towns within fifteen miles of our city limits, which is something that everybody knows is against our interest. They are a cheeky, fast, go-ahead sort of people. Indeed they are. You can scarcely find a man in all that city that is in favor of the "old dispensation" or the old way of doing things. In fact, they are almost a new dispensation within themselves. We have not, as yet, heard of a single man or woman in that city lifting his or her voice in favor of Colonel Henderson and a restoration of the "old dispensation."

The first winter after the late war, the writer made a trip up the Des Moines River drumming for consignments of produce to his house in this city. We found, all along our route, the people of that section of the moral vineyard, during our late troubles had been sending their produce to the Garden City. We arrived at Eddyville late in the night, but were up the next morning by daylight, ate an early breakfast and started out to make acquaintance and solicit consignments. In our peregrinations we stumbled on the premises of an active and intelligent looking German, who seemed to be dealing largely in furs, hides, sheep pelts, &c. We soon found that he had quite a stock, and, without telling him who we were, we commenced asking what they were worth, &c. We told him if he would ship his stock to St. Louis, he would be certain of a profit of two to three cents per pound on everything he had. He said he did not know anybody there to ship to. We then put on our most pensive smiles, handed him our card, and in our most exquisite manner introduced ourself to the vender of dead animal clothes, referring him at the same time to an old citizen of the place as to our moral, Christian and financial standing. He looked us straight in the face for a moment, and said: "Well, on yesterday I was dinking about drying your market, but jist then Mr. Smidt, from Chicago, kim along and I told him about it, and he sed it would never do; that thar was no one down thar that had money to buy on his own account, and if I did ship them thar, they would be sold to a man that was buying for Chicago; so I'se promised him I would ship him this lot." We, the next morning, finding everybody up there had Chicago on the brain, turned eastward in disgust. We arrived at Keokuk at late supper time, put up at the best hotel in the place, ate our supper (the other guests having already eaten), and repaired to the sitting room, which we found full of drummers, nearly every city East and West being represented. A Chicago chap seemed to be entertaining all the others by orgnatizing on the excellencies of his town. Said he: "Go where you may, you will find Chicago goods." And, after puffing and blowing until our patience had become about exhausted, said he, "You will find our manufactures in almost every store in St. Louie." This was a little more than we could bear, and, not having been introduced, we arose in our simplicity and stated we were from St. Louis, and that we simply arose to indorse everything the gentleman had said; and that it was only the other day one of our citizens was boring for an artesian well, and when he had reached about 3,000 feet below the surface his auger struck something it could not penetrate, and he was compelled to withdraw it, and found it contained a piece of the cheek of a Chicago drummer down there, with a bundle of washboards on his back, trying to undersell St. Louis. We heard nothing more from that chap that night. But we can tell you that the fellows from that town are awful on blowing. Up there they all believe in that modern Scripture that "whosoever bloweth not his own horn, the same shall not be blowed."

On that very same day, while the people of the aforesaid cities were being visited with such mighty rushing winds, Mrs. Joe Hepworth, residing near East St. Louis, in the quiet, good old way presented her husband with a trio of young Hepworths—two boys and a girl. This is the way the people multiplied, replenished and built up countries and cities under the "old dispensation," and, taking this family and the Dean family of our own side of the river as examples, we may reasonably conclude that the people of this immediate vicinity are muchly in favor of the "old dispensation" way of doing things.

Walter S. Johnson, Esq., of Washington City, D. C., has been appointed temporary Receiver of the National Bank of the State of Missouri, and has entered upon his arduous duties. No new developments since our last. It is, however, reported and generally believed that three of the Directors of said bank owe the same nearly six hundred thousand dollars borrowed money, which is, in a manner, secured.

New wheat is beginning to make its appearance in our market, and prices are rapidly on the decline, and, should all round it is from 10 to 12 cents per bushel lower to-day than this day one week ago. Merchants generally with us are calculating on a large harvest, as the late storms seemed to affect only certain spots, and those not much of grain districts. Our stocks of old grain are greatly reduced, Chicago has this week been doing an immense business in shipping. They have doubtless reduced their stock of corn this week at least one and a half millions of bushels.

Yours truly, Bob A. Loxo.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

Covington Stock Yards, July 2.

Report of the Covington Live Stock Market for the week ending July 2, 1877:

Cattle—Receipts liberal and demand fair. Shippers' selling at 5¼@6¼c. per lb.; butchers' cattle selling at 3@4c. for common, but slow sale; good firm at 4@5c., and quick sale. Milch Cows—But few on the market, and they are generally common, selling from $20 to $35. Veal Calves—Very dull at from 3c. to 5½c.

Sheep—Supply moderate and demand good; selling at 2½@5c. for butchers' stuff, considerable demand for stockers, but very few on the market, and selling at 2½@4c.

Lambs—Receipts quite large, with demand about equal; selling at 3½@6½c., the good ones selling quicker at 6½c. than the common ones do at 3½@4½c.

Hogs—Supply continues large for this season of the year, and prices are about the same as they have been, except on good butchers' hogs; there being a little better demand for this class of hogs, the price has advanced, and some lots have been sold at $3 80.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

There was an average fair trade last week. The tobacco market was very good. The offerings were fair of good lines of tobacco, and the demand was steady with all grades, common selling from 25 to 50 cents lower than week before last. There was no noticeable change in the prices of the best grades. The sales during the week amounted to about 400 hhds.

The horse and mule trade was rather dull, there being none on the market; there was a good demand. About forty head of horses and mules were sold at auction, ranging in prices from $35 to $100.

The hog market was dull, though the offerings were very good. The receipts were about 5,140. The demand was slow at $3 75 @4 25.

Sheep were in fair demand and the offerings slow. Old sheep brought 3@4c.

Lambs were in good demand at $4@5 50. The receipts for the week were about 2,600.

The cattle market was very good, with a fair number of offerings. There was a slight decline in the Eastern market. The receipts in this city were about 1,100. Shipping cattle sold from $5 to $5 85; butchering from $3 to $4 50.

Choice butter is worth 12@14c. wholesale; common, 8@10c.

Eggs are steady at 8c.

Old chickens sold at $2 25@2 75; spring chickens, $1 25@2 50; ducks brought $2@2 50 per dozen; young squirrels, $1 75@2.

There was a slight decline in corn; the market was dull at 48c., and not much on the market.

Hay was dull at $8@10.

The wool market is fair; burry wool is worth 18@20c.; tub washed, 26@28c.; combed, 30@37c.

Home potatoes bring $2@3 per bushel; cabbage, 40@50c. per brl.; peas, 50@75c. per brl.; beans, $1 75@2 25 per brl.; home onions, $1 per bushel; cucumbers, 20@30c. per doz. Apples sold at $1 75@2 50 per brl.; raspberries are in demand at $7@8 per stand; currants, $6@7 per stand, and scarce at that (currants always bring big prices in Louisville). Cherries are also scarce and in demand at $5 per stand; gooseberries, $2@2 50 per stand. Peaches bring $2@3 per bushel, there being a good supply, such as they are, from the South.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Waterloo.

A Sunday-school was organized at the school-house Sunday evening. The school will meet every Sunday at 3 p. m. The Willoughby school meets at 10 a. m. We hope that these schools will be encouraged by all.

We had a little sing at Wesley Rice's Sunday eve. Of those from a distance a the sing were H. C. Botts, Master Walter Botts and Miss Dell Allen.

Thos. A. Snodgrass, of Harrison County, Ky., is canvassing this neighborhood with a patent fluting and smoothing sad iron. Mr. Grass has sold many since front, with which the people are well pleased.

Several bachelors of this vicinity are in the matrimonial market, where they are likely to remain, as there is no demand for them.

Wheat is very fine, and is nearly all cut. Corn is growing rapidly. Uno.

Walton.

The picnic at Carlisle's Grove on June 30th was well attended. Excellent music was furnished by a Cincinnati band. The dancing was carried on in the grove until the rain came down. The people then adjourned to a tobacco barn and resumed the dancing.

The primary election passed off very quietly, Conner, the popular candidate, greatly in the majority. Quite a number of Republicans left the polls with longer faces than they brought with them, when informed "this was exclusively a Democratic affair."

Walton was very much stirred up on Sunday. Mr. Legrand Brooks had been out in the woods gathering raspberries. His little son, Taylor, 5 years old, strayed off. When it came time to go home, Mr. Brooks supposed that he had started back to Walton. But, on arriving at home, the boy had not been seen, so the whole town started out on the search, but were unable to find him. About 6 o'clock a man from Verona brought him home. He had been picked up a short distance from that town.

Personal—One of our Walton belles is at present visiting Burlington and vicinity. Hope she is as highly appreciated there as she is at home.....Miss Julia Snow is visiting her sister, Mrs. Mahoney, at Louisville .....Mr. Amos Carlisle, since the departure of the pedagogue, has returned as a straying sheep back to the fold.....Mrs. Vanlieuwan, of Independence, was visiting Walton on Saturday. The rich, waving harvest is now at hand, and the busy farmers spare no time in gathering up the golden sheaves and preparing for the sumptuous feast which will eventually be the reward of their patient toil and industry. Already the rattle of the mower is heard in the land, and not a single person in the whole land need now complain of the scarcity of labor at remunerative prices.

One of the most terrific wind storms passed over the country on Monday evening, June 25th, that has visited this section for many years. The principal damage was done to timber, especially walnut, as it is most valuable. The roof of the old mill at this place was blown off and laid aside as if done by the hand of an architect. Considerable damage was done to orchards, growing crops, &c.

Dr. A. C. Foster, a former resident of our place, but who, in the last four or five years, has been visiting the principal cities of the Union, is now located at Nashville, Tenn., being attached to the U. S. Signal Service force. The Doctor has recently made several balloon ascensions from that city, in company with Prof. King, and reached an altitude scarcely excelled by aerial navigators. His contributions to the Nashville Daily American on the science of balloon navigation is spoken of in the highest terms by that journal. The American further adds that Mr. Foster is likely to contribute to science useful information in regard to storms by an analysis of air.

Died.—On the morning of June 30th, at his home, Fillmore Sebree, after a lingering illness of nearly a year. The Rev. James A. Kirtley preached a beautiful discourse at the house of his parents on Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, selecting the 10th verse of the 38th chapter of Isaiah. A large concourse followed the remains to their last resting place. The bereaved family has the sympathy of the entire community. But there is consolation to think that those who die in the flesh will live again in the spirit.

Petersburg.

The day of tribulation is past, and the Democratic doctors of politics have enjoyed the momentary distinction of assisting at the surgical operation by which the valued life of the party was saved. As an instance of the fact that the interest in the election was more general with the candidates than the dear people, we note that a comparatively light vote was cast. This precinct, which last November gave a gentleman in New York 205 votes, last Saturday could only be induced to divide 145 unequally between two old citizens, Mr. Conner receiving 30 and Mr. Rouse 115. The jug of oil that was broken last Monday and poured on the waters will soften the bark, though, and by August we may get back to our old strength. There was no excitement here, and the election was as orderly and peaceful as a Sunday-school picnic. The following is the score:

Norman	129	Rouse 115
Conner	30

For delegates—

Henry Terrill	27	O. N. Alloway	92
N. S. Walton	41	W. H. Terrill	107
F. P. Walton	38	J. H. McWethy	98
J. C. Jenkins	26	J. Frank Grant	112
E. M. Gaines	15

Speaking of picnics by Sunday-schools reminds us of the fact that the one by the school here and at Aurora, alluded to last week, was pronounced a perfect pink of picnics by all the participants. The verdict was unanimous. A brass band or two went along, and everybody got enough "Um-pah, um-pah, blah, brah!" to last them until next 4th of July.

Mr. Stephen Gaines and lady were in town last week. Mr. Gaines is a remarkably pleasant gentleman, and wields a croquet mallet with sufficient skill to defeat some or the best of our professional players.

The enforcement of the town stock ordinance of late is bearing some unexpected and unwholesome fruit in the way of legal complications and financial embarrassments. Nothing but the coolness and sound judgment of the reverential President of the Board can be relied on to bring the ship of State safely through. He is a man of nerve, determination and probity, and when he sets his No. 13 emphatically down, in the language of the poet, "it's thar."

Jason Upp, a Garrison ranchman who visited us last Saturday, reversed the order of things somewhat by suddenly becoming Down Down with—well, his friends called it cholera infantum; but, he being a sound Conner Democrat, some malicious Rouse Democrats insinuated that too much refreshments, administered by the fostering hand of Capt. Nels. Smith (another G. R.) had caused the difficulty in his navigating apparatus.

County Court.

At the regular term of the County Court, held Monday, T. W. Finch was allowed $50 96 claims against the county on account of the Poor-house.

Several of the Justices filed reports in regard to redistricting the roads in their districts; others were allowed further time to make report.

A proposition to erect a Work-house for the county was made, and a vote on the proposition ordered taken at the August election.

Squires Ashley and Baker were appointed a committee to report to the Court the probable cost of a Work-house. The committee, failing to agree, was discharged.

The Court, in the bounty fund case, elected F. P. Walton, Collector, and N. E. Hawes, Receiver. Several persons filed grounds for exemption from paying the bounty tax, and the Court continued all such applications till the October term of court.

M. B. Green, N. S. Walton and John S. Huey were appointed a committee to examine the upper story of the jail and recommend the necessary repairs. Their report is as follows:

We, the Committee appointed by the Boone County Court to examine the upper room of the jail and recommend the necessary alterations and improvements thereon would make the following report:

1. That the present iron roof be taken off and sold.

2. That the outside walls be raised with wood work 2 feet high, and ceiled on the outside, leaving three openings on each side to be closed by doors.

3. That the vacancy between the ceiling and the joist be filled with charcoal.

4. That the building be covered with good shingles.

H. Ashly was appointed to do the work recommended by the Committee.

Someone wants to know why it is the Democratic party quarrels so much within itself in Boone. That is easily accounted for. Contention is the food of politicians, and when they are not involved in party contentions, they have to contend with themselves; or, in other words, when there is nobody else to devour, they must devour themselves.

We are requested to announce that the Grange picnic, announced in last week's Recorder, has been, on account of the busy time with farmers, postponed until Saturday, the 4th of August.

Born—To Mr. and Mrs. John Moore June 23d, a boy.

A Nut for Someone to Crack.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Paragraph 5 in the order of the Executive Committee reads:

"The delegates chosen in the several districts shall meet in the Court-house in Burlington, on the 2nd day of July, 1877, at 1 o'clock p. m., and cast the pro rata vote of their districts. The candidate receiving the majority of the votes cast by the delegates to be the nominee of the Democratic party for the office of County Representative."

Does the pro rata vote referred to in the above, refer alone to the number of votes cast in the convention by each district, or, does it refer to the division of the vote of the district delegations among the candidates in the convention, pro rata? That is, according to the strength of the candidates as shown by the popular vote in the same districts. Query.

Wm. Ringo, W. G. Terrell's former bondsman, Ben M. Piatt and Colonel Houashell were in Burlington, Saturday, preparing a bond to release Terrell from the Covington jail.

Another lunatic tried last week. Judge Phelps is having much experience in that line, and will be well posted, at the expiration of his term of office, in the law in that particular. About one a month this year.

Joe Goss appeared, by his attorney, R. C. Green, in the Kenton Criminal Court, Saturday, entered a plea of guilty and was fined $250. Goss's time of imprisonment in Boone expires about the 18th of this month, when he will go to Covington and finish paying the penalty of the law against prize fighting.

Saturday, his Honor Judge Phelps tried Cavallah Johnson and —— Williams, two colored lads who had been in jail some days awaiting trial for a misdemeanor perpetrated by borrowing a Mr. Tanner's mare without Mr. Tanner's knowledge. The evidence in the case did not connect Williams with the taking of the nag, although he was seen riding behind Johnson on the mare. Johnson was fined $50, and, failing to have the funds with which to pay the fine, was committed to jail. The Judge said he would like to fine Williams for riding with Johnson.

A week or so ago, a dog belonging to Mr. Joe Brown, in the Union neighborhood, bit a young son of Mr. George Delph. Brown killed the dog, for fear it might bite someone else. Mrs. Delph grew very uneasy, knowing there is considerable excitement in the country about mad dogs, and kept a very close watch over her child. One day last week she discovered the little boy was very lively, which was uncommon with him. This increased the parents' alarm, and they sent to Jacob Tanner's and got a mad-stone, which, when applied, adhered to the wound for about an hour and a quarter.

LETTING THE OLD CAT DIE.

Not long ago I wandered near
A playground in the wood,
And there heard words from a youngster's lips
That I never quite understood.

"Now, let the old cat die," he laughed;
I saw him give a push,
Then gayly scamper away as he spied
My face peep over the bush.

But what he pushed or where he went
I could not well make out,
On account of the thicket of bending boughs
That bordered the place about.

"The little villain has stoned a cat,
Or hung it upon a limb,
And left it to die all alone," I said,
"But I'll play the mischief with him."

I forced my way between the boughs,
The poor old cat to seek,
But what did I find but a swinging child,
With her bright hair brushing her cheek.

Her bright hair floated to and fro,
Her little red dress flashed by,
But the loveliest thing of all, I thought,
Was the gleam of her laughing eye.

Swinging and swaying back and forth,
With the rose-light in her face,
She seemed like a bird and a flower in one,
And the forest her native place.

"Steady! I'll send you up, my child,"
But she stopped me with a cry;
"Go 'way! go 'way! Don't touch me, please,
I'm letting the old cat die!"

"You letting him die!" I cried, aghast,
"Why, where's the cat, my dear?"
And lo! the laughter that filled the woods
Was a thing for the birds to hear.

"Why, don't you know?" said the little maid,
The flitting, beautiful elf,
"That we call it letting the old cat die,'
When the swing stops all of itself?"

Then swinging and swinging and looking
With the merriest look in her eye, [back,
She bade me "Good-day," and I left her alone,
A-letting the old cat die.

How to Fatten Chickens.

It is hopeless to attempt to fatten chickens while they are at liberty. They must be put in a proper coop, and this, like most other poultry appurtenances, need not be expensive. To fatten twelve fowls, a coop must be three feet long, eighteen inches high and eighteen inches deep, made entirely of bars—no part of it solid; neither top, side nor bottom. Discretion must be used, according to the size of the chickens put up. They do not want room. Indeed, the closer they are the better, provided they can all stand up at the same time.

Care must be taken to put up such as have been accustomed to be together, or they will fight. If one is quarrelsome, it is better to remove it at once, as, like other bad examples, it soon finds imitators. A diseased chicken should not be put up.

The food should be ground oats, and may either be put in a trough or on a flat board running along the front of the coop. It may be mixed with water or milk; the latter is better. It should be well slaked, forming a pulp as loose as can be, provided it does not run off the board. They must be well fed three or four times a day—the first time as soon after daybreak as possible or convenient, and then at intervals of four hours. Each meal should be as much and no more than they can eat up clean. When they have done feeding, the board should be wiped, and some gravel may be spread. It causes them to feed and thrive.

After a fortnight of this treatment, you will have good fat fowls. If, however, there are but four to six to be fattened, they must not have so much room as though there were twelve. Nothing is easier than to allot them the proper space. It is only necessary to have two or three pieces of wood to pass between the bars and form a partition. This may also serve when fowls are put up at different degrees of fatness. This requires attention, or the fowls will not keep fat and healthy. As soon as as the fowl is sufficiently fattened it must be killed; otherwise it will still get fat, but will lose flesh. If fowls are intended for the market, of course they are, or may be, all fattened at once; but if for home consumption, it is better to put them up at such intervals as will suit the time when they are required for the table.

When the time arrives for killing, whether they are meant for market or otherwise, they should be fasted, without food or water, for twelve or fifteen hours. This enables them to be kept some time after being killed, even in hot weather.—London Cottage Gardener.

Preparing for Possibilities.

Mr. Benson was out in his garden, Monday, daubing a coat of tar on the trunk of a choice cherry tree, when his next door neighbor, with whom he is not on very good terms, came out and industriously set to work nailing lath between the pickets on the fence.

"I thought I would fix this tree so that your dog wouldn't be able to get into it when the cherries are ripe," sarcastically observed Benson, as the work went on.

"Yes, I see," was the reply, "and it reminds me that if the space between these pickets was reduced, your cat couldn't reach through and pick my raspberries."

A deep and profound silence followed.

A MAN named Roach proposes to sail from San Francisco around Cape Horn to New York in a three-ton boat twenty feet long. He wants a man and a boy to go with him, so that the chances of there being a survivor may be greater.

Taxes.

Permit me to inform you, my friends, what are the inevitable consequences of being too fond of glory: Taxes—upon every article which enters into the mouth, or covers the back, or is placed under the foot—taxes upon everything which is pleasant to see, hear, feel, smell or taste—taxes upon warmth, light and locomotion—taxes on everything on earth and the waters under the earth, on everything that comes from abroad or is grown at home—taxes upon the raw material—taxes on every fresh value that is added to it by the industry of man—taxes on the sauce which pamper's man's appetite, and the drug which restores him to health—on the ermine which decorates the Judge, and the rope which hangs the criminal—on the poor man's salt, and the rich man's spice—on the brass nails of the coffin and the ribbons of the bride—at bed or board we must pay taxes.

The schoolboy whips his taxed top—the beardless youth manages his taxed horse with a taxed bridle on a taxed road—the dying Englishman, pouring his medicine, which has paid 7 per cent., into a spoon that has paid 15 per cent., flings himself back on his chintz bed which has paid 22 per cent., makes his will on an eight pound stamp, and expires in the arms of an apothecary who has paid a license of a hundred pounds for the privilege of putting him to death. His whole property is then immediately taxed from 2 to 10 per cent. Besides the probate, large fees are demanded for burying him in the chancel; his virtues are handed down to posterity on taxed marble; and he is then gathered to his fathers—to be taxed no more.—Lord Brougham.

Perseverance.

If I were a boy again I would practice perseverance oftener, and never give a thing up because it was hard or inconvenient to do it. If we want light we must conquer darkness. When I think of mathematics I, blush at the recollection of how often I "caved in" years ago. There is no trait more valuable than a determination to persevere, when the right thing is to be accomplished. We are all inclined to give up too easily in trying our unpleasant situations, and the point I would establish with myself, if the choice were again within my grasp, would be never to relinquish my hold on a possible success, if mortal strength or brains in my case were adequate to the occasion. That was a capital lesson which Prof. Foraday taught one of his students in the lecture room after some chemical experiments. The lights had been put out in the hall, and by accident some small article dropped on the floor from the Professor's hand. The Professor lingered behind, endeavoring to pick it up. "Never mind," said the student, "it is of no consequence to-night, whether we find it or not." "That is true," replied the Professor, "but it is of grave consequences to me as a principle, that I am not foiled in my determination to find it." Perseverance can sometimes equal genius in its results. "There are only two creatures," says the eastern proverb "who can surmount the pyramid—the eagle and the snail!"

To be an Unlucky Farmer.

We are of the opinion that all men are born lucky, but admit that all do not remain so. According to this, one might conclude that there are some who prefer to be unlucky, and if such is the case with you, dear reader, permit us to tell you exactly how you can manage to secure your preference:

1. Neglect your fences and your buildings.
2. Put no faith in the saying that "a stitch in time saves nine."
3. Give your stock the freedom of the country.
4. Consider your land rich enough.
5. Move your stable to a new place when the manure has accumulated so as to be in your way.
6. Never gather up old bones, or old shoes or old woolen rags for your grape vines.
7. Marry a woman who has been raised to wipe dishes with table napkins, and who is an adept at melting the coffee pot, at spilling sugar, coffee, tea, flour and salt.
8. Sleep late of a morning.
9. Have plenty of shade trees on your farm.
10. And last, though not least, become a cross-roads politician.—Journal of Progress.

WHEN a Newark lover leaves the house of his adored one at a late hour in the evening, and walks musingly homeward beneath the twinkling stars, his fond fancy pictures her, clothed in white samite, resting sweetly upon her pillow, with her unbounded hair tossed about her sleeping face, and angels bending over her couch whispering heavenly dreams. Perhaps at that very moment, though, she is in the pantry, hungrily gnawing on a ham bone.

"FREQUENT and constant advertising brought me all I own."—A. T. Stewart.

"How can the world know a man has a good thing unless he advertises possession of it."—Cornelius Vanderbilt.

"Success depends upon a liberal patronage of printing offices."—J. J. Astor.

"The road to fortune is through printers' ink."—P. T. Barnum.

WHY is an unwelcome guest like a shady tree? Because we are glad when he leaves.

STATE NEWS.

—Thos. H. Moore, of Clark County, has blue grass five feet and eight inches high.

—The Cynthiana News says wheat looks well and will be ready for harvest in a few weeks.

—Bath County boasts of a lady 73 years old, who walks seven miles to town and back without drawing a long breath.

—A LARGE meteor, appearing about the size of an eighteen-pounder shell, passed over Bowling Green last week. Read missed seeing it by being in Frankfort.

—Mt. Sterling Democrat: Jerry Bourne, a colored man, and formerly a resident of this county, returned from Jackson, Mississippi, on Monday evening last, where he has been living for several years past. Jerry says he is a Democrat, and that very near all of the colored men in that part of the State are of the same politics. He is over an average in point of intelligence, and was uncommonly well dressed.

—Clark County Democrat: A water-spout burst in the neighborhood of Camargo, in this county, on Sunday evening, and eye-witnesses say they never saw anything like it. Instead of a very hard rain the water seemed to fall in perfect sheets. Plowed fields were almost ruined and great damage was done to fences along the water courses. The most modest little brooks became rushing torrents, spreading devastation on every side.

—Mrs. Sheets, who lives about two and a half miles from Frankfort, between the Flat Creek pike and the railroad, owns a colt that has five legs. The colt is about two months old, and is doing well. The fifth leg is on the left fore leg, at or a little below the knee, and hangs by the side of the leg proper, coming to within two inches of the ground. The colt can be seen at any time in the pasture of Mr. Frank Hullett, near the railroad. Craddock pronounces this "a wonder."—Frankfort Yeoman.

—Hartford Herald: A gentleman high in authority, living on Deep Creek, in this county, who gives considerable attention to bees, says he hived three different swarms in three consecutive days from one stand. Mr. Richmond Dickerson is the gentleman who vouches for this remarkable fact. Mr. Dickerson informs us that Mr. Winder Webb, of Boyle County, had four swarms from the same hive in four consecutive days. Boyle County, therefore, is entitled to the belt over Washington on the bee question.

—'Squire Funk offered a resolution in the Board of Magistrates of yesterday, asking for the appointment of a committee of three to endeavor to obtain from the next Legislature an act re-establishing the whipping post in Kentucky, and if a general law could not be secured, then, on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread, to obtain a special law for the benefit (?) of Fayette County. The resolution was adopted unanimously, and a committee was appointed, consisting of Abr'm S. Drake and James M. Logan, with the County Judge as Chairman. —Lexington Press.

AN American lady coming from Canada assured the customs officer that she had nothing but wearing apparel in her trun; but he went to the bottom of the article and found a dozen bottles of brandy stowed away. "Madam," demanded he, sternly, "do you call these wearing apparel?" "Yes," the lady demurely replied; they are my husband's 'night-caps.'"

A SAN FRANCISCO man told his wife he was tired of her, and she obligingly poisoned herself. A New York woman, when she discovered that her husband was tired of her, raised a frightful wart on his head as large as a goose-egg, and then eloped with a handsome man. In selecting a wife, you want to choose a San Francisco style of woman.

"How old did you say this company was?" inquired the inquisitive female, while witnessing the Ancient and Honorables' parade on Boston Common, the other day. "Two hundred and thirty-nine years marm," was the reply. "My soul!" said the surprised dame; "you wouldn't think it to look at 'em; would you, now?"

IT is very fine to laugh at a woman's tantrums when a mouse makes its appearance in the vicinity of her skirts; but a little merriment should be reserved for the man who plays circus while a June bug is walking up the inside of his trouser's leg with the slow and measured step of a day laborer.

TAKE IT BACK.

You kissed me at the gate last night,
And mother heard the smack!
She says it's naughty to do so,
So please to take it back.

I can not see what harm there is
In such a thing—can you?
But mother seems so very wroth,
Please take it back—now do.

It seems to me quite natural
For the lips to meet that way;
But mother says it's very wrong,
So take it back, I pray.

And, come to think of it, I'm sure
That several times 'twas done;
So now, to make it right, be sure
To take back every one.

I would not have you think it's me;
I do not care a mite;
But mother's so particular,
Please take them back to-night.

Crime in Owen.

On last Saturday evening, about four o'clock, Thomas Fox, a citizen of whom we know nothing, was murdered near the mouth of Savern, near Mint Springs, in this county, by James Horton. The particulars as we learn them are about as follows: On last Thursday Horton and his wife made an assault on Fox, who was unarmed, and threatened his life, the wife avewing to Horton that if he did not kill Fox she would kill him (her husband). There being men at work in an adjoining field it is supposed to have deterred them from this fiendish purpose for the time being. On Sunday evening Fox was returning home on horseback, and having dismounted and whilst in the act of letting down the fence to pass through the place to his house which is on Horton's land—Fox being a tenant—he was shot and instantly killed by Horton, nine buckshot having penetrated his face and body. Horton is said to acknowledge the killing. Horton married a daughter of George Razor, and is said to be a desperate bad character. The Sheriff was notified and writs were issued for the arrest of Horton, his wife and father-in-law, the latter two being charged as accessories to the murder. The latter two were arrested Monday morning and brought to this place, where they are now under guard, the woman being in a delicate condition. Horton is still at large, but he has no chance to escape, as he is surrounded in a small skirt of woods by about fifty men, who are guarding all place s where escape would be possible and are beating it down. Yesterday morning about two o'clock he ventured to enter the house of his father-in-law, which was closely guarded, but was apprised by some of the inmates of the fact and ran off, but not without receiving a volley of eight shots from the guard, with what result is unknown. There is said to be great excitement in the neighborhood over the affair.—Owen News.

Squeezed by a Snake.

A young lady of this place had quite an adventure with a snake, while visiting a married sister, in the country a few days since. While engaged with her sister in gathering peas, she complained of an unusual pressing sensation about the waist, and, being subject to fainting spells, she was assisted by her sister in loosening her clothing, and when the corset was reached, a large black snake was found snugly coiled over the corset, reaching around her waist twice, and was gradually tightening his coils, producing a peculiarly sickening sensation. The tail of the reptile was fastened around its neck in a complete knot. Her brother-in-law was called to her assistance, and with a stick struck the snake a blow upon the head, which caused it to loosen its hold and fall to the ground, where it was soon dispatched. When and how the loathsome reptile found its way to the lady's waist without her knowledge, is a mystery. It is fair to presume that in future she will have quite an antipathy to gathering peas, or placing herself in any position likely to meet with a similar adventure.—Shelby Sentinel.

MR. YATES, of Manchester, England, has invented a horse-shoe, composed of three thickness of cow-hide, compressed into a steel mold, and then subjected to a chemical preparation. It is said to last longer, weighs only one-fourth as much as the common shoe, never to split the hoof, and to have no injurious influence on the foot. It requires no calks; even on asphalt, the horse never slips. It is so elastic that the horses step is lighter and surer. It adheres so closely to the foot that neither dust nor water can penetrate between the shoe and the hoof. If all this is true, it must be a wonderful improvement on the old iron shoe.

A GERMAN in this city lost his wife, and the next week married again, and his new wife asked him to take her out riding. He felt indignant that she should have no more respect than that for deceased wife, and said, "You dink I ride out mid anoder vomon so soon after the death of mine frau?"

No Postmaster has authority to deliver a man's letter to his wife. You see she might cut a check in two, in her haste to open a small, white envelope.

The Sea Serpent.

The sea serpent appears to be one of the unsolved mysteries, but he is turning up every now and then. The latest appearance of the monster is very authentic, but it was in a different part of the world from that which he has most frequented.

The commander of the English royal yacht Osborne, which arrived at Portsmouth from the Mediterranean on Monday, June 11, has forwarded an official report to the Admiralty, through the Commander-in-Chief (Admiral Sir Geo. Elliot, K. C. B.), respecting a sea monster which she encountered during her homeward voyage. At about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the 24 of June, the sea being exceptionally calm, while the yacht was proceeding round the north coast of Sicily toward Cape Vito, the officer on the watch observed a long ridge of fins, each about six feet long, moving slowly along. He called for a telescope, and was joined by other officers. The Osborne was steaming westward at ten and a half knots an hour, and, having a long passage before her, could not stay to make minute observations. The fins were progressing in an easterly direction, and, as the vessel more nearly approached them, they were replaced by the foremost part of a gigantic monster. Its skin was, so far as it could be seen altogether devoid of scales, appearing rather to resemble in sleekness that of a seal. The head was bullet shaped, with an elongated termination, being somewhat similar in form to that of a seal, and was about six feet in diameter. Its features were seen by only one officer, who described them as like those of an alligator. The neck was comparatively narrow, but so much of the body as could be seen developed in form like that of a gigantic turtle, and from each side extended two fins about fifteen feet in length, by which the monster paddled itself along after the fashion of a turtle.

The appearance of the monster is accounted for by a submarine volcano, which occurred north of Galita, in the Gulf of Tunis, about the middle of May, and was reported at the time by steamer which was struck by a detached fragment of submarine rock. The disturbance below water, it is thought probable, may have driven up the monster from its "native element," as the site of the eruption is only one hundred miles from where it was reported to have been seen.

Goldsmith Maid.

Goldsmith Maid stands to-day as the acknowledged queen of the trotting turf, without a rival, either in fastest time of her best hear, or in the number of heats she has trotted below two minutes and twenty seconds.

Her single mile heat record is 2:14, twice repeated, once at Boston in 1874, and again at Philadelphia last year. She has to her credit the fastest first, second, third fourth and fifth heats in the annals of the trotting turf. Although twenty years old, she trotted through the entire grand circuit last year, beginning at Cleveland, embracing Buffalo, Utica, Rochester, Springfield, Hartford and Boston, against such horses as Smuggler, Fullerton, Lucille Golddust, Bodine, Hopeful, and others having records below 2:20, winning every race except that at Cleveland.

Goldsmith Maid is a rich colored bay mare, scarcely 15¼ hands high, formed very much on the greyhound order, with an exceedingly intelligent countenance and long racing points. She trotted her first race when eight years old, and won it in 2:36 in the fall of 1866. From that season to this she has trotted every year, during nearly every week of the trotting season, traveling in the meantime over the entire sweep of the States from Massachusetts to California. Twenty-one times has she trotted races in which she has scored three heats better than 2:20, while Lulu, Lady Maud, Hopeful and Rarus have done but once, and Smuggler has twice repeated the same extraordinary trotting feat.

These facts in her history prove her to be the greatest trotting horse that has ever appeared.

Five years ago she trotted on the old Buckeye course, near Cincinnati, in 2:17¼, and three years later she scored 2:18 at Dayton, in the presence of eighty-two thousand people—the fastest mile ever made on a half-mile track.

Last winter she beat Rarus in California, winning a heat in 2:14¾, the fastest time ever made in California, surpassing the famous Occident's time by two and a quarter seconds.

THERE is a precocious six-year-old boy in Boston who is wonderful in spelling and definitions. The other day his teacher asked him to spell matrimony. "Matrimony," spelled the youngster, promptly. "Now, define it," said the teacher. "Well," replied the boy, "I don't exactly know what it means, but I know my mother's got enough of it."

THE time is at hand when a young man with only ten cents in his pocket, vainly tries to lead his girl to the side of the street most remote from ice-cream and temptation.

Recent Event at a Hotel.

"Who's there?"

There was no answer, and the queer noise stopped.

"Anybody there?"

No answer.

"It must be a spirit. I must be a medium. I will try.

Aloud:

"If there be a spirit in the room it will signify the same by saying aye—no, that's not what I mean. If there's a spirit in the room it will please rap three times."

Three very distinct raps were given in the direction of the bureau.

"Is it the spirit of my sister?"

No answer.

"Is it the spirit of my mother?"

Three raps.

"Are you happy?"

Nine raps.

"Do you want anything?"

A succession of very loud raps.

"Will you give me any communication if I get up?"

No answer.

"Shall I hear from you to-morrow?"

Raps very loud in the direction of the door.

"Shall I ever see you?"

Then raps came from outside the door.

He waited long for an answer to this last question, but none came.

The spirit had gone, and after thinking about the extraordinary visit, he turned over and fell asleep.

On getting up in the morning he found that the spirit of his mother had carried off his watch and purse, his trousers, and his greatcoat down stairs in the hall.

Bank of England Notes.

Few of the persons who handle Bank of England notes ever think of the amount of labor and ingenuity that is expended on their production. These notes are made from pure white linen cuttings only, never from rags that have been worn. They have been manufactured for nearly two hundred years at the same spot—Laverstoke, in Hampshire—and by the same family, the portals, who are descended from some French Protestant refugees. So carefully is the paper prepared that even the number of dips into the pulp made by each workman is registered on a dial by machinery, and the sheets are carefully counted and booked to each person through whose hands they pass. The printing is done by a most curious process in Mr. Coe's department within the bank building. There is an elaborate arrangement for securing that no note shall be exactly like any other in existence. Consequently there never was a duplicate of a Bank of England note, except by forgery. According to the City Press, the stock of paid notes for seven years is about 94,000,000 in number, and they fill 18,000 boxes, which, if placed side by side, would reach three miles. The notes, placed in a pile, would be eight miles high; or, if joined end to end, would form a ribbon 15,000 miles long. Their superficial extent is more than that of Hyde Park; their original value was over $15,000,000,000, and their weight over 112 tons.

The India Rubber Supply.

The native way of supplying the trade with rubber is highly wasteful, and, if no preventive means were taken, it would not be many years before the supply would fall far short of the demand, which is increasing at an enormous rate; in fact the world can not get along without rubber, which has now become one of the most necessary materials in a variety of trades. It has been the improvident practice to cut down trees 150 or 200 feet high to secure one hundred weight of rubber, and thus the forests of rubber trees, especially in Brazil, are being destroyed and will ultimately belong to the past. Without waiting for such an event, the British Government has shipped 2,000 Brazilian rubber plates to the island of Ceylon, and, strange to say, in the incredibly short space of two months after the seeds had been sown, the little trees produced the finest kind of rubber—equal to the best of Brazil. In June, 1876, 90,000 seeds were received, of which, however, only 2,500 were alive; as their vitality is very short, they were sown at once, covering a space of 300 square feet. A number began to grow, and in a few days many of them were eighteen inches high. Cases were then made containing fifty plants each, large enough to allow for growth during transit on shipboard. They were sent to Ceylon, Singapore, Burmah, and other places, and the 2,500 plants thus distributed will do a great deal of good in preventing the otherwise impending calamity of a scarcity of rubber.

A CERTAIN Bishop was one day rebuking one of his clergy for fox hunting. "My lord," was the clergyman's answer, "every man must have some relaxation. I assure you I never go to balls." "Oh," said the Bishop, "I perceive you allude to my having been to the Duchess of S.'s party, but I give you my word, I never was in the same room as the dancers." "My lord," responded the clergyman, "my horse and I are getting old, and we are never in the same field as the hounds."

"He Serves His Party Best Who Serves His Country Best."

The dissatisfaction of the machine Republicans with the President's civil service circular is pronounced, but has no weight with the Administration. The circular was very carefully considered and thoroughly discussed long before it was issued. The President said recently to a friend that he expected trouble on account of it; that he knew that for a time, at least, it would be unpopular, and that the Republican party would probably lose some voters this year on account of it; but he believed it was right, and he would put it into execution at all hazards, feeling assured that the loss of the party would, at the worst, be but temporary, and that in the end the party would gain largely. He regarded his office as a great trust, to be conscientiously administered, as he would administer a private trust. The office-holders under him are like men that he would employ to assist him in private business. They are paid to attend to the details of Government business, and they must not be permitted to devote the time for which the Government pays them to efforts in the management of party machinery.

He says that after nominations are made he has no disposition to insist that the office-holder shall be deprived of the privilege of voting for and working to secure the election of the candidate whom he prefers, with the understanding, of course, that he shall not neglect his official duties in doing so; but he will not be permitted to use the patronage or influence of his office to secure the nomination of any person to office. He must not run primary conventions, nor take any part in the preliminary operations, but he is not disfranchised by the fact that he holds an office and can vote and work for his choice like any other citizen.

The President says he will enforce the circular without regard to persons. The first office-holder who violates the order will be dismissed forthwith.—Washington Special Cincinnati Commercial.

A WELL-KNOWN scientist, in this city, observing, last fall, an unusual number of dead flies in his rooms, subjected them to the microscope, and found it was what might be termed a brain fever which was afflicting the musca domestica. This spring he notices a continuation of this epidemic, though it has not yet become so general as to warrant the broad statement that the metropolitan fly is sick. The heads of these flies are found to be filled with living animalculæ—perhaps after the nature of mites—and seem to devour the nervous apparatus, and they are certainly more destructive of life than anything of the kind yet found on the head of the genus homo. A marked fatality among flies would, of course, have its influence on the general health of the city; for it is known that flies gather upon their bodies the germs of diseases as they pass through the air. These are afterward devoured in a peculiar manner, familiar to those who have watched the gymnastics of a fly on the window-pane. This little organ is is a potent means of spreading disease, and there are cases on record where a fly has gone over to a neighbor's and taken along the measles with it.

A MAN named Robert Williams died in Liverpool the other day from having his blood transfused into another man who was ill. He went on ill well for a day or two afterward. He then became ill, got gradually weaker, and died from erysipelas. The deceased was a man of full habit, and was occasionally given to drinking. The surgeon who performed the operation, before doing so, made particular inquiries as to his habits and state of health, and his habits were satisfactory. At the inquest, medical evidence was to the effect that the operation was skilfully performed. Dr. Higginson said he had performed the operation successfully in fifteen cases. The jury returned a verdict of "death by misadventure," but they were also of the opinion that sufficient inquiry was not made by the medical men who made the operation as to the deceased's habits and physical condition, and that he was not sufficiently cautioned as to the risk he was running.

"KISS me, George," she said, and, chained to the rest of the gang as she was, George managed to kiss the girl. The other prisoners looked on in envy, and the Sheriff looked on indulgently. But how much more the prisoners would have envied that kiss, and how sternly would the officers have prohibited, had either known that between those coral lips there was a small key, fitting the steel bracelets on George's wrists. Precisely how he put to use the farewell kiss is not known, but he did unlock his bonds, and, although the train was going at a very rapid rate, conveying him from Springfield, Ill., to the State prison, he bounded through a window and escaped.

A POOR man in Jersey County, New York, offered his saw for sale to buy food for his suffering family, and took two-fifths of it in crackers and three-fifths in tobacco.

THE Indians still furnish occasional amusement for the troops on the Western frontier. Last week, Colonel Whipple had an engagement with the Looking Glass band. Four Indians were killed and many wounded. This band of Indians is estimated at four hundred.

THE following, which we take from the Louisville Commercial, is about as good news as we have heard lately:

The farmers of Kentucky have just harvested the finest wheat crop the State has ever produced, and, to make things better for them, they can get a fine price for it any time they will sell. The crop will not be less than seven million bushels, and the surplus will bring four or five million dollars into the State—a very snug little sum in hard times.

THE probabilities now are the result of the late primary election and convention will be discussed through the columns of the RECORDER, and we now notify those who engage therein that all articles liable to cast any personal reflections whatever will be rejected. All newspaper, as well as other, discussions should be carried on in the proper manner. Confine yourselves to the "text."

THE Indianapolis Journal advises the farmers of Indiana to market their large wheat crops as soon as possible. The Journal thinks that the high price wheat now commands is likely to be of short duration, and in sixty days will be greatly reduced.

LAST week Special Treasury Agent Brackett came down upon a band of smugglers in New York. These smugglers had been engaged since 1869 smuggling silks and laces manufactured in England. The principal of the gang, who is credited with successfully smuggling over two million dollars worth of goods, escaped to Canada. Several of the number captured confessed they had smuggled large quantities of foreign manufactures.

THE depression in business that prevailed during the Presidential squabble was expected to disappear upon the settlement of that question. That question has been settled for several months, but with the said settlement came not a better financial condition of the country. The cry of "hard times" still goes up from every business man in the country. Prospects for lively "times" in the commercial world are as gloomy to-day as six months since.

AN order of the Executive Committee in Daviess County has precipitated the Democrats into trouble over the Senatorship from the district composed of Daviess and McLean counties. It seems that the order was susceptible of two constructions, and by some it has been construed so as to exclude McLean's say so in making a choice of candidates for State Senator. The State Central Committee will have to go out and regulate the party, and get it in ship shape before another campaign.

AT the 4th of July celebration at Woodstock, Connecticut, Blaine and Chamberlain assailed in the bitterest terms the policy as laid down by Hayes when he became President. Chamberlain for two long hours poured hot shot into the Southern Policy of the President, denouncing it in every particular. He claims the Southern policy to be the abandonment of the Southern Republicans, and that the withdrawal of troops from South Carolina and Lonisiana consists in the overthrow and destruction of those State Governments. Chamberlain claime that not an element of legal regularity or validity was wanting in Governor Packard's title to the office of Governor of the State of Louisiana, and that Hayes' title to the Presidency was founded on the votes cast by electors who received many hundreds less votes than Packard. The wrathful orator asserted that never was such an outrageous Southern Policy imagined by the Republican party previous to Hayes' inauguration, nor did his letter of acceptance foreshadow such a thing. He assumes that no steps taken by the President can be reversed, and his policy has as firmly linked Louisiana and South Carolina with the Solid South as are Kentucky and Mississippi. Blaine reviewed the Mexican war policy and claims that it is a scheme to annex a portion of the Territory of Mexico, and which will, if a war is brought about, involve a serious drain upon the National Treasury. The speeches of both Blaine and Chamberlain were invective, and heavy blows at the course pursued by Hayes since placed in power. By the next session of Congress, if there is nothing done to reconcile Blaine, he will tear up considerable dirt in the Republican camp. Blaine is undoubtedly looking into the future at least as far as 1880.

LAST week, Wells and Anderson, of Louisiana Returning Board notoriety, were indicted for perjury in swearing to the returns of the election and for forgery. Wells wrote Hayes a letter informing him in detail of the indictments and asked for help. The letter was received during the session of a Cabinet meeting. The Cabinet is reported as believing that Nicholls will interfere and prevent serious results, although Nicholls has informed them that he can not interfere and impede justice. Hayes relies on his Southern treaty for the protection of Wells and Anderson, while Judge Key depends on the public sentiment of the South preventing such extreme steps.

ALL the officers elected or appointed in this Commonwealth have to swear that they have not directly or indirectly, given, loaned any money, or property of any kind whatever, to any person or persons for the purpose of being employed or used in promoting their election or appointment to office; or that they have agreed or promised, directly or indirectly, to give, advance, or loan any money for such purposes. This reduces electioneering to the merits of the candidates, where it should be. But since the oath has been on the statute books we have not heard of a single instance where the use of money has disqualified an officer elect for the office to which he was elected.

THE Frankfort Yeoman, viewing the situation of the Democratic party in the northern part of the State, says:

"In every county where there is the slightest disposition to encourage an Independent candidate, it is the duty of the Democratic County Committee to look sharply to the organization. A great deal depends upon there being a full Democratic vote in every part of the State at the next election, and a clean-cut Democratic delegation in the next General Assembly. We urge upon the Chairman of every County Committee the importance of thorough local organization, and invoke his best endeavor to prevent any disaster to the regular ticket. It is plain that a disorganizing effort is in progress through some of the counties in Northern Kentucky, and it must be crushed wherever and wherever found. We deem it only necessary to call the attention of the Democrats to the fact that an Independent party in Kentucky means a Republican party in a new shape, and that it will be composed only of Republicans and such recalcitrant Democrats as have been employed to subserve the purpose of destroying the Democratic party.

—The Henderson News is for sale. $3,000 will buy the office.

—Henderson County has farmers who have planted 150 acres of tobacco this season.

—The Fourth's fire-crackers cost one citizen of Louisville the round sum of $1,500 by burning up his house.

—Adie O. Robertson has purchased the Bath County News, in connection with W. R. Patterson, of Owingsville.

—The Kansas emigration movement among the colored people of Kentucky seems to be steadily gaining strength.

—Mr. Asa Barrow, of Clark County, has sold to Mr. Hendricks, of Fleming County, 50 head of two-year-old mules at $130 per head.

—Flemingsburg Democrat: The Governor has remitted the fine of $1,000 imposed upon Silas Rogers, of Bath County, for keeping a tippling house.

—There is a movement on foot to organize a new county of portions of Carter and Lewis. Meetings have been held and lines run, and another meeting is soon to take place to hear reports of committees.

Bracken Chronicle: Two ladies, Misses Butler and Hamilton, of near Powersville, of this county, last Sunday whilst filling a burning lamp with coal oil, the lamp exploded; the two caught fire and were so badly burned that one of them died shortly after and the other is not expected to live.

—No such crops of wheat as those now being gathered in Southwestern Kentucky and Western Tennessee ever met the gaze in any country. Thousands of acres line the different roads upon either side, and in fields where the grain has been cut the shocks stand as numerously as stumps on a newly cleared farm.

—Some six or more persons were tried and convicted the other day in Versailles for violating the fish law by seining in Clear Creek. They were each fined $2 50. That was better than letting them off, but the 'Squire ought to have put it on as heavy as the law allows, to deter others from like violations of the statutes.

—John O'Neil found an old pistol in his father's house, in Georgetown, and commenced experimenting by snapping it at the various young persons about the place. A youth by the name of Dan Higgins happened to get in range just as one barrel was being snapped and received the contents in his head. He died in a few minutes.

—The Vanceburg Courier states that on the 27th of June, a man named Henry Roberts, from Montgomery Creek, Lewis County, was arrested and brought to that city on a charge of having foully murdered a little boy named Peter Hurdle some time before. A negro boy who witnessed the murder told of it, and took a party where the body was buried. Roberts was bound over for further trial.

—Mt. Sterling Democrat: Our neighboring county, Bath, has been in a state of feverish excitement since Friday night last, over the failure of Mr. Omer Wilson, the ex-Sheriff of the county. Attachments were sworn out by first one creditor and then another, until at last the stampede became general all along the whole line. Reports vary as to his liabilities, some placing them at $30,000 and some at as high as $50,000. His sureties are, as far as we have been able to learn, Messrs. Wesley Whaley, Cosby Land, John Terry, Joseph Wilson, Alfred Ratliff and Samuel Rogers. The first four of them are said to be ruined financially by the failure, Whaley having already assigned.

—A gentleman from Carter County arrived in the city on last Monday, who reports that considerable fighting had been done between the Underwoods and their gang on one side, and the citizens on the other. George Underwood, sr., and his son George Underwood and Alex Penlin, of the Underwood gang had been shot. Two peddlers shot a man who was trying to steal their horses, wounding the man but not killing him, he made his escape and they were unable to recognize him. The gentleman who brought the information, whose name is withheld at his request, is known by some of our citizens and is considered perfectly reliable. He reports that a party came to his house the morning he left and threatened to kill him. Most of the citizens are in arms, determined to rid their county of the band of horse-thieves who have infested their section of the State for several years.—Mount Sterling Sentinel.

Answer to "Query," and the Nut Cracked.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

"Query" wishes to know whether the pro rata vote referred to in the fifth paragraph of the order of the Democratic Executive Committee, ordering a primary election and convention, means the number of votes each district should cast in the convention, or does it mean that each district should, in the convention, divide its vote pro rata between the candidates in the proportion they may have respectively received of the popular vote in such district. Thus Burlington, by the order of the Committee, was entitled to four votes in the convention, and that district, under the order, was authorized to cast four votes and no more. The question raised by "Query" is simply this, when applied to Burlington District, or any or all the districts: Does the pro rata vote referred to in the order of the Committee simply mean that Burlington shall cast four votes in the convention, that being the pro rata delegate vote to which that district is entitled in reference to the whole delegate county vote, or does the order mean that the votes of the Burlington District should be divided between the candidates in the same proportion they received of the popular vote at the primary election? That is, if Rouse should have received 200 and Conner 100 of the popular vote in that district, then in the convention, Rouse would be entitled to 3 and Conner 1 of the delegate vote of the district. Let us go to the paragraph in question and see how it reads. Here are its words:

"The delegates chosen in the several districts shall meet in the Court-house in Burlington on the 2d of July, 1877, at 1 o'clock p. m., and cast the pro rata vote of their districts, the candidate receiving a majority of the votes cast by the delegates to be the nominee of the Democratic party for the office of County Representative."

First, the order in this paragraph declares "the delegates shall meet," and secondly, when met, they (the delegates) shall cast the pro rata vote of their districts; third, the candidate receiving a majority of the votes cast by the delegates to be the nominee. What vote does this order say the delegates are to cast? the pro rata votes of their districts for Conner and Rouse, or for any others who might, perchance, be candidates for the office of Representative? Not a bit of it. The order intimates no such thing, but says exactly, in plain words, "The delegates shall meet * * * and cast the pro rata vote of their districts." Now, what is the pro rata vote of a district? The phrase pro rata is well understood to mean in proportion, and, when applied to the distribution or division of anything between two or more persons, means in proportion as they were entitled, according to some fixed rule or standard. In this matter the Committee had decided that the Burlington District's proportionate part of the delegate vote in the convention should be four, Bellevue two, &c.; and that was the vote the delegates were to cast, and styled by the Committee the pro rata vote of their districts. For, says the Committee, "The delegates shall meet * * * and cast the pro rata vote of their districts." No reference is at all made to a division of the district's delegate vote pro rata, or in any other way, among the candidates in this clause of the order. So I would say to "Query," in my judgment his query is easily answered, though he has the authority of the convention to combat my position.

The question here arises, Were the delegates to the late convention instructed for whom, and in what proportion, they should cast their votes? In answer, I would say they were not by the Executive Committee, most assuredly. No Executive Committee has the right to give any such instruction. The voters alone can instruct their delegates. They are represented by the delegates, and through them they speak their choice in the convention, and no power on earth has a just right to interpose a veto between the constituent and his representative in the convention. If a Committee should attempt such power, its authority should be denied and its orders ignored utterly. The delegates know to what extent and how far they were instructed by their constituents, if at all. They can look nowhere else for instruction, or for power to instruct them. For our part, we believe the matter has been properly met by the candidates both holding the track, as the people did not seem to understand the order of the Committee, as interpreted by the convention; and, if that was properly done by the convention, it is unjust and undemocratic, as well as beyond the authority of the Committee, and should have been repudiated for the want of a legitimate paternity.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone!

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

A ONE-HORSE show stopped here Saturday night and captured all the loose nickles in the burg. The town, for a day or two previous to the show, was plastered with handbills, telling of the wonderful feats performed by the troupe, represented to be seven in number, but afterward turned out to be but two. The actors' names were Purcell, but a more merited cognomen would be "Thorough-sell."

LOCKHART is coming Tuesday, July 17th, and will give us one of his novel, unique and moral entertainments. We see that the press throughout the entire State compliments him in the highest manner. All are invited to attend, with the assurance that they shall witness a performance as recherche and refined as any visitor could desire. He will be in Florence on Wednesday, July 18th. The Elizabethtown (Ky.) News says he is one of the best legerdemain performers of the day.

A PROTRACTED meeting will be held at Mt. Zion, Boone County, Ky., commencing Wednesday evening, July 25th, and to continue over the fifth Sunday in the month. As the congregation, especially on Saturday and Sunday, is expected to be unusually large, it is desired that on the two days mentioned all who can will come prepared with baskets well filled to feed themselves and their less fortunate friends and neighbors. Rev. B. F. Bristow, who will have charge of the meeting, states that he expects Rev. R. Hiner, Rev. Joseph Young and Rev. A. Riddle to be present and assist him during the meeting.

NEXT Tuesday Joe Goss's term of imprisonment in Boone expires. He will then be taken to Covington and lodged in jail, to remain one hundred and twenty-five days in payment of the $250 fine lately assessed against him by the Kenton Criminal Court. This proceeding looks very much like punishing a man twice for the same offense, and especially so when it is remembered that the fight in Boone was simply the conclusion of a fight commenced in Kenton, and that the entire fighting was for one and the same stake. Goss's gentlemanly demeanor since he was brought to Boone has secured for him the sympathy of all who have seen him.

THE 4th of July and pay day on the Burlington and Bellevue pike were coincident, and together made the town, for a time, quite lively. One command, being paid off, besieged the bar at the Boone House, and all day long they were as thick about that place as flies around a molasses barrel. About sundown they were sufficiently steamed up to set in motion their fighting proclivities, and a set-to was the result. The crowd was not satisfied with one day's spree, and continued the seige at the Boone House; but Thursday morning the house closed and the seige raised. The force then concentrated and moved on the Kirkpatrick House, where set-to No. 2 followed, another Irishman getting the bruises. This was Burlington's first experience with a band of road workers, armed with greenbacks.

THE next meeting of the County Grange will be with the Bellevue Grange Friday, July 20th at 10 a. m. All who are prepared to receive the fifth degree are requested to be there, as the degree will be conferred in the forenoon. In the afternoon a report from every subordinate Grange is expected, reporting the number of stock in its neighborhood, condition of crops, and also, the strength and working condition of their Grange. Then there will be a discussion. Questin: "Affirmed that the Grange has paid its members for time and money expended?" Stanton Aylor and W. M. Rouse, affirm; Ben Rice and W. M. Conner, deny; then all who wish may volunteer and give their views on the question. A good time is expected, and all members should be present. Remember that all fourth degree members will be admitted except when conferring the fifth degree.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

COVINGTON STOCK YARDS, July 9.

Report of the Covington Live Stock Market for the week ending July 9, 1877:

Cattle—Receipts large and demand good, shippers' selling quick at from 5c. to 6¼c; butchers' stuff selling a little slow at the following prices: Good, 5@5¼c., common, 3@4c. Milch cows—None on the market and no demand. Veal calves—Receipts light and demand about equal, and selling at about the old prices, from 4c. to 4¾c.

Sheep—Receipts and demand about equal; butchers' and shippers' selling at 3¾@4¼c. There is still a good demand for stock sheep, with light receipts; selling at 2½@4c.

Lambs—Receipts large and prices a little off, shippers' selling at 5@6c., butchers' selling at 3@5½c., and slow at that price.

Hogs—Receipts continue large for this season of the year, and to-day prices seemed to be a little firmer for all grades, shippers' selling at $4 50@4 75, butchers' hogs at $4 60@4 80.

W. M. CONNER.

Still They Figure.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

SIR—It has been my good fortune to graduate in all the branches of mathematics from mental arithmetic to calculus, the possa nonum, of the mathematical course, and I have spent the past week in a review of the course to see if I could discover any rule justifying the counting in of Mr. Rouse by the delegates to the late convention held at Burlington. Thus far my research has proven fruitless, and I am driven to the conclusion that if the rule has any precedent it must be that of the Returning Board of Louisiana.

We propose in this letter to review the calculations of the several delegates to see whether or not the results obtained were not non sequiturs. We will take Petersburg first. Mr. Rouse received 115 votes and Mr. Conner 90. Hence, Mr. Rouse received 3 5-6 times as many votes as Mr. Conner. Did the delegates give him that proportion in the convention? Examine the records and you will find that Mr. Rouse received 3½ votes to Mr. Conner's 5-6; this does not give Mr. Rouse his pro rata of 3 5-6 times the vote of Mr. Conner; but, on the contrary, gives him 3 4-5 times Mr. Conner's vote. Now, the question arises how did the delegates from Petersburg obtain the pro rata vote cast by their representation? Dr. W. H. Terrill, we see but one way, and that was by counting out one of Mr. Rouse's votes. How much easier would it have been for the delegates from Petersburg to have given Mr. Rouse 2 15-90 votes and Mr. Conner 30-50 of a vote. In this case the premiss would justify the conclusion. The same may be said of the vote cast from each district.

In reading the proceedings of the convention we find that Mr. T. N. Stephens, of Carlton, reported in favor of giving each man his pro rata vote in each district. This report was adopted by the convention. Now, the question arises, what is meant by "pro rata?" This is a combination of the two Latin words pro (which means according to) and rata (the vote). Now, we have just proven to you that the vote cast by the Petersburg delegation was not according to the rate of the vote cast at the primary election.

I think the delegates had Returning Board on the brain, and expected to obtain the popular vote of the county under the special law regulating the counting in the electoral college.

Again, examine the vote cast by the Burlington delegation and you will find another vote counted out belonging to Mr. Rouse. From this district Mr. Rouse should have received 2 1-50 votes in the convention to Mr. Conner's 2 votes. But the delegates, with the memory of the Returning Board still fresh in their mind, counted out one vote for Rouse.

This looks like treating Mr. Rouse badly, but how about Mr. Conner in the Walton district? Let's see, the delegates gave Mr. Rouse 2-77 of a vote and Mr. Conner 2 53-77. Returning to the poll books and you will find that Mr. Conner received 154 votes and Mr. Rouse 16. Hence Mr. Conner received 9⅔ times as many votes as Mr. Rouse. But did the delegates give them that proportion in the convention? No! but, on the contrary, gave him 8⅓ times as many. Instead of counting out one vote for Mr. Conner as they did for Mr. Rouse, they counted out 50 votes for Mr. Conner. Is this pro rata or pro Returning Board.

Now, take the report of each district and you will find similar discrepancies. Take the vote as footed up and you find the convention gives Mr. Rouse 18 5-12 votes and to Conner 17 5-12. What became of the other 2-12 of a vote? I suppose that is the result of counting out. This proves that Mr. Rouse received 50 votes more than Mr. Conner did on the county.

What right had these delegates to cast out a single vote belonging to either of the gentlemen? Did they not transcend their duties when they did this? which, at least, they can not deny doing in the Burlington district. They were not sent there to dictate to the people who they should have to represent them; but simply to do their will—to cast for each gentleman his pro rata obtained at the primary election in their several districts.

I will now give you the result of my distribution of the pro rata of the county:

PRECINCTS.	Votes for Rouse.	Votes for Conner.	Rouse in Conven-tion.....	Conner in Conven-tion.....
Burlington.....	101	100	2 1-50	2
Petersburg.....	115	90	2 15-50	30-50
Bellevue.....	54	9	1 4-50	9-50
Carlton	56	33	1 6-50	33-50
Hamilton	93	79	1 49-50	1 29-50
Verona	26	116	20-50	2 16-50
Walton.....	16	154	16-50	3 4-50
Union	99	62	1 43-50	1 12-50
Florence.....	46	156	1 20-50	3 16-50
Taylorsport	101	50	2 1-50	1
Total.....	731	799	14 31-50	15 49-50
Majorities		68	.....	1 18-50

Now, analyze my pro rata distribution and see if you can discover any 2-12 unaccounted for. The vote cast in the primary election for the two candidates was 1,530. The vote that should have been cast in the convention for the two candidates should have been, according to my calculation 30 30-50. Now, allowing 50 votes for each vote cast in the convention and you have the 1530 votes cast at the primary election. Again I give Mr. Conner 1 18-50 votes majority in the convention which is equivalent to 68 at the primary election. Hence, I conclude that Mr. Conner is the nominee of the Democratic party of Boone both through the primary election and the convention, and I defy the universe to prove him otherwise.

No sanguine am I that Mr. Conner has received the nomination of the Democratic party of Boone, that I shall do everything in my power to elect him. By so doing sustain the untarnished reputation of proud old Democracy, and prevent the inroad of fraud that was made upon the Republican party when Rutherford B. Hayes was declared President of the once proudest Government on earth. JUSTICE.

July 10th, 1877.

[The 2-12 of a vote, the writer of the above calls in question was as the Secretary of the meeting, reports given to Mr. Rouse. What becomes of 5 2-12 delegates in the calculation made by "Justice?"—ED.]

Where is He!

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Where is Judge Phelps? At a mass meeting in Burlington, on the 1st Monday in June, there was a Committee appointed to draft a stock law to be presented to the people at the August election for their approval or rejection. As one of that Committee I would state that the committee met according to appointment and agreed on a stock law, and Judge Phelps agreed to put it in shape and hand it in to the RECORDER for rendition. I have looked for it in vain ever since. I fear the Judge intends to trick the Committee or the people. BENJ. RICE,

One of the Committee.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Business was dull last week—not much sale for anything except picnic tickets and beer. There wasn't much ado over the 4th. Most everybody went to the woods to celebrate it.

The reports in regard to the wheat crop in Kentucky are very flattering, both as to quantity and quality. The offerings have been of unusual excellence. It is decidedly the best crop that has been raised for seven years, and some say the best ever raised in Kentucky. The yield is estimated at about eight million bushels. The average price is $1 per bushel at the country depots. Reports from other parts of the country are very good. There was a fair yield of barley, but the crop was damaged considerably by the wet weather. The market is dull at 50@55c.

Oats dull; prices 40@60c.

Corn was a little more brisk; mixed, in the ear, in bulk, 44@45c.; choice shelled, delivered in sacks, 54@55c.

The prices for hay remain unchanged.

The tobacco market was steady, the prices being well sustained; the sales for the week were about 275 hhds.; the sales for the month of June were about 1,000 hhds. Prices ranged for leaf from $8 to $11, and for lug from $2 to $5, and for lug and leaf from $4 to $8 50.

The horse and mule market was flat. There were none to be had, and the demand was good, too. There were no good horses offered. Good plugs, of which there were 35 sold at auction, brought $40@75. There was a good demand for mules, but none in the market.

Cattle advanced about a quarter the last of the week. Good shippers brought $5 25@5 75; choice butchering, $4@4 75; common to good, $2@3 75.

The sheep market was dull; old sheep brought $3@4; lambs, 4@5½c.

Choice hogs brought $4 25@4 75; good to fair, $3 75@4. The receipts for the week were as follows: Cattle, 1,200; hogs, 2,000; sheep and lambs, 5,100.

Eggs remain at 8c.

Butter—Common to good country, 10@12c.; choice table, 14@15c.

Feathers—Prime goose, 42@44c.; mixed lots, 27@33c.

The prices of wool are steady at 16@20c.; black wool, 18@25c.; wool in grease, 26@28c.; tub-washed, 37½@40c.

Young chickens are worth $1 50@2 25 per dozen; old ones are scarce at $2 50@2 75 per dozen.

Plenty of potatoes and and slow sales; dull at $2@2 50 per brl. The onion market is full, with slight demand at $1 75@2 per brl. cabbages are very fine, and no demand for shipping; they bring 40@50c. per brl.; beets dull at 50c. per brl.; no demand for peas at 75c. per brl.; roasting-ears have appeared and brought $1 per brl.; tomatoes are scarce and demand strong at $4@5 per bushel; cucumbers bring 25@35c. per dozen.

Choice picked apples, $2@2 50 per brl., ready sale; scrubs can be had at any price, from 25c. to 75c. per brl., a peck of scrubs in a barrel of good apples will injure the sale to the amount of at least $1; peaches are scarce and the demand good at $4 50@5 00 per bushel; blackberries are in good demand at $4 75@5 25 per stand; raspberries scarce at $6 50@7 per stand; good cherries, $9 per stand; gooseberries, $2 50 per stand; large red plums are worth $3 per bushel; watermelons have made their appearance, and are abundant at 15 to 20 cents all round for a car load. NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Rabbit Hash.

Everything is quiet on the border since the Electoral Commission met at Burlington. We are now for Col. Henderson and the "Old Dispensation." Rouse and Conner each yet have one little toe on Henderson's platform. They could not be primed in, so they would not be primed off and now they will fight it out on that line till fakes all summer.

The wheat and rye harvest is about completed. Should the straw be any sign light bread will be cheap, and we shall be very thankful. You see it was kinder like this in our earlier days when we put in six days in the week on cornbread and consequently we don't hanker after it much now.

O. F. Craig's team was frightened by the Steamer Sherly, one day last week, and ran off, making a total wreck of his wagon and injuring one of the horses. Mr. Craig escaped unhurt.

Why don't we hear from S. B. H., of Texas. We are little afraid these early vegetables have not agreed with him.

Mr. Henry Goss was in town on the 30th ult., for the first time since last fall. We are sorry to learn he has not been so well since his visit.

Dr. Cowen reports Mr. Frank Smith very sick. I DON'T WANT ANY MORE.

M. S. Swetnam has his stock of goods advertised for sale.....James Varner sold his stock of groceries last week and also his house and lot. J. P. Snyder purchased them for $400.....Two Jehues from Walton, on last Sunday, were driving through town at a more rapid rate than the law allows, when they ran into a wagon and were upset. The town marshal arrested them and they gave bail for their appearance in the Police Court on Monday by putting up their "dickers." Monday they appeared by attorney, and were each fined $5 and costs.....Our man Starbuck is still missing.....Miss Eva Philips, of Madison, Ind., Miss Nannie Herne, Miss Lizzie Lindsey and Miss Lida Hayes, of Covington, Miss Martin, of Cincinnati, and Miss Hunt, of Lebanon, Ohio, were visiting the Misses Hoggins last week. We never before saw so much sweetness concentrated in one place. All the bees and bachelors in the neighborhood became interested.....Miss Mattie Roberts and Miss Stella Oneil, of Verona, were visiting Miss Allie Stephens last week..... The farmers are busy harvesting. They report wheat, rye and oats a first rate crop. Potatoes are doing well—corn generally very poor...Two of the belles of this neighborhood, Miss Fannie Stephens and Miss Jennie Tanner, while out riding a few days since, jumped from the wagon on account of the horse's being frightened, and they are both suffering from dislocated ankles. They hope to be able to dance at the Granger's picnic on the 4th of August.....Quite a number of the Grangers from the southern end of the county came down this far on their way to the Grange picnic only to find it had been postponed which, they would have known a week since had they been taking the RECORDER. USO

Petersburg.

Last Saturday we did it again. This time Rouse and Conner had a rest, and Wingate and Terrill entertained the boys. Political excitement has reached that pitch here that the simple fact that a school trustee was to be elected developed the vim of the party as much as a Presidential election would ordinarily excite us. All the available widows and orphans were voted, and the result is that J. E. Terrill is elected to fill an office for one year, in which there is no salary, and nineteen odd curses for each expression of gratitude. Score, 42 to 54.

In view of the political annoyances, counsel says keep cool, but how can we with the mercury daily kicking the beam at 98 in the shade.

Some query wants to know, you know, in last week's paper, what the deuce the Committee meant by pro rata &c.? Why don't some enterprising member of that Committee distinguish himself and make his political fortune by answering the question? It is, perhaps, the first of a thousand that may yet be asked, and it might be satisfactory to the questioner to be told that a poor ratus is a rat that a cat wouldn't catch.

Told you so! The lifting of that magic healing plaster by the convention, last week, took the epidermis off about one-half the Democratic party; but never mind, August is not far off and then—

The fly season is in its highest prosperity, and now the good housekeepers confidently assure each other that the aforesaid vermiants are worse this year than ever, and that each home has more of them than any of the neighbors. Bro. Billings says, "the is an amoosin cuss," and it is also equally "amoosin" to hear the dear old girls brag on their large crop of flies.

Business is business, as the fox said to the hen, and it is time for us to announce the farmers of this part of Eden have about finished their harvest, and it might be safe to say that the crop, which is only a light one, was well saved, notwithstanding the "storms it had to stand."

Mr. Morgan Davis is in our midst once more for a short stay.....Don Juan, of Plattsburg, was in town last Saturday. He puts on airs quite becoming to citizens of so magnificent a metropolis.

We expect a lively time at the August election. There are so many names on the regular ticket, a special election of two magistrates, and then the stock law Grangers propose to have us instruct the Senator and Representative how to make laws to suit us. It is a good thing that we have a local option law in force, or our brains might become addled on important subjects.

OLD TIMES.

There's a beautiful song on the slumberous air
That drifts through the valley of dreams,
It comes from a clime where the roses were,
And a tuneful heart, and bright, brown hair
That waved in the morning beams.

Soft eyes of azure, and eyes of brown,
And snow-white foreheads are there;
A glimmering cross and glittering crown,
A thorny bed and a couch of down,
Lost hopes and leaflets of prayer.

A rosy leaf in a dimpled hand,
A ring and plighted vow;
Three golden rings on a broken hand,
A tiny track on the snow-white sand,
A tear and a stainless brow.

There's a tincture of grief to that beautiful song
That sobs on the summer air,
And loneliness felt in the festive throng
Sinks down in the soul as it trembles along
From a clime where the roses are.

We heard it first at the dawn of the day,
And it mingled with the matin chimes;
But years have distanced the beautiful day,
And its melody floweth from far away,
And we call it now "Old Times."

—Tinsley's Magazine.

Rules for Making Good Bread.

Dr. Holbrook gives to the readers of that excellent publication, the New York Weekly Sun, some useful suggestions on the important subject of bread making, which we transfer to our columns. We know that while many of our fair readers need no such advice, there are others who may profitably turn their attention to learning how to make good bread. Without good bread in the household, no matter how good the meal in other respects, the housewife is exposed to severe criticism. Indeed, the quality of the bread, with few exceptions, may be looked on as an index to the good or bad management, and industry, or the absence of it, in the household.

"With good flour, a good oven, and a good, sensible, interested cook, we can be pretty sure of good, wholesome bread. Yeast bread is considered the standard bread, and is, perhaps, more generally found on every table than any other kind. Hence it is important to know how to make good, sweet, wholesome yeast bread. Good flour is the first indispensable; then good, lively yeast, either yeast cakes or bottled; the former is preferable in all respects. Then, of course, there must be the proper materials to work with. A bread bowl or pan (the pan is the easiest kept clean); a stone or earthen jar for setting the sponge; a sieve (flour should always be sifted before making bread of any kind; first, to be sure that it is perfectly clean; second, sifting enlivens and aerates the flour, and makes both mixing and rising easier and quicker); a clean white cloth to cover the dough, and a woolen blanket to keep the dough of even temperature while rising; baking pans, large and shallow; a large, strong spoon for stirring and a little melted suet or fresh butter for oiling the pans (never use poor butter). If you want shortening, rich milk or cream scalded and cooled will answer the purpose and be most wholesome. But thorough kneading is better still, and should always be done effectually. Scalding a portion of the flour makes a sweeter bread and speeds the work. Water, milk or butter—milk may be poured boiling hot on a quart or two of the flour, stirring well and cooling to a moderate temperature before adding the yeast—this makes the sponge. Scalded flour always makes a little darker bread, unless we use buttermilk, which makes a rich, creamy, white bread. Yeast is fermented flour or meal—the first stages of decomposition or decay.

"Understanding this, every baker will comprehend the necessity of regulating the extent of the fermentation with the greatest care; for a sponge or bread fermented or 'raised' too long is decomposing, spoiling—actually rotting! This is the language of an experienced English baker to us only a few days ago, during a talk about the delicate, foamy loaves, 'yeasted to death,' which so many families are eating and calling 'the staff of life,' quite discarding the firm, sweet, substantial, homemade loaf which our mothers and grandmothers kneaded with their own skilled hands. Bread making should stand at the head of domestic accomplishments, since the health and happiness of the family depend incalculably upon good bread. There comes a time in every true, thoughtful woman's experience when she is glad she can make nice, sweet loaves, free from soda, alum and other injurious ingredients, or an earnest regret that she neglected, or was so unfortunate as not to have been taught, at least what are the requisites of good bread making."

How to Tell When the Weather is Hot.

When you see a greasy looking Alabama refugee, as black as the ace of spades, standing in the shade of a cotton seed pile, his stomach full of river water, and eating a peck of peanuts, with the perspiration pouring off him like he had just come out of the river, and dust coming out of both his ears, you may conclude it is not only dry on the levee, but it's hot.—Vicksburg Commercial.

To drive away water bugs and red ants, sprinkle the floor with pulverized borax, leaving a place for them to get out. To kill them, mix borax with sugar, so they will eat it. For ants or other vermin, wash the shelves with a solution of borax; then sprinkle the same with borax mixed with sugar.

The Farmers' Work for 1877.

While the commercial columns of the daily journals, by repeated announcements of failures of all dimensions among merchants and manufacturers, excite gloomy feelings and apprehensions in the public mind in respect to the continuance of hard times, comparatively brief and infrequent mention is made of the movements of what may be termed the Farmers' Grand Army of the Republic—a class which embraces much the larger part of the population of the Union, and "holds the fort" on nearly three million distinct and separate farms. It is a common remark that no news is good news. The daily press teems with reports of fires, floods, defalcations, bankruptcies, tornadoes, robberies and murders, in extenso, while the productive and peaceful operations of the country occupy far less space before the public eye, the most valuable results often eluding general notice. If, in scanning the field of trade for some omen of early relief from the existing financial pressure, we take notice of the agricultural division—the real wealth-producing force of the country—the observation will be cheering in the highest degree. While failures occur and depression exists among those who re-handle the fabrics and products of other men, the farmers are digging riches from the soil, and making a positive increase of national wealth.

In order to enable the reader to estimate at a glance the magnitude of this agricultural product, which is an annually increasing source of wealth, the following facts are presented from the census of 1870: The aggregate of all the farm products of the country seven years since was set down at two billion four hundred and forty-seven million, five hundred and thirty-eight thousand six hundred and fifty-eight dollars ($2,447,538,658)—a sum more than enough to wipe out the whole public debt. To give the value of a few leading items in detail: Animals slaughtered, $308,956,376; market garden products, 820,000,000; and orchard products, $47,000,000. While a few staples show the following yield: Wheat, 287,750,000 bushels; Indian corn, 761,000,000 bushels; oats, 282,000,000 bushels; cotton, 3,000,000 bales (about 1,000,000 short of the crop of 1875); 100,000,000 pounds of wool; 27,316,000 tons of hay; 262,732,000 pounds tobacco; 87,000 hogsheads sugar; 22,000,000 gallons syrup; 143,337,473 bushels Irish potatoes. It will be noticed that the foregoing items are confined to articles of actual necessity for the use of man and beast, which can not be dispensed with—at least until some corresponding articles are found to take their place. A great deal of this product is, of course, consumed by the farmers who produce it, but a large surplus still remains to be sold; the consumers are compelled to buy it; they are articles of actual necessity. Until trade statistics are more full and accurate, it will be impossible to say how much of the foregoing farm products were sold in market and paid for in money, but it is evident that a large portion of the crops and farm products reported in 1870, valued at over $2,400,000,000 were sold; they entered into open market, were exchanged for cash, paid debts, and formed the soul and body of domestic and foreign trade.

This grand process is repeated annually, without fail. Nature refuses to go into bankruptcy. Her banks never suspend, and drafts drawn upon her by industry are never dishonored. Despite the changes of the weather, the seasons manage to pay their notes without protest, even though the Western locust and Colorado beetle sometimes play the confidence game. The present year of 1877 will make a far better showing than 1870. The most favorable news from the crops pour in from North, South, East and West. The wheat crop, in all probability, will be much the largest, and perhaps the best, ever grown on this continent. It is not an exaggeration to estimate the fruits of the farmers' work for 1877 at the enormous total of three billions ($3,000,000,000) of dollars.

Here is a blaze of Nature's sunshine which adorns the cloud of hard times with a silver lining. The meat and grain crops alone will sum up not less than $1,000,000,000. People must eat, and these two great staples must be sold, and the proceeds of their sale flow through the channels of trade. The farmers have another advantage. While they have their peculiar trials and embarrassments, their percentage of bankruptcy and failure is very small—far smaller than that of any other department. The outlook of the year is encouraging, for the farmers stand solid.—Louisville Commercial.

Why Some People are Poor.

Silver spoons are used to scrape kettles; coffee, tea, pepper and spice are left open to stand and lose their strength. Potatoes in the cellar grow, and the sprouts are not removed until the potatoes become worthless. Brooms are never hung up and are spoiled. Nice handled knives are thrown into the water. The flour is sifted in a wasteful manner, and the bread pan is left with the dough sticking to it. Clothes are left on the line to whip to pieces in the wind. Tubs and barrels are left in the sun to dry and fall apart. Dried fruits are not taken care of in season, and become wormy. Rags, strings and paper are thrown into the fire. Meat, or bits of meat, vegetables bread and cold pudding sare thrown away, when they might be warmed steamed and served as good as new. Waste not, want not.

The Last Man.

What will become of the last man? Various theories that have been seriously maintained by scientific men are described in the Scientific American, and we summarize them:

1. The surface of the earth is steadily diminishing, elevated regions are being lowered, and seas are filling up. The land will at last be all submerged, and the last man will be starved or drowned.

2. The ice is gradually accumulating at the North Pole and melting away at the South Pole, the consequence of which will be an awful catastrophe when the earth's center of gravity suddenly changes. The last man will be drowned by the rush of waters.

3. The earth can not always escape a collision with a comet, and when the disaster comes there will be a mingling of air and cometary gas, causing an explosion. If the last man is not suffocated, he will be blown up.

4. There is a retarding medium in space, causing a gradual loss of velocity in the planets, and the earth, obeying the laws of gravitation, will get closer and closer to the sun. The last man will be sunstruck.

5. The amount of water on the earth is slowly diminishing, and simultaneously the air is losing in quantity. Finally, the earth will be an arid waste, like the moon. The last man will be suffocated.

6. Other suns have disappeared, and ours must, sooner or later, blaze up and disappear. The intense heat of the conflagration will kill every living thing on earth. The last man will be burned up.

7. The sun's fire will gradually burn out, and the temperature will cool. The earth's glacial zones will enlarge, driving our race toward the equator, until the habitable space will lessen to nothing. The last man will be frozen to death.

8. A gradual cooling of the earth will produce enormous fissures, like those seen in the moon. The surface will become extremely unstable, until the remnant of humanity will take refuge in caves. The last man will be crushed in his subterranean retreat.

9. The earth will at last separate into small fragments, leaving the people without any foothold. The last man will have a dreadful fall through space.

10. The tenth theory proving that there will be no last man at all, is thus expressed:

"Evolution does not necessarily imply progress, and possibly the race may have retrograded until the human being possesses the nature of the plant louse; such being the case, this single inhabitant will spontaneously produce posterity of both sexes."

The New Farms of 1876.

Does anyone know how many new farms were opened in the United States and Territories last year? how many new log cabins have been built? how many acres of virgin soil plowed up for the first time? It is not probable that anyone does know with exactness; but there is a little table in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, presented to Congress some time ago, which furnishes the material for approximately correct answer to these questions. During the year ending with June last, there were taken up under the homestead law 1,875,900 acres. New land taken up under the homestead act is for actual cultivation, and is generally taken in lots of 160 acres. It would appear, therefore, that more than 17,000 new farms were commenced last year under the homestead law alone. But this is not all. There were sold during the year 640,961 acres for cash, and 137,440 acres allotted on military land warrants. It is no doubt true that a portion of these 778,601 acres were bought or entered by others than actual settlers, by speculators or by persons who made investments of this nature for future purposes. It would be fair to estimate, however, that one-half of the 778,601 acres were purchased or entered for the purpose of immediate settlement or cultivation; and this calculation would give us 2,432 more new farms of 160 acres each. There were also 21,048 acres entered upon the Sioux and Chippewa half-breed strip and 607,984 acres taken up under the timber culture law. Leaving these two latter items out of the calculation, we have an aggregate of about 19,500 new farms commenced during the year. This means 19,500 new homes. In five years from now these 19,500 farms, under good management, ought to produce annually some 20,000,000 bushels of wheat, some 40,000,000 bushels of corn and some 400,000 head of cattle or swine, making provision more than enough to furnish meat and bread for New York City for a whole year.

Bound Not to Trust the South.

President Hayes is going South to see for himself. If he could go incog., we presume he might gain considerable valuable information, but what he will see and hear in a public tour will be so colored by its circumstances and surroundings that it will need a good deal of discounting. It is a good plan, however, for the Executive to take the journey. It will give the Southerners a chance to make some more good promises, which they will lose by going back on, and which seems to be about the only thing to be had from the South at present.—Lowell Courier.

NEWS FROM THE WAR.

Gaily the paper man
Touched his guitar,
While he was reading the
News from the war.
Singing, "You bet your boots
Now here'll be fun,
We don't care who it shoots,
War has begun."

He sang as how he knew,
Six months before,
There'd have to be a Eu-
Ropean war.
Now he was glad enough
That it had come,
And his heart laughed at the Roll of the drum.

But when the Czar, at last,
Arming his youth,

STRANGER THAN FICTION.

In the autumn of 1817, while the woods were bright with the variegated hues which follow the light touches of early frost, a mounted traveler was pursuing his way through a dark, broad, lonely forest in the western part of New York. He had ridden three miles since seeing a human habitation, and he had two to go before he could get sight of another. He was descending a hill into a gloomy looking valley, through which flowed a shallow, but swift running stream; and on reaching the water he permitted his thirsty beast to stop and drink.

At that moment a man came out from a cluster of bushes into the road, or horse-path, on the other side of the stream. This man was dressed like a hunter, and carried a rifle on his shoulder. In his appearance there was nothing that indicated hostility or wicked design. He was of medium size, compactly built, with intellectual features and a certain air of gentility—seeming rather as one abroad from a settlement for a day's sport than a professional hunter. All this the mounted traveler carefully noted as he crossed the stream to continue his journey, and when they came together a pleasant salutation was exchanged.

Fine weather for traveling, sir, replied the man with the gun.

And for hunting, also, I should suppose, smiled the other on the horse.

Yes, there is game enough, returned the other, but I am not a good hunter, and can only show one bear for my day's work thus far, and that is almost useless to me, because I have no means to take it away. I would willingly pay a dollar for the use of a horse like yours for a couple of hours. If you could spare five minutes or so I would like you to see the bear; it is only behind the bushes, some two hundred yards from here.

I will not only look at it, replied the traveler, dismounting and fastening his horse, but if not too heavy, I will take it along for you, seeing I am going your way.

The hunter thanked him in a most cordial manner, and then as if to make himself agreeable, and keeping up the conversation, inquired where the other was from, whither journeying, etc.; and learned in reply that the latter resided in Albany, was a merchant in good business, and was traveling part with a view for making an extensive land purchase, for future speculation.

Well, here we are, exclaimed the hunter, as the two men emerged from the dense thicket through which they had slowly forced their way into the open wood; and now I will show you as fine and fat a beast as you ever saw. Observe where I point my rifle.

He stepped back some eight feet, deliberately raised the piece to his eye and pointed the muzzle directly at the head of the traveler. There was a flash and a loud report, and the victim fell like a log, his face covered with blood. This might or might not have been the first crime committed by the man with the rifle. But as the traveler fell, the rifle slipped through his hand, and he shook violently from head to foot; yet he ran to his victim and hurriedly robbed him of his purse, pocket-book, a gold watch and chain, some curious seals, a diamond breast-pin and a diamond ring, which he fairly tore from his finger. Then he dragged the body into the thicket, picked up his rifle, plunged madly through the bushes to the road, mounted the traveler's horse and rode away from the awful scene.

We must now suppose a lapse of twenty years.

In the spring of 1837 there lived in the city of New York a banker and a millionaire whom we shall call Stephen Edwards. He owned a palatial mansion splendidly furnished in the very heart of the town, and he and his wife were among the leaders of the fashionable world. They had a beautiful daughter just turned to sweet sixteen, who was about to be married to a foreign nobleman, and great preparations were making for the happy event.

One day about this period, as the great banker was conversing with a gentleman from another city, who called to see him on business, he observed the latter turn suddenly pale and begin to tremble.

My dear sir, he said, in his usual tone of off-hand sympathy, what is the matter? Are you ill?

A little faint, sir, but nothing to cause alarm, replied the other hurriedly. I am subject to such spells. If you would be kind enough to excuse me for ten minutes or so, I will take a short walk and return in better condition.

In ten minutes he did return, reporting himself quite well, calmly proceeded to finish his business with the banker, and then respectfully took his leave.

It was perhaps a week after this, that one night the banker was sitting before the fire in his library, when a servant came in and presented him with a letter. He took it with a yawn, opened it in the most indolent and indifferent manner possible, but had not read a dozen words before he rose with a start, turned pale, and trembled so that the paper rattled. He finished the note—for it was rather a note than a letter—worked one hand nervously at his throat and with the other clasped his forehead and temples. For a minute for two he seemed to be choking into calmness by an iron will some terrible emotions, and he so far succeeded as to address the waiting servant in an ordinary tone.

James, he said, who gave you this letter?

A man, sir; he said he would wait for an answer.

Then I suppose he is waiting?

Yes, sir.

Soon there was a light tap at the door, and the banker said come in, in ordinary tone.

The servant opened the door, ushered in the stranger and immediately withdrew. The latter was verging on sixty, of rough appearance and coarse attire. He wore an old gray overcoat, buttoned to the throat, a pair of green goggles, and his whole dress was saturated with rain.

Take a seat, said the banker, pointing to a seat near the fire.

No, thank you, I'll stand, was the gruff reply. You got my letter, and of course you know my business, he added.

You allude to this, I suppose, returned the banker, producing the letter that had caused him so much perturbation.

Yes.

I do not understand it; you must have made a mistake.

No mistake at all. I was present twenty years ago, come the 10th of October, and saw you, Stephen Edwards, shoot the man, and if you go to deny it I'll have you in prison before morning. I have laid my plans and got everything sure, and if you go to playing innocent and refuse my terms, I'll take care to see that you die stretching hemp.

The banker, in spite of himself, turned pale, shuddered and staggered to a seat.

What do you want? he groaned.

A hundred thousand dollars—not one cent less.

I can not give it—it would ruin me.

Just as you say, rejoined the other, moving toward the door. You know what will follow if I go this way.

Oh, stay; you must not go yet, cried the man of crime, in terrible alarm.

He argued, urged, pleaded, implored for mercy at a less fearful cost. In vain. At last the banker—seeing ruin, disgrace and death before him if he refused—agreed to the terms. He also agreed to meet the stranger, with the required sum, on the following night in front of St. Paul's church. Both were punctual to the fixed time, and bills and checks to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars changed hands.

A month later there was a terrible run on the bank of which Stephen Edwards was the principal owner. It was soon broken and closed. Then the Sheriff was set to work by eager creditors, and all the property of the late millionaire was seized and sold, leaving him a beggar, and the just claims unsatisfied. Fashionable friends deserted the family, and the proud nobleman refused the hand of a ruined banker's daughter.

In the very midst of this disgrace and tribulation Stephen Edwards encountered the man who turned so pale, and became so agitated in his presence a short time before.

I rather think you do not know me, sir, said the gentleman with a formal bow.

Your face seems somewhat familiar, but yet I can not place you, returned Edwards.

Permit me to bring myself to your recollection, then, as I wish you to know me. A little more than six weeks ago I was talking to you on business, and you observed that I turned deathly pale, and became agitated?

Ah, yes, I remember you now.

Let me tell you why I was thus affected. My eyes had chanced upon a curious watch-seal, which had belonged to a merchant named Sydney, who was shot in the western part of the State some twenty years ago, and looking at your features closely I knew you to be the villian who perpetrated the foul deed.

Merciful God! exclaimed the banker, with blanched face and quaking form.

Yes, I knew you, pursued the other, and a week later I disguised myself and had an interview with you in your mansion. You remember that, of course?

But, gasped the trembling wretch, did not I pay you your own price to keep my fatal secret?

Yes, and with that very money and what other I could command, I was enabled to buy up enough of your own bills to make that run upon your bank which broke it and forced ruin upon you.

And what would you do, now that I am ruined? inquired the other with the deadly calmness of desperation.

Now that I have had my revenge, I want you to know that I myself am the man you attempted to murder and rob. I am Philip Sydney. Behold the scar where the ball struck and glanced, and he lifted his hat and showed it.

God be praised! ejaculated the other. God be praised that you are still living, and unable to restrain his emotions he burst into tears. Oh, sir, you have taken a load off my conscience—a weight from my soul. Though poverty, beggary, disgrace and death stare me in the face, I am happy of the knowledge that I am not guilty of murder—happier than I have been for twenty years with all the luxurious surroundings of wealth. It was my first and last crime, and I have never been able to tell how I was tempted on that fearful occasion. Now, sir, do with me what you will—only I pray you, be merciful to my innocent family.

I forgive you, returned the other, extending his hand. I forgive you. You have been fearfully punished already. And as God has seen proper to preserve us both together, let us hope it is our future salvation, and let us endeavor to live so as to deserve the blessings we receive. I will restore you enough to place you and your family above want; and for the rest, I trust we shall soon have to render an account of our stewardship in another world.

Philip Sydney kept his word, and with a fresh start in the world, and now an easy conscience, the still enterprising Stephen Edwards accumulated another respectable fortune, much of which he spent in charity.

Philip Sydney died in 1848, and Stephen Edwards in 1851.

Is not truth indeed strange—stranger than fiction?

Another New Swindle.

The following item is going the rounds of our exchanges: Another new swindle has been developed, the modus operandi of which is as follows: A pack peddler calls at a house with a fine lot of articles which he offers at a ruinous sacrifices. He makes a sale and goes on his way. The next day two men drive up to the house with a printed bill, giving an account of the robbery of a certain store. They claim the goods, and usually bulldoze the purchaser into giving them up. It would be well for newspapers throughout the State to give these swindlers the benefit of a gratuitous advertisement, so as to guard their readers against such impostors. People who do not read the papers would then be the only sufferers—and this class, it may be added, are generally the ones who are taken in by the plausible rascals.

A COUNTRY girl once went to the city to pay a visit to one of her old and best friends. This friend was married to a rich city merchant, and was a leader of fashion. In the city etiquette, of course, the visitor was verdant and made numerous mistakes. Her friend wished to initiate her into the "mysteries," and as they were going to a large ball, gave her the following instructions, viz.: "Eat only one small cake and one saucer of icecream, and when your attendant presses you to take more, answer that you have masticated a sufficiency, and more would be superfluity." Things went on smoothly until her attendant asked her to take more refreshments, when to the horror of her friend and amusement of the company, she answered in a loud voice, "I have evaporated insufficiently, and more would go flippity-floppity."

General Howard encountered about three hundred Indians on the 12th inst. The fight lasted seven hours when night came on and the action was checked till next morning, when it was renewed, and after a severe conflict the savages retired. The accounts of the large wheat crop in this State still come in. The large crop is not confined to any particular localities, but is general. Threshing has commenced, and we learn from our exchanges that in some places the yield reaches thirty-five bushels per acre. The price of wheat has declined, and without an unexpected change it will continue its downward course several cents more on the bushel. The partial failure of the wheat crop in California for a time created some degree, of alarm but the deficit in that country will be completely overcome by the bountiful harvest in the other States.

The following from the Deadwood correspondent to the N. Y. Herald is an antidote for the "Black Hills fever." This correspondent says:

There are now at least 10,000 people in the Hills who are without employment, and many thousands more who are only making expenses. Those who came in here last year have "staked off" every foot of ground where there is any prospect of mineral deposit. From forty to fifty thousand pilgrims have already been here and gone back home again. They were almost universally disappointed in their expectations. The Black Hills is no place for a man to live in unless he is making money. There are hundreds of men now in the Black Hills who are on the verge of starvation, and they can get no employment at any price, for the simple reason that the Hills are swarming with men asking for work. Several suicides have occurred here lately; one of them, Walter Whitely, took his own life rather than starve to death. This is the unvarnished truth.

The Cincinnati merchants gave a delegation of merchants from Charleston, South Carolina, a grand reception on Wednesday. The Southern Road will be in operation in the course of time, hence this manifestation of friendship. The trade from that section will be worth considerable to Porkopolis if they can command it.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

St. Louis, Mo., July 14, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

It is said that the man who invented sleep is a good man, and some modern philosopher has said that the man who invented rest was both a great and a good man. If the latter proposition be true, you may set your correspondent down as being on the road to greatness, as he gave your readers a rest last week, by not boring them with a communication. We really like rest, and we have always a fondness for sleep, but the man that invented work and early rising, in our judgment, intended to trouble the human family with pains and sorrows. You, as well as the writer, have heard a great deal in you lifetime, from the pulpit, from the rostrum and from the babbling politician about the dignity of labor. It is all a mistake. The man, be he layman, preacher or politician, that talks about the dignity of labor, has not read the Bible correctly. If you will read carefully what the Book of Books says on that subject, you will find that labor was put upon man as a curse, not as a species of dignity, and mankind, for the last six thousand years, has been trying to get away from it, and will continue to get away from it to the end of the new dispensation. If this proposition be not true, why is the world filled with so many labor-saving machines? When man made his debut in this world everything was lovely, not a sigh or a blow was necessary for his sustenance; he was only to dress and keep in order the things that were prepared for his happiness and glory. But when he stepped aside from the Creator of all things, with a desire to become as wise as He, then came labor, toil and pain, and we have only to refer to the history of the human family for the past six thousand years for additional proof of this proposition. The man then that invents a labor-saving machine, or gives rest to any portion of the human family is a benefactor. We lent our mite last week by giving rest to your readers in withholding our pen. Should the weather become much hotter, we may, some of these days, become so generous as to lay our pen down, and say: "Rest, reader, rest, until the weather becomes more pleasant." The thermometer with us last week, as well as several days this week, was up among the nineties, and many a poor pilgrim with us, as well as the writer, seemed to long for a cool shady rill, or a place where the weary are at rest.

Had we written last week, it would have been the same old story of dull times, and man's longing disposition for rest, rest, as suicides were of daily occurrence, too frequent, indeed, for us to narrate in detail. We will, however, inform you and your many readers that our bridge authorities have put an end to such business on their lines, by having their walks guarded from shore to shore, so that if a fellow now-a-days wishes to shuffle off the mortal coil and make a success of it, he will have to select a more propitious spot than the span across the Father of Waters.

Quite a goodly number of our citizens were thrown into a furor on Thursday, last by the failure of the German Bank, an institution of not an overly large capital, but one patronized generally by a large number of persons of small means. The bank has only $200,000 capital and owes to depositors about the same amount, but the event created three times the excitement as that of the National Bank of Mo., as quite a number had all their worldly worth in it, and many, doubtless, were years accumulating what they had there. It is believed depositors will, in course of time, get what is due them, but it is said stockholders will come out without a cent on their investment. On Saturday, last Mr. S. H. Hind, a wealthy Commission Merchant, of London, England, brought suit against the Second National Bank, of this city, for $63,365 advanced I. H. Livingston & Co., cotton shippers of this city, who failed some time last fall. Mr. Hind charges in his declaration that in the year of 1876 the said Livingston visited London, bearing letters of Second National Bank, written by E. D. Jones, Vice-President of the bank, stating that he (Jones) was a member of the firm of I. H. Livingston & Co., and that the firm was worth from one hundred to two hundred thousand dollars. The declaration states that upon said recommendation he (Hind) entered into an agreement with said Livingston to honor all their drafts drawn against shipments of cotton to him, and that they (Livingston & Jones) were itsolvent at the time said letters were given, as well as now, and that the Second National Bank owes him the amount sued for, thats mount being advanced said firm on said letters &c. The case is creating considerable comment in legal and commercial circles, the bank denying that the action of its Vice-President in recommendations is the action of the bank. It can not be denied but what there are some very nice points in the suit and the writer will not just now offer a decision therein. As bank and insurance company failures are of such frequent occurrence, we like to forgot to state that the bank of Pike County, Missouri, suspended on Wednesday last. The bank organized about five years ago with an authorized capital of $400,000—only $50,000 of which had been paid up. The amount due to depositors is not stated, but it is currently reported that the failure of the bank was caused by the cashier using the funds of same in wild and reckless speculations. He is charged as using at various times sums ranging from $50,000 to $100,000, and by false entries kept his transactions from the directory.

Committees of investigation have, this week, been investigating the affairs of the Commereial Insurance Company, also the St. Louis Mutual, and Columbia Life Insurance Company—the two latter being consolidated about a year ago. Things gloomy and peculiar (nothing grand) have been discovered in all three, and it really looks as if the end is not yet. In the former Company it appears that two of the Directors have used about $90,000 of the Company's funds, leaving as collaterals, some mining stock supposed to be worth about three cents on the dollar, and one of the aforesaid gentleman was at the same time drawing a salary of $10,000 per annum for his services as President. In the two Life Insurance Companies, $160,000 has disappeared mysteriously, but after weeks of investigation it was traced to two of the Directors, but they, as yet, have not told what they did with it, and it is probable that we will know fully the result of Mr. Hayes' Southern policy before they do fully post the public as to the whereabouts of that neat little sum. Perhaps, in course of time, they will be able to respond in the language of the late James Fisk, jr.: "Gone where the Woodbine twineth."

While we are on the subject we may as well say, some half a dozen or so of our legal profession are reaping a rich harvest out of the misfortunes of the failing banks and Insurance Companies. It appeared in the investigation the other day that the St. Louis Mutual Insurance Company had paid the firm of Hill & Bowman, attorneys at law, the sum of $2,500 for an opinion which was adverse to the interests of the Company; and only a short time thereafter the same Company paid the same Bowman $900 for an opinion that was directly the opposite of the other. But our time and your space would not permit us to go into a bare intimation of the crookedness unveiled already, in only a partial investigation of the affairs of just one Company, and as there are three others yet to be looked into, we will drop this part of our subject until a more propitious season. We may, however, say before we quit, the way matters look at this time, before the investigations are fully concluded, it would not surprise us in the least if some two or three insurance men and fully as many attorneys at law will have an opportunity to learn a trade at Jefferson City, at least I. X. Speck says so.

New wheat is now beginning to come in freely, receipts ranging from 40,000 to 70,000 bushels per day the week through, and we never knew the berry of better quality, and what is the strangest feature of all, our white wheat, this year, seems to be better than our red. For years, our millers have pronounced our May red the choice wheat of the land, but the berry of the white this year is of such superior quality, we are rather inclined to the opinion that before the season is concluded our white will take the front rank in price and quality. Prices are declining so rapidly, and as but little of our new has gone on grade, as yet, accurate quotations can not be given, but we may say market ranges in price from 81 to 81 48 per bushel as per quality. We may also add that the prices of corn and rye are rapidly on the decline. We quote corn, 48@49c. for white; 45@46c. for No. 2; 42@43c for rejected; 38@39e for no grade. Rye, 45@46c. for new; 60@61c for No. 2 old; 52@55c. for old rejected.

Our letter is already suffieiently long, if not too long, but before we close, as an item of interest to your readers of the farming districts, we will state the stock of old grain in store at the various grain marts throughout the United States, July 7th, this day a week ago, as reported by telegraph were as follows, viz.:

Wheat, 2,333,753 bushels; corn, 9,032,851 bushels. From this you will perceive the stock of wheat is unprecedently light, but the stock of corn, considering that the farmers are now in the midst of their busiest season with more or less corn to market, we may reasonably conclude that we will not have to go to Egypt for corn this year. Yours truly, Bob A. Long.

—The Louisville News says: Good times ought to come back to Kentucky before a great while. The agricultural interests of a State uniformly afford a reliable index to the condition of the people, and judging by this fact, the people of this State are bound to be prosperous. It is conceded that the crops of Kentucky never were more promising of a bountiful yield than now. The rye, corn, barley and wheat indicate unprecedented harvests. It is believed, too, that the large crops, now growing and being gathered, will find an ample market in the course of the next ten months. The consequence will be that a vast volume of money will be turned into the State. Times will be made easier. People will be able to pay their debts. The merchants will have an increased number of customers, and thus, through the prolific agency of Nature, a sure measure of relief will be insured to the country. At any rate, so blessed are the agriculturists of Kentucky that no fear need be felt but that the people of the State will have plenty and to spare.

—Extensive preparations are being made in Scott County for the transportation of 700 negroes, who will leave there in September for Kansas.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

This song will surely be admired by everybody. Price, 40 cents per copy; can be had from any music dealer or from the publisher, F. W. Helmick, 50 West Fourth street, Cincinnati, O.

Does Boone County Need a Work-House?

It has been repeatedly suggested that this county needs a Work-house, in which to confine offenders who are lodged in jail to pay fines at the county's expense. That having an able-bodied man confined in jail and allowed $2 for each day's confinement, and at the same time pay a Jailer sixty cents a day for keeping the prisoner, is an imposition on the tax payers no one will deny; but while trying to remedy this and relieve the county of the burden, there is some danger of investing in another forty-eight hundred dollar elephant. Building a Work-house is one thing, but making it pay its way is entirely another. If a Work-house is a paying institution, there must be persons to work, and if there are hands to work, one or more guards will be required to keep them at work. Now, if it can be demonstrated that the proceeds arising from the work done in the Work-house will reduce the expense of keeping such prisoners as will be put therein, then we say build one. There is but one class of work there is any probability of being done should a Work-house be constructed, and that is breaking stone. It would be the height of folly to invest in an outfit for conducting any other work. The class of persons confined in jail are generally without any trade, and nothing but the simplest class of work, if any, can be made profitable. We are all aware that the most of the time the jail contains three or four prisoners. It now contains five, and out of that number there are but two who could be put to work in a Work-house, the other three being charged with felony, and the law allowing none worked except those tried and found guilty of a misdemeanor. During the past year there have been several confined for short periods for misdemeanors, but had they been put to work they would have remained as long again to pay their fines, they being allowed but one dollar for each day's work. The cost for keeping would have been doubled and an additional cost for a guard added, unless they had been anchored with ball and chain. The law authorizing the building of Work-houses allows the County Court to hire the prisoners to any person who will give bond stipulating that the prisoner shall be provided with proper food and lodging. There are but few persons who would be willing to obligate themselves in this manner, when it is such an easy matter to obtain all the help they desire without it. Unless the county has a Work-house the County Court has no authority to hire out persons found guilty of misdemeanors. A Work-house located at some point where it would cost but little to keep it supplied with stone, which when broken could be sold to some turnpike road, might possibly be made self-sustaining, provided there were four or five prisoners kept at work all the time. The law provides that two or more counties can unite and build a Work-house, to be used as a joint concern. This is the only way it can be made profitable. Let two or three counties agree upon some point most convenient for all concerned, and there erect the buildings, and send all their misdemeanor convicts in, and probably the number will be sufficient to make a self-supporting prison.

The above was put in type for last week before the escape of the prisoners. It still serves our purpose though.

LAST Thursday night, about 9 o'clock, Mr. Cowen, having locked Percival and Goss in the upper room of the jail, was requested by the negroes in the lower room to bring them some water. Uncle Sam, always ready to afford as much comfort as possible for the unfortunate ones placed in his care, went home and got a bucket of fresh water, and returned to the jail. His daughter, Miss Annie, accompanied him, there being no men about the house. No sooner was the door unlocked and opened than, in accordance with a prearranged plan, the two negroes made a leap for the street, closely followed by a white prisoner, pushing Mr. Cowen down and running over him. Miss Annie gave the alarm and a crowd was collected in a few seconds, but the three prisoners had disappeared in the darkness and taken leg bail. There was considerable excitement over the daring escape. Since the present jail has been in use one negro has been taken out and hanged, and four negroes and two white men have escaped. One of the white men was recaptured. This is better than the old jail ever did in the same length of time.

LAST Thursday Wm. Brown, a negro man who lives on the Widow Christie farm, while under the influence of whisky and in a rage, shot and seriously wounded his wife. Brown, his wife and another negro woman had been to Cincinnati that day, and were near home when the shooting was done. Brown was arrested and committed to jail, from whence he was taken, Saturday morning, to Florence and tried before Judge Yager. The trial resulted in Brown's being committed to jail in default of $500 bail. Green for Commonwealth, and G. G. Hughes for defense.

FROM the Madisonian, published at Virginia City, Montana, we take the following:

In this issue of the Madisonian will be found the professional card of Dr. Mc. H. Raymond, who has opened consultation rooms at the office formerly occupied by Col. Bullaway, between Butler's jewelry store and the Metropolitan Meat Market, and is prepared to attend to the needs of the community for medical assistance. Dr. Raymond stands high in his profession, and his permanent location among us adds a valuable acquisition to the medical fraternity of the city.

We wish the Doctor success in his new field of labor.

A FRACTION with 29,237,618,164,801,438 for a numerator and 62,870,108,093,994,810 for a denominator, expresses what we would call a "wee bit" of anything, yet a very accurate gentleman and a delegate to the late convention has strolled through the depths of mathematics till he has discovered the above infinitely small fraction, and avers it expresses, exactly, Mr. Rouse's majority in the late convention.

BOONE'S quota of Collins' History of Kentucky has arrived, and is now in the possession of the School Commissioner and ready for distribution. It will be remembered that the author of this book obtained an act of the Legislature requiring the State to furnish each school district one copy of said history. For a time it was thought the law for the benefit of Collins, for such it is, was unconstitutional, and so it was taken to the Court of Appeals, where it was pronounced valid, and Mr. Collins is now forcing into every county in the State one of his books for each district, whether they want it or not. It was thought that providing each district with one copy would serve to introduce the book in the schools, and their use would become universal.

A Teaspoonful of Interrogations.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

According to promise, we send you the following questions. Some of your many readers may be somewhat wonder-struck on perusing them, but they should not be when considering that they bear upon a subject of the utmost moment to man:

Does not justice require of us obedience to the law of God?

Will not justice be defeated if universal obedience be not rendered to the law?

How can they fulfill the law of God (which is a law of love) who are rendered endlessly miserable?

How can justice require the obedience of the sinner, and at the same time the endless punishment and disobedience of him?

As God has commanded us to overcome evil with good, will He not use the same?

Hoping to receive information relative to the above, we subscribe ourselves, affectionately, A SEEKER FOR TRUTH.

James L. Henderson's Platform.

In order that all may know his position, and to save time and expense in canvassing the county, Jas. L. Henderson announces the following as his platform:

I am in favor of the old laws that we have always had, under the old fathers and citizens of this county; they are the fathers and mothers of the county, and we would not wish to take the means they have to keep up the public highways.

I am in favor of the licensing of places for the sale of liquor, as a license law produces a revenue to the State, thereby reducing the taxation of the farmer.

I am opposed to the high tolls on turnpikes, and in favor of legislation looking to the reduction of the same.

I am opposed to the dog law as it now stands, and in favor of allowing every person to have as many dogs as he likes untaxed.

I am opposed to the stock law, and in favor of a law making trespassing stock responsible for all damages by them done.

I am opposed to the present school law, and in favor of handing in Boone County to the State as a pauper county, and letting every man do his own educating.

A Proposed Stock Law.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Where is the stock law Judge Phelps was to draw out for us Grangers to vote on? I have not seen it. If he don't draw it up in detail before noon Monday, then, as a substitute for his law, I submit this and order a vote on it:

SECTION 1. First and second sections of old stock law repealed, because unconstitutional, and therefore void and dead; yet they are very vital and venomous.

§ 2. Thou shalt not steal nor lie (before men or out loud).—(Moses.)

§ 3. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's mule, nor his mule colt, nor his cattle, nor anything that he hath that is subject to a school or dog tax. If you do, you are burnt.

§ 4. Thou shalt take a stray cattle home and then (Moses) post it.

§ 5. Thou shalt help a neighbor's ox to bear his load, and not steal it, if it be too heavy to carry or too big to hide. Prudence is a virtue.

§ 6. If a neighbor's cattle eat up a vineyard, a cornfield, or any other big piece of earth not belonging to the cattle, then the neighbor shall build a fence horse high, bull strong and pig tight, so there may be no lawsuits in the land.

§ 7. If a bad ox gore a good ox, then he that gored shall himself be double gored (as by ladies' fashion plate 77). Eye for eye, tooth for tooth.

§ 8. Dogs are property, and like other property ought to be taxed till they die, save one to a household. Tax the surplus dog till he die. (And what of the fox-hound?) This tax is for the common schools of the red fox counties, where one fox is of more value than 5 babies, 10 Bibles, 20 sheep and 100 acres of land.

§ 9. This law to apply only to Gunpowder, Big Bone and Mudlick creeks.

The rest of the county, being a waste, howling wilderness, is against it, while the creeks are clamorous for it. I want them to pay me for this. Creek boys, now shell out for your servant.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Although last week was given up by the citizens generally to amusements, and especially by the Germans, business has been very good and the produce market firm, with no material change since my last report.

There was a good demand for horses and mules, but none on the market of any kind or at any price. There were not over 10 or 15 sold at auction.

The demand for cattle was good, with no shippers in the market. Extra shippers would bring 5¼@5¾c, medium to fair, 3¼@4¼c; common, 2@3¼c. This is an advance of 75 cents per 100 on good stock over last week.

Hogs—The demand was good at $4 50@4 80 for choice, and for common to fair, $4@4 35.

Sheep and Lambs—The market was rather still. Good sheep sold from 3c. to 4c. Lambs: common to choice brought 2¼@5c.

Receipts for the week—Cattle, 780; hogs, 3,000; sheep and lambs, 5,875.

The tobacco market was slow this week, prices steady, with no material change from last report. The sales for the week were as follows: Louisville House, 286 hhds.; Pickett, 253; Ninth-street House, 217; Farmers' House, 171; Kentucky Tobacco Association, 133; Planters' House, 96; The Boone House, 90; and the Gilbert House, 39.

The poultry market was steady, with a slight advance in prices.

Choice table butter, 15@18c; common to good, 10@12½c.

Eggs remain steady at 8c.

Young chickens, $2 50; old ones, $2 75 per dozen.

The vegetable market remains unchanged, except the slight decline in potatoes, which are selling from $1 25 to $2 per barrel.

Choice apples are a little scarce, and bring from $1 50 to $2 per brl. Peaches are worth $3 to $5 per bushel. Sugar-pears, $3 per brl. Choke pears, $2. Bellflowers, $4 to $5. Large red plums, $5 per stand. Blackberries, $3 50@4 per stand.

MATHEMATICIANS IN THE FIELD.

"Justice" Outfigured.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

In the last issue of the RECORDER I noticed what was supposed to be a solution of the late problem arising from the conventional trouble, signed "Justice," which is calculated, I think, to mislead the mediocre or inattentive observer, from the fact that friend "Justice" says he is a graduate in all branches of mathematics, from mere arithmetic to calculus, which might create the impression that "Justice" ought to know, as he is master of this branch of education. Now, I am not a graduate in any branch of mathematics whatever, but have been tutored by those competent to instruct in mental arithmetic, and as this is only a mental arithmetic question, it naturally appears to me that "Justice's" solution is not based upon any rule or axiom, but is merely a random conclusion of his own.

Now, here is where "Justice" has missed the mark: he don't understand the basis of representation in the convention. The Committee ordered that for every fifty votes cast for Tilden a delegate should be created. This was merely to fix the number of delegates each precinct was entitled to. After this the fifty votes that "Justice" makes his calculation upon are a dead letter. They have performed their mission, and are now changed into delegates, and are not brought into consideration when counting the votes cast at the primary election.

Now, then, let us make an illustration of the simplest kind. Two boys wish to buy sixteen apples; the vender tells them that it takes eight cents to purchase them. Now, then, this is the basis of division: one boy gives three cents, the other five cents; how do they divide them? Any school-boy knows how this is done—just so in the convention.

We will take Petersburg precinct first, as friend "Justice" does. Petersburg was entitled to four delegates in the convention. That precinct gave Mr. Conner 30 votes and Mr. Rouse 115; whole number, 145 votes. Mr. Conner received 30-145, or, reduced to a lower term, 6-29 of the popular vote; he is entitled to 6-29 of the four delegates, or 24-29 of a delegate. Mr. Rouse received 115-145, or 23-29 of the popular vote; he should receive 23-29 of the four delegates, or 92-29, equal to 3 5-29 delegate votes in the convention, and the two delegate votes awarded together make the four votes which Petersburg is entitled to in the convention. Now, any one who will notice the division of the delegate vote of Petersburg made by "Justice" will quickly observe that 1 5-50, or, reduced to a simpler form, 1 1-10 votes is not accounted for; and, by losing part of the whole delegate vote of several precincts, "Justice's" calculation falls short between five and six votes out of thirty-six in the county. Now, then, presenting my statement, and basing it upon the only mathematical plan for solution that I believe can be furnished, I will, in a brief way, give my calculation on the votes cast in convention:

PRECINCTS.	Votes for Rouse.	Votes for Conner.	Rouse in Convention.	Conner in Convention.
Burlington	101	100	2	2
Bellevue	54	9	1 5-7	2-7
Carlton	56	33	1 8-9	1 1-9
Hamilton	93	79	2 1-7	1 6-7
Verona	26	116	1-2	2 1-2
Walton	16	151	1-3	2 2-3
Union	99	62	2 74-161	1 87-161
Florence	70	166	1-2	3 1-2
Petersburg	115	30	3 5-29	24-29
Taylorsport	101	50	2 2-3	1 2-3
Total	731	799	18 7-12	17 5-12

I merely make this statement because I think "Justice's" article is calculated to mislead those who would not give the matter only a passing notice. He also casts undue reflections upon the members of the convention, classing them with Returning Boards. The convention merely did its duty, as ordered by the Executive Committee, and that Committee was strongly supported by Mr. Conner's friends. After they had completed their labor, as all present know, Mr. Rouse, under the circumstances, wisely received the nomination, but announced himself as an independent candidate. It behooves every man to go to the polls and cast his vote for the man of his choice; and I feel satisfied that if the Rouse men do their duty the first Monday in August, the boomerang will return on that day and slay those who gave it life.

FAIR COUNT.

That Convention.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Can you inform your readers when or where the convention "Justice" figured about in your last paper was held? It must have been in the upper spheres of the "higher mathematics" or in the Milky Way. As sure as you are born, it was not held in the Court-house at Burlington on the first Monday in July 1877. The County Committee never called that convention, dead certain, and I now move that Committee to bring "Justice" before his Honor Judge Phelps and put him on oath, and compell him to divulge the names and local habitation of the committee that called his ("Justice's") convention, and the name of every delegate, with a view of enabling the regular Committee to prosecute them for an usurpation of office. Our Criminal Judge would like to try his hand on these disturbers of Democratic harmony, and speedy trial and certain punishment is what they deserve for their high crime and misdemeanor. If it be true that the convention "Justice" attended had five delegates less than Dr. Sayre's convention, no disgust of identity will come in, but, on the contrary, guilt will be manifest, and the Governor alone can interpose.

Mr. Editor, if I were you I would pay no more attention to these convention figurers. They are such grand mathematicians you can not decide who among them is right. They get away up into the thousandths, yea, even higher still; for do they not talk about the higher mathematics, "calculus," and such stuff? They undertake to figurate with x, y and z, and the like of that, and call that the higher way to come at smaller things. Then they get away up out of the range of mortal ken, and yell back that rip-roarious word "calculus," and deafen us with its unaccustomed sound. The e "calculus" men think it nothing to upset the multiplication table, and prove, by figurating, that 2 and 2 make 6, and that 2 times 2 are 1; and by this higher process we find them dividing the delegates in an old-time Democratic Convention so as to give two candidates each a respectable majority for the same nomination. The division could have just as easily been made by them so as to have given each of three a good majority, and thus let Col. Henderson in, if that had been thought of in time, and it had met the favor of that noble old war horse of the good old times. His honesty in politics, however, would have forbidden his entering into such hair-dividing mathematics.

These mathematicians have not ventilated their ways of arriving at such contrary results from the same basis. Your correspondents on the figuring business will all agree (none of them being of the calculus stripe), if you can persuade them to turn their attention for a moment to the same counting. Get "Justice" out of his fancy mood down to the delegates that assembled at the Court-house on the first Monday in July, and then give him a five-oak and a pine board, and I will bet he agrees with the report of the Chairmen of the convention in five minutes, if that does figure in a minority candidate under a construction of an order erroneously believed by the Committee to be correct.

PONS ASINORUM.

Fair Count.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

SIR—As the action of the late convention appears to be the all absorbing topic, we beg a small space for bringing before the people what we conceive to be the facts. "Justice," in commenting on the action of the convention, takes occasion to level his artillery at certain delegates, and intimates that they alone were responsible for the manner in which the nomination was effected.

The delegates were equally responsible for said action.

Dr. B. A. Dulaney, who came there to represent the interests of Mr. Conner, and who is a gentleman that has the ability and integrity to count the vote, was chosen Secretary.

It is true there was, to avoid figuring, several votes thrown out, but in nearly every instance favored Mr. Conner.

Below we give a fair, impartial and correct count of the pro rata vote of the county:

PRECINCTS.	Votes for Rouse.	Votes for Conner.	Rouse in Convention.	Conner in Convention.

We ask the people to examine this and see if there is a single vote left out, or whether there are any delegates left out.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Waterloo.

Rev. A. Vardiman preached to a large congregation at the Locust Grove School-house, Sunday. Bro. Vardiman will preach on the 2d Sunday in each month at the above named place.

There was a soiree at Jas. T. Ryle's Saturday evening. Loquacity sweetened with good music was enjoyed by all except the couple that took a seat on the upper story of Mr. Ryle's chicken coop.

Jasper Sullivan was elected for school trustee of District No. 6. Jap. refuses to serve. No election in District No. 7.—[Mr. Sullivan reconsidered and was sworn in by the Commissioner last week.—ED.]

Our ex-Sheriff, who is now in the bovine and swine trade, passed by Waterloo a few days since, driving a drove of fat cattle which he bought of James Lawell.

Prof. D. M. Snyder is building a dwelling house in Bellevue. The town may be proud of all such men as the Professor.

Someone has threatened to spread Uno out on a board to dry. Boys, put me in a nice cool shade.

Will close by prognosticating dry weather but you need not be disappointed if should rain. UNO.

Gainesville.

As it has been some time since you had an item from this place, we will drop you a few, that the many readers of your paper may know that we still live and prosper.

In the first place, we will attempt a description of our city, which was christened Gainesville by its founders some 1,700 years ago, and has at this time something less than 43,000 inhabitants, is situated halfway between Burlington and Petersburg, also at the junction of Petersburg, Burlington and Covington turnpike, and is on an elevation of 900 feet above the level of the surrounding country; and just here let me tell you we have some of the most beautiful scenery in the known world. We have visited the Mammoth Cave in this State; looked with wonder upon the grand falls of Niagara, and read of the grand scenery on the mighty Hudson, but, sir, it is nothing in comparison with what nature has done for this, the garden spot of Kentucky. The lovers of the sublime and the beautiful should by all means visit this city. There are four large and commodious hotels. The Southron, No. 218 Washington Avenue, is presided over by W. B. Adams, Esq., late of Boston, and is the most popular—there is where I stop. The Grand is in the hands of Judge O. G. Wolley, a native of the Cape of Good Hope. He has a large iron foundry, and is noted for his striking beauty.

The St. Nicolas is still in the hands of General J. C. Hawkins, who was born and bred in Lexington, Kentucky, and is well known all over the State for the firm working powers of his under jaw.

The fourth, the Galt is now being renovated from cellar to garret, and will be opened out in a few days with a big hurrah.

Just opposite the Galt, on Broadway, is the large wholesale establishment of Davis Bros. J. C. Arneld has charge of the business, and let him tell it, it is a success. Ladies, call and see for yourselves, doors open from 6 a. m. to 11½ p. m.

Just obliquely across the street is the hub and spoke factory of Canfield & Co. Two doors below is the foundry of Gaines, Cunningham & Co., and many other business houses that the want of time forbids mentioning.

TO BE CONTINUED.

P. S. The Gas Factory is flourishing, and can furnish more than any other city in the known world.

Plattsburg.

A stranger passing through town at any time now would think a first class minstrel troupe had just commenced the theatrical season, from the chin music on South Avenue. The performers are composed of three children from the Emerald Isle, seconded by one or more of African descent, who are engaged in building a nice stone wall on South Avenue and Bellevue Streets. The confabs of these parties are at times enough to make one engage in merry mirth.

The election excitement is just now at fever heat, and no doubt each candidate at the August election will poll his entire strength. This vicinity is nearly unanimous for Rouse which leads a few of the Conner men who belong that class known as high pretentions and small performances to insinuate that they can capture many votes between now and the election by buying them. This every honorable man will treat with contempt.

The Rev. B. F. Bristow has changed his appointment on Ashby Fork, from the fourth Saturday to the Sunday following. His appointment for that place for the next meeting is four o'clock on the fourth Sunday in July. Let there be a general turn out and a stimulus added to that valley of Dry Bones that will for ever be commendable to the little congregation at Ashby.

Mr. John Bachelor concluded, a few days ago, to excavate a mound on Dr. Terrill's farm, near the mouth of Woolper Creep, and see if it was not an Indian grave. His prophecy was entirely true, for after very little labor he entered an Indian grave which had some appearance of a walled tomb. The contents were two human skulls, one in an entire state of preservation, containing from twelve to sixteen teeth in perfect order. The other was partly decayed and was very small. Thigh bones were also taken out. A beautiful bluish stone about eight inches in length, several smaller stones of the same color resembling tomahawks, several flints of extreme length, some pointed instruments unknown to those who observed them. Mr. Bachelor very kindly and gratuitously donated the whole lot to Dr. Sutton, of Aurora, Ind., where they can be seen at his office in that city.

A balloon descended and stopped on the farm of Arthur Terrill, on the 5th of July. It is supposed to have been started on the 4th. It came from the northeast and settled near Mr. Terrill's house. It was about six feet in length, made of the finest tissue paper and was colored alternately red, white and blue. DON JUAN.

Covington Live Stock Market.

Cattle—Receipts continue large with an increased demand for shippers and the market ruled a little firmer at 5¾@6¼c. for good; oxen to shippers, 4@5¼c.; also a few good heifers were sold to shippers at 5@5¼c. Butchers' stuff selling a little slow, except some of the best, which sold readily at 4¼@5¼c.; common hard to sell at 2¾@4c.

Milch cows—None on the market with but little demand.

Calves—Receipts small, and not much demand, and selling at 5@5¼c.

Sheep—There seem to be a better demand for shippers, and prices ruled a little firmer. Butchers' stuff, receipts and demand being about equal, the market ruled quiet. There continues to be good demand for stockers', without much change in the market. Shippers' selling at 4@5¼c; butchers', 3@4c; stockers', 2½@4c.

Lambs—Receipts, the first part of last week, were large, and prices were off about 1c. per lb; receipts were less yesterday and to-day, and prices are now a little better. Shippers' selling at 5@6c., and butchers' at 3@5½c.

Hogs—Receipts continue liberal for the season and demand good at better prices. Butchers' selling at $5 05@5 10; shippers' at 4½@5c., and stockers' at about 4½c.

HOW TO CATCH A BEAU.

Little Lady do you ask me
How to catch a beau?
Surely you, a winsome lassie—
Surely you should know.
Let me tell you en passant,
That there are many ways,
But I will only mention to you
Those that win men's praise.

When your friend drops in to see you,
Greet with happy face,
Laugh and sing and sparkle brightly
With your rarest grace;
But, with all your pleasant humor,
Though you wear fine lace,
Ne'er forget your mother's labors
And her care-worn face.

Learn to labor—help your mother
In the household cares,
Learn to bake, to cook, to iron—
Don't learn idle airs.
True, a man don't deserve you
If he'd make you slave;
But recollect that men, tho' rich,
Love women who can save.

Learn to be a good, true woman,
Master every art
That to home and those you love best
Pleasure can impart;
School your mind and heart and fingers,
Learn what you should know:
And then you ne'er need ask the question
How to catch a beau.

Summer Eating.

One of the things which the public does not concern itself about as much as it ought to is the kind and amount of food it shall eat during the summer. The generality of the people go on in the same way during the summer that they do in the winter with respect to the food they eat, varying it only as the seasons themselves vary it. The average man or woman is not apparently aware that the heat of the human body may be materially increased or decreased, according to the kind and amount of food that is imbibed. True, most people, when the hot weather comes along, rush spontaneously to fruit, and cram themselves with berries, cherries, peaches, watermelons, cantaloupes, pears, and often swallow much more than is good for them. Hence, cholera morbus, diarrhœa and other similar affections of the stomach. But very little or no care is taken in eating heavy beef in as great a quantity as during the coldest months in winter. It is no infrequent sight to see a man sit down, when the thermometer is at 95° in the shade, at a table groaning with fat-forming, heat-producing meats. On these he gorges himself until he is as filled to repletion as during the coldest days of December or January. It takes repeated warnings and a long experience to teach him that it is just as senseless to do this in the depressing days of July and August as it would be to wear his thick winter flannels and overcoat. True philosophy would teach us to be as careful to keep the inside of the body as cool as the outside.

A great deal of stuff has been written concerning the danger of cold drinks and eating ices and creams. There is danger under certain circumstances, as, for instance, when large quantities are gulped down while the body is over-heated. But when no more heat is experienced than what is inevitable in warm weather from any, even the highest, exercise, draughts of water may be quaffed by mouthfuls at a time, or even the coldest of creams and ices be slowly eaten with a spoon, without any risk, save in exceptional cases. Of course there are many ignorant and obstinate people who, eating and drinking habitually like pigs, can not be satisfied with this quiet and temperate mode of enjoyment. They pay the penalty of their disqualifications. But for intelligent people, who will learn how to eat and drink reasonably, there is abundance of healthful pleasure for the palate, even during the hottest of hot days. Eating and drinking correctly are an art, and have to be acquired.—New York Telegram.

The Printer's Commandments.

Thou (especially the ladies) shalt love the printer, for he loveth you muchly.

Thou shalt subscribe to his paper, for it is an abomination to his sight to see those sponged upon who do take it.

If thou art a business man, thou shalt advertise, in order that thou mayest not only be able to pay for thy paper, but that thou mayest put money in thy purse.

Thou shalt not visit him regardless of his office rules—in deranging the paper.

Thou shalt not touch anything that would give him trouble—that he may not hold thee guilty.

Thou shalt not read the manuscript in the compositor's hands, for he will not hold thee blameless.

Thou shalt not read the news before it is printed, for he will give it to you in due time.

Thou shalt ask him few questions of the affairs of his office.

Thou shalt not write communications on both sides of the paper, for the editor needeth the other side to write his editorials on.

Thou shalt not at any time send abusive and threatening letters to the editor, neither shalt thou cowhide him more than four times a year.

Thou shalt pay for thy paper in advance and thy advertising bills when due, not waiting to be dunned, in order that the noble printer may live.

BARBER: "Thin your hair a bit, sir?" Customer: "No, never mind. My wife attends to that. But just oil it well."

The Cause of Horace Greeley's Insanity and Death.

It is now nearly five years since the death of Horace Greeley, and during all that time the public has rested in the belief that his insanity and death were the result of mortification at his defeat in the Presidential contest of 1872. That this is not the truth has long been known to a few of his intimate and life-long friends, but, for reasons known only to themselves, they have been silent. At last, however, it is in the power of the Sun to lay before the public the circumstances which led to the insanity and death of Mr. Greeley, and to show that it was not his defeat for the Presidency, nor yet his domestic afflictions, that led to these results; but that only when he was deposed from the control of the newspaper which he had founded and built up did his reason give way and his busy life go out in darkness and gloom.

It will be remembered that shortly after Mr. Greeley accepted the nomination of the Liberals and Democrats for the Presidency, he published a letter, in which he announced his retirement from the active editorial management of the Tribune. When it became plain that he was defeated in the election, his first thought was for his paper, and he determined to resume control of its columns. This intention he announced to the readers of the Tribune in the issue of November 7, in a card written in his usual vigorous style. But simultaneously with the publication of this card, and on the same page of the paper, appeared an article entitled "Crumbs of Comfort," which had not been seen by or approved of by Mr. Greeley.

Mr. Greeley was greatly surprised and shocked when he read the "Crumbs of Comfort." He at once wrote an article, and ordered it to be inserted in the Tribune of the next morning, November 8, under the editorial head. Its language was as follows:

By some unaccountable fatality an article entitled "Crumbs of Comfort" crept into our last unseen by the editor, which does him the grossest wrong. It is true that office-seekers used to pester him for recommendations when his friends controlled the Custom-house, though the "red-nosed" variety was seldom found among them; it is not true that he ever obeyed a summons to Washington in order that he might there promote or oppose legislation in favor of this or that private scheme. In short, the article is a monstrous fable, based on some other experience than that of any editor of this journal.

Mr. Greeley went home confident that his repudiation of the authorship of the "Crumbs of Comfort" article would appear in the Tribune of the following day. But it did not appear. By the direction of the actual editor, it was left out. Mr. Greeley hastened to the office for an explanation, and was there informed that the article had been omitted by the direction of the editor in charge. He again ordered the article to be inserted on the following day, but again his order was unavailing. For three days, as we are informed, Mr. Greeley entreated, begged and threatened to get his disclaimer printed, but all in vain. Then it was that he began to realize that he had been deposed from the control of the Tribune. Another had assumed the management of the journal founded by him, and, if he remained connected with it longer, it must be only as a mere subordinate. He could not consent to that, and on the 12th of November he left the editorial rooms of the Tribune forever, a broken-hearted man, and he never returned.

Soon it began to be whispered that Mr. Greeley was sick, and then that he was insane and had been conveyed to an asylum. Finally, about the 25th of that month, a statement to the latter effect was printed in one of the morning newspapers. The next morning the following paragraph, which had been sent to the other papers from the Tribune office, was printed in most of them:

The reports of Mr. Greeley's confinement at Bloomingdale, or any other asylum, or of application for his admission to any, are preposterous. He is still suffering from a nervous collapse, the result of loss of nearly all sleep almost continually for over a month, during his wife's illness. This finally affected the nerves of the stomach, and it for days rejected food, whereby the system was still more weakened. Within a day or two there has been a marked change for the better, both in sleeping and eating, and his physicians are hopeful; but he is still a very sick man, and for the present his friends can best show their regard by letting him alone.

The truth is that at the time this was printed Mr. Greeley had been confined for nearly a week in Dr. Choate's private insane asylum, where none were permitted to see him but a few very intimate friends and members of his family. Almost his last coherent words were: "The country is gone, the Tribune is gone and I am gone!"—N. Y. Sun.

The Bovines.

If a loaded revolver were placed at my head and I was given one minute in which to name the most useful piece of four-legged furniture, I should unhesitatingly answer—The cow, and have forty-five seconds to spare. In speaking of the cow I embrace also the ox and the bull. The ox is used on the farm in place of a steam engine. He is faithful as a box of pills, and somewhat slower than lightning. A man who has driven an ox team all his life is selected as as a pall bearer at funerals, as he never gets ahead of the procession. The bull is chiefly celebrated for his dis position, which is cut goring, and gathered in quite full. He generally wears an ear-ring in his nose, and has curiosity to know how you are made inside?

THE DEVIL OUTDONE.

Old Nick came up to the earth one day,
And into old Washington wended his way.
And having some hours to spend for calls,
He thought he would visit our national halls.
On arriving there he crossed the sill
As discussion was hot on the salary bill.

Now, Old Nick, as everybody knows,
Has power to change both himself and clothes,
So, seeing a Senator's vacant chair,
Presto, change! and he was there!
And he said, as his eyes o'er the assembly ran,
"Wouldn't I make a splendid Congressman?"

The bill was read, and the devil sat there,
Tilted back in his easy chair,
With no particular interest in it,
Till there came a pause of about one minute;
And in a voice that was full of dread
The "back action" clause of the bill was read.

Old Nick sat up with interest now,
To see what the horrible (?) body would do.
"For surely," said he, "they haven't sunk so low,
That they can pass that bill clear through
It surely must be some hideous joke,
Or my imps have overdone their work."

The bill was read and ayes were called,
And the devil sat there like one appalled;
And the basest thing which he ever saw
Was this wholesale theft under the guise of law.

"To look any further there was no use,
For all mean things this beats the deuce."

"For thousands of years I've wandered round
Trying to see if there could be found
In the universe a lower level
Than that which is occupied by the devil!
My search was fruitless by sea and land
Till I met an American Congressman.

"If men like these are to Congress sent I'll run my chances for President."
Old Nick left town that very day,
But he was heard to mutter as he passed away:
"I'll let that 'Forty-second' alone,
For if I don't they'll steal my throne!"

The Horrors of a Night.

VALPARAISO, May 30.—A few days before the events I am about to narrate took place, the volcanic mountains of San Pedro and San Pablo were observed to be sending forth high in air, from their lofty peaks, flames, stones and ashes. At night the reflected light illuminated the heavens, at times giving a reddish glare to the passing and overhanging clouds, and would gradually disappear. Now and then a glimmering, whitish light would brightly be reflected from some bursting forth of the flames at the crater's mouth, and with these frequent changes the night would pass away. Daylight gave the appearance of a dense, smoky cloud hanging high above and around the volcano. At the foot hills of these mountain ranges were situated the cities of Calama, San Pedro and Chui-Chui, all of which were destroyed.

Wednesday, the 9th day of May, 1877, was remarkable for the extreme heat and suffocating atmosphere—a cloudy day. In the evening at 8:30, without any announcement by the usual rumbling underground sound preceding an earthquake, the earth began to shake, slightly at first, and then the shaking gradually increased in strength. For the space of three minutes the motion of the earth's surface was undulating, rocking and uplifting. The shock was distinctly felt from Callao, Peru, along the coast of Bolivia to Valdivia, in the southern portion of Chili, its central point of action and force being in Bolivia. Upon the commencement of the tremor, the startled populace of the many different seacoast cities hurried forth from their dwellings and found themselves scarcely able to maintain their foothold in the public streets; some there were who fell upon their hands and knees. The darkness of the night, the grinding of the walls of the buildings one against the other, the crushing, breaking, crackling sound of timber, the tumbling down of walls and clouds of dust flying about, the crash of household goods, crockery, glassware, &c., as they fell, the ringing of the church and the other bells with the sway of the earth—these, together with the cries of despair and shrieks of women and children, mingled with the loud prayers for mercy, were but a portion of the horrors of the passing moments. With diminished force for hours after shake after shake occurred, and to add to the misfortunes of many of the cities, flames broke forth from the ruined houses.

Bravely the men contended with the new enemy, which was fast gaining the upper hand. The blazing flames, as they shot upward, were seen miles away at sea on shipboard. The light of the conflagration upon the jagged, shapeless ruins of buildings in the backgrounds, and the reflection of the flames upon the passing forms, the scared, pale faces of the women as they hastily passed to and fro, hunting some dear one or anxious for the welfare of relatives and friends, gave perhaps a faint picture of the "last day." Amid such sad and gloomy scenes the cry broke forth and was repeated from every side, "The tidal wave!" Men gave up in perfect despair, and, with the women and children, intent on self-preservation, they sought, maddened with affright, the steep hillsides for safety. Mothers were separated from their children, husband from wife; everything was confusion and confounded; the sick arose from the places in which they had been left in fancied security, and they, too, rushed on with the rest, many of them perishing in the attempt.

The sea granually left the shore, and, falling back for at least one-third of a mile, as if to gain strength and velocity for its fearful coming leap, rising sixty feet in height, it advanced, boiling, rolling and tumbling over and over, with a deafening noise, bearing all before it in its course; vessels, some of them, sank in its embrace and were never seen again; others clung to their anchorage, and for a time were buried in the wave, were lifted up, and in safety swaying from side to side, settled at last in smooth water; many were dragged and hurried to the land, where they were dismantled or broken in pieces. The tidal wave, gaining in force and power with its onward rolling motion, seemed striving for the final struggle, and running its fearful course it soon entered the thrice doomed cities, putting out the flames of the burning buildings and raising a dense volume of smoke and steam. In receding, the wave took with it all that remained undestroyed.

With the appearance of daylight was discovered the wreck of what a few hours before had been flourishing cities, now a desolate waste. An industrious, thriving people were homeless and houseless, and soon to suffer the pangs of hunger and thirst, of ruin and despair. The beach was strewn with the wrecks of their property, and the sea had destroyed their provisions. For five days the tidal waves rose and fell, growing each day lesser in force. It is supposed to be the most disastrous wave ever experienced on this coast, and to have been caused by a subterranean earthquake under the sea, and connected with the volcano of San Pedro.

Cities and towns have been ruined, some of them never to be rebuilt, in all probability. Among the places which have suffered in more or less degree are: Callao, Pisagua, Iquique, Arica, Cobija, Calama, San Pedro, Pisco, Chui-Chui, Tambo de Mora, Mollendo, Pabillon de Pica, Punto de Lobos, Huanillos, Tocopillo, Mejillones de Bolivia, Antofogasta, Constitucion, and Taena. Many of the mines have been sunk or badly injured, and the losses sustained by the people are incalculable. The Carmien mine fell out of plumb and buried thirty-five miners and an overseer in its ruins. The trading steamers of the coast took deck loads of suffering women and children to Coquimbo and Valparaiso, where they were cared for by a liberal, charitable people, and the Chili Government, immediately upon receipt of information of the state of affairs along the coast, sent men-of-war steamers loaded with clothing, provisions and water for the relief of the suffering.

The following is related by a Captain of a vessel on the coast: At the time of the shock his wife was playing the piano, "Home, sweet home," and his two daughters were present singing the song. They ran up the companion-way on deck, and a few moments later the tidal wave left the vessel broadside to the incoming current. The heavy roller struck and broke the vessel into pieces, and all were left at the mercy of the sea. The Captain, an expert swimmer, endeavored to assist his family but was prevented by the Chinese servant seizing him by the arm. To free himself and in the excitement of his situation, he was compelled to strangle the Chinaman. He found that his whole family had disappeared from sight.—Boston Advertiser.

Exodus to Africa.

The negroes are alive at present with anticipations of return to their ancestral jungles. Ever since the last election the popular sentiment among them has been in favor of an exodus to Africa. Here, lately, the sentiment has taken definite shape, and organized efforts are being made to obtain assistance from the Liberian and American governments to assist in furnishing vessels to transport the emigrants. An agency has been established in Charleston purporting to be a branch of the Colonization Society of Philadelphia, at which the emigrants enroll themselves and pay their fees to defray preliminary expenses. Some of the colored churches have taken up the matter, and in one of them every member has signified his or her intention to accompany their pastor. Every idle negro is loud in the assertion, "I am gwine on de fust ship dat starts."

On the 4th of July the negroes held a mass meeting on the Battery green in Charleston for the propagation of the emigration policy. There were from ten to fifteen thousand persons in attendance. Every speaker who addressed them spoke favorably of the exodus except a white missionary from Vermont, who was scarcely allowed to proceed after he was found to dissent from the popular idea. The meeting determined to adopt the old Jewish precedent, and send two men to spy out the land. Accordingly an assessment of a nickel was levied upon each poll for that purpose, and collected on the spot.

The Battery is a beautiful spot, covered with grass and regularly shaded by oak trees. Over the heads of the nation's wards floated the beautiful flag of the Union. On the green sward they were gathered in groups of one or two hundred, enjoying their peculiar dance of "Tula, Tula Lu." They were so intent on this enjoyment that they paid little attention to the speakers, except to throw in the nickel and thus confirm their readiness for the expedition. As I strolled among these crowds of happy beings, I could not refrain from asking a sedate old negro, "Is not this better than Liberia?" The old man answered, "Boss, dis is berry nice, but dey say we must go back to our people's home."

The propagandists tell the negroes that Africa has a golden shore, upon whose beach old ocean daily throws the golden sands she digs from the deep sea. Diamonds are said to pave the rivulets. Bread grows on the trees. Meat runs wild in the woods, and one elephant will suffice a family for a year. Monkeys nurse the babies while the mother rides in a golden chariot, drawn by white ostriches.

The less credulous and more industrious people are told that cotton and rice grow without replanting, so that two crops are gathered each year; that coffee is perennial, and only requires picking and sacking, and that in a few years they will all be as rich as their old masters were before the war.

The most intelligent are appealed to upon social principles. They are told they may stay among white people a thousand years and they never will be anything more than "niggers," and if they go to Africa, among their own people, their superior intelligence will soon give them place and position in their fatherland; they will be kings and queens, lords and ladies, among a people whom they will elevate by their association.

Major Delany, the first black field officer of the late war, who has explored a considerable portion of the promised land, takes a philosophical view of the matter. He says he begins to realize that slavery was a great civilizing process to the African race; that they were brought to America, Christianized in bondage, and are now able to return and Christianize the old folks at home. He sees trouble in the fact that those who are most willing to go now are those who are unable to communicate either moral or religious culture to the Africans, and he thinks those who are able to do so will likely desire to remain in this country. He favors a partial emigration of superior intelligence, so that the pioneers may become practical missionaries. Afterward he thinks a general exodus may be effected.

My own experience among the colored people leads me to believe that the most intelligent are those who are most in earnest about going. The mulattoes particularly seem anxious to return to the land of "their forefathers." They are cut off from all social aspirations in America, and now that political preferment, with its compulsory social recognition, is closed against them by the surrender of the negro party in the late elections, they yearn for other fields in which to pasture. Some of them who are property holders, anticipate selling their property and joining the expedition.

The whites look on with different ideas as to the effect of an exodus. Most of them quietly say, "Better let them go, and then the country will fill up with white people, and the old State will commence a new lease of life." Some, however, can not see how they are going to get along without negro labor, and many of them, who yet look on their old slaves as foster children, can not bear the idea of parting with them to return to barbarism.

The Adventures of a Goat in a Garden.

Last Monday afternoon the eleven Boblink boys surrounded and caught an enormous, shaggy, strong-smelling, wicked-looking goat of the masculine gender, turned him loose in Burdock's garden, nailed up the gate, and then went home and flattened their eleven little noses against the back windows to watch for coming events.

Before his goatship had spent three minutes in that garden, he had managed to make himself perfectly at home, pulled down the clothes-line, and devoured two lace collars, a pair of undersleeves and a striped stocking belonging to Mrs. B., and was busily engaged sampling one of Burdock's shirts, when the servant girl came rushing out with a basket of clothes to hang up.

"The saints preserve us!" she exclaimed, coming to a full halt, and gazing, open-mouthed, at the goat, who was calmly munching away at the shirt.

"Shew, shew, shew, there!" screamed the girl, setting down her basket, taking her skirts in both hands, and shaking them violently at the intruder.

Then the goat, who evidently considered the movement a challenge, suddenly dropped his wicked old head and darted at her with the force of an Erie locomotive, and just one minute later by the City Hall clock, that girl had tumbled a back somersault over the clothes-basket, and was crawling away on her hands and knees in search of a place to die, accompanied by the goat, who butted her on the battle ground every third second.

It is probable that he would have kept on butting for the next two weeks, if Mrs. Burdock, who had been a witness of the unfortunate affair, had not armed herself with the family poker and hurried to the rescue.

"Merciful goodness! Annie, do get up on your feet!" she exclaimed, aiming a murderous blow at the beast's head, and missing it by a few of the shortest kind of inches. It was not repeated, owing to the goat suddenly raising up on his hind feet, waltzing towards her, and striking her in the small of the back hard enough to loosen her finger-nails and destroy her faith in a glorious immortality.

When Mrs. B. returned to consciousness she crawled out from behind the grindstone, where she had been tossed, and made for the house, stopping only once, when the goat came after and butted her head first into the grape arbor.

Once inside the house the door was locked, and the unfortunates sought the solitude of their own rooms, and such comforts as they could extract from rubbing and growling, while the goat wandered around the garden, like Satan in the Book of Job, seeking what he could devour, and the eleven little Boblink boys fairly hugged themselves with pleasure over the performance.

By the time Burdock returned home that evening, and learned all the particulars from his arnica-soaked wife, the goat had eaten nearly all the week's washing, half the grapevine, and one side of the clothes-basket.

"Why in thunder didn't you put him out, and not leave him there to destroy everything?" he demanded angrily.

"Because he wouldn't go, and I wasn't going to stay there and be killed, that's why!" answered his wife excitedly.

"Wouldn't, fiddlesticks!" he exclaimed, making for the garden, followed by the entire family.

"Get out of here, you thief!" he shouted as he came into the garden, and caught sight of the shaggy and highly perfumed visitor.

The goat bit off another mouthful of the basket, and regarded him with a mischievous twinkle of the eyes.

"You won't go, hey?" exclaimed Burdock, trying to kick a hole in the enemy's ribs.

"I'll show you wheth—"

The sentence was left unfinished, as the goat just then dropped his head on Burdock's shirt bosom, and before he could get his equilibrium he had been butted seven times in seven fresh spots, and was down on his knees crawling around in a very undignified manner, to the horror of the family and the infinite glee of the eleven young Boblinks next door.

"Look out he don't hurt you!" screamed Mrs. Burdock, as the goat sent him flying into a snow-pile.

When Burdock got his bald head out of the snow, he was mud all over his clothes, and tried to clutch the brute by the horns, but desisted after he had lost two front teeth and been rolled in the mud.

"Don't make a living show of yourself before the neighbors," advised his wife.

"Come in, pa, and let him be," begged his daughter.

"Golly, dad, look out; he's coming again!" shouted his son, enthusiastically.

Then Burdock waxed profane and swore three-story oaths in such rapid succession, that his family held their breaths, and a pious old lady, who lived in a house in the rear, shut up her windows and sent out her cook to hunt for a policeman or a missionary.

"Run for it, dad," advised his son a moment later, when the goat's attention seemed to be turned away.

Burdock sprang to his feet and followed his offspring's suggestion. He was legging it in superb style, and the chances of his reaching the house seemed excellent, when the fragrant brute suddenly clapped on more steam, gained rapidly, and darting between his legs, capsized him into an ash-box.

His family dragged him inside, another candidate for arnica rubbing and a blessed haven of rest.

The back of the house has been hermetically sealed, and Burdock now proposes extending an invitation to the militia regiment of Brooklyn to come down and practice marksmanship off the roof, promising to furnish a live goat for a target, and a silver-plated napkin ring as the first prize. The goat still holds the fort.

THE following advertisement is by a modest specimen of "Young America:" "Wanted, a situation, by a strong, active American youth of seventeen, with plenty of muscle, vim and health. Not afraid to knuckle down to hard work of any kind; is well educated and has a good knowledge of Latin. Ambition highly developed and brains to back it. Penetration sharp as the business end of a hornet, and cheek bigger than either. Lawyer's office preferred. Highest and best of city references. Anyone in search of such a bonanza will strike oil—a regular spouting well—by addressing 'Scamander,' D. A. Office."

Announcements.

We are authorized to announce L. C. Norman as a Democratic candidate for State Senator, at the August election, 1877.

We are authorized to announce Jas L. Henderson as acandidate for the Legislature.

We are authorized to announce Reuben Conner as a candidate for County Representative, at the August election, 1877.

We are authorized to announce Granville V. Rouse as a candidate for County Representative, at the August election, 1877.

Tilton and his three children have gone on a visit to Europe.

General Ben Harrison says he has no knowledge of his being appointed Minister to Russia.

The Railroad strike, at this time, is on the increase. Fears are entertained it will become general.

The grasshoppers only destroyed fifteen million bushels of wheat in Minnesota this summer.

The proposed stock law makes its appearance this week. Those interested should give it their attention.

The Cincinnati Commercial says that the Republican County Conventions are speaking out for the Admission.

These are striking times, and it strikes us that Boone County has more wheat now than it has had for many years.

The newsboys, of Detroit, took the strike fever a few days since, and, in proportion to their numbers, were as disorderly as the railroad men.

It is thought that the end of the Eastern war is near at hand, some of the troops having received official notice of their early return to Russia.

At the election, on the 1st Monday in August, there is a State Treasurer, a State Senator and a County Representative to vote for, and, by the way, for or against the proposition to build a Work-house.

Boss Tweed has addressed a letter to the Corporation Counsel in New York, requesting that judgment be taken for the amount sought in all the suits against him, or in preparation, all his defenses having been disclosed to the Attorney-General.

The School Trustees, of Pulaski County, held a meeting recently, and resolved not to change the text-books during the next two years. This example should be followed by other counties. The frequent changes in text-books made in the schools creates confusion, and also needless expense for the parents.

The New York Herald says that a meeting in which the exodus of negroes to Africa will be considered will be held in that city this week. Fred Douglas will be present and give his views on the subject. This move is assuming shape at several places in the country, and should a start be made, an immense number of negroes will evidently follow the leaders.

The President and the members of his Cabinet have accepted an invitation to visit Louisville. The Governors of all the States have also been invited to be present at the same time. Efforts are being made to have a grand time at Louisville, and the Commercial claims that the event can be made productive of permanent good to the whole country as well as to Louisville.

The New York Graphic says the extraordinary demands for wheat form the current excitement. Every steamship brings orders and buyers; most of the purchasers are Europeans, which seems to indicate that it is believed that the war between Russia and Turkey may become general. The Graphic allows that this lively market will enrich the West and restore the national prosperity. The sales of wheat last week were immense and many million dollars were thus set in motion.

Another generous streak has hit Governor McCreary. This time it is Tom Allen's bondsman who enjoys the benefit of this gubernatorial generosity. Allen was held in the sum of $3,000 for engaging in last summer's "prize-fight," in the vicinity of Walton, and a Mr. Farrell, of Covington, went on his bond. Allen failed to appear when time was called by the court, and the bail was declared forfeited. At this point Governor McCreary comes to the front in his usual magnanimous manner, and releases Farrell from paying $2,000 of the forfeit. We do not see the whyfore of this, lest it be an act to encourage prize fighting in Kentucky.—Louisville Commercial.

A little of the Governor's generosity extended toward Joe Goss would be as much in place.

The strike which has been in progress among the railroad employes on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, since Wednesday of last week, has been the most destructive strike ever known to this country. The trouble is the result of an attempt on the part of the railroad owners to reduce the wages of the hands employed on the roads. It appears that the business of these roads has been greatly reduced during the last few months, and the amount of labor required to do the business of the roads accordingly diminished, but the owners of the roads have endeavored to divide the work among the employes and keep them reconciled by giving to two men the work that but a short time since required three. The managers finally concluding their roads were not sufficiently remunerative, attempted to cut upon the wages the hands were drawing. This aroused the indignation of the laborers who were determined to submit to no more reductions in wages, and at once declared war upon the roads. At Baltimore the strike assumed the likeness of a rebellion. Troops were stationed at that place to protect the town and railroad property. Saturday, quite a lively brush was had between the militia and the strikers, some sixteen persons being killed in the engagement. Saturday night the trouble was thought about enoeluded but much property had been totally destroyed. At Pittsburg, Saturday night, the militia was ordered to clear the crossing of a street when they were attacked by the mob, which hurled a shower of stones at them. The militia returned the fire from revolvers, killing and wounding several persons. This aroused the fighting blood of the mob, and the city, virtually in their hands, was the scene of terrible excitement and blood-shed. The militia was forced to take refuge in the round-house which was surrounded by a mob estimated at 20,000 people. This warfare prevailed till near midnight, Sunday, when it was in a degree subdued, many lives having been sacraficed and millions of dollars worth of property destroyed. The loss to the railroad is estimated at six millions of dollars. About two thousand loaded cars and thirty-five locomotives were burned as well as all the buildings belonging to the road. Thus we see millions of dollars of property distroyed by a set of men who fancy they are avenging a great wrong done them by the owners of the railroads. Two wrongs were never known to make one right, and in this case crippling of these railroads is no more nor less than the injuring of a source of employment for the men who are so determined upon the distruction of the roads or have them come to their terms.

The Cincinnati Commercial, of the 22d, says: "We have communications saying that an attempt to force the indorsement of the Administration at Cleveland will cause a split in the Republican party. Let it split. If the Republican party in Ohio can not approve the policy of the Administration, it is worthless for all good works, and not only ought to be, but certainly will be, utterly defeated. If the Republicans do not indorse the Administration unequivocally the Democrats will make a clean sweep in Ohio. A Jim Blaine and Grant ring fight here would come to grief. It is by an outright Administration fight only, that Ohio can be carried against the Democracy. More than that, if the old Republican ringsters possess the Cleveland Convention, it is desirable that the Democracy should carry the State."

Up at Toronto they take issue with Mr. Blaine on the annexation question. The Toronto Globe says the sympathies and sentiments of Canadians are against annexation, their interests are opposed to it; the whole tendency of both Imperial and Canadian policy, has for some time past been in quite a contrary direction. Mr. Blaine's speech gets no indorsement from that quarter.

The order made by the President, demanding Government office holders to abandon the political highways, does not go down as if it had been buttered. There is a general growl among those who have been boosted into office as a reward for their labors in the now forbidden fields. They don't see why electioneering by a Federal officer should become an offense all of a sudden.

—Two thousand dollars worth of sheep have been killed in one neighborhood in Clarke County since Christmas.

The Long-Looked-For Stock Law.

Section 1. Whenever any stock running at large shall trespass upon the inclosure of any person, the owner or keeper of the stock shall be liable for all damages done, and for all costs and fees incident to the prosecution of the trespass, recoverable before any court of competent jurisdiction; and the party injured shall also have a lien on the stock to satisfy any judgment he may recover, and may have execution levied thereon and sell same to satisfy said execution, notwithstanding it may be exempt from levy and sale under the present law.

§ 2. Any person finding stock that is permitted to run at large trespassing on his inclosure, or any inclosure under his control, may hold the stock in his possession until the owner or keeper thereof shall pay the damages done by such trespass; or, where suit has been brought, until the judgment of the court shall have been enforced; and he shall be entitled to reasonable compensation for the care and the keep of the stock, to be taxed as costs in the action. Provided, that the owner or keeper of the stock shall be entitled to the possession thereof, upon his executing to the party injured a bond with good surety, conditioned that he will pay the damages within thirty days, or perform the judgment of the court.

§ 3. Should said stock be removed from the possession of the party injured without his consent, or before the bond is executed, he may have an attachment levied thereon, and the officer making the levy shall take the stock into his custody, provide for its keep, and hold it subject to the order of the court; but the owner or keeper of the stock may execute the bond aforesaid after the levy of the attachment, and possession of the stock shall thereupon be restored.

KANSAS LETTER.

Clay Center, Kansas, July 20th 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

It is a generally accepted maxim, we believe, that extremes are unwholesome. If such be the fact, we of Kansas have certainly had some very unhealthy weather during the last two weeks, our temperature varying from boiling, roasting, frying heat to shivering chill. On the 6th inst., our thermometers indicated 106° in a shady place. Clay Center perspired enough to float a ship that day, while now every body wears his overcoat, sits by the cooking stove and thinks about the price of coal.

A great and discouraging calamity has befallen the farmers of this and neighboring counties. Up to about the first of July they had looked forward to an abundant harvest of fall wheat, and certainly the prospects were flattering. But about that time, through some blighting cause, the heads refused to fill, the kernels shriveled and dried, and left standing, waving in the breeze, barren fields of worthless straw. Many a man who had anticipated his thousand bushels of golden grain will not cut an acre. Other crops are turning out well. Spring wheat is much better than usual. Rye and barley, excellent. Corn surpasses any previous crop in prospects, and with the permission of ye grasshopper will "astonish the natives."

How did you celebrate the fourth in ye "Dark and Bloody Ground?" With booming gun, and hissing rocket, popping cracker and loud hurrah? Some of our folks tried to start the enthusiasm, but the memories of '76, (i. e. 1876) were too vivid in the people's minds, to allow them to desire a repetition of its glories. The most interesting feature of the day was a game of base-ball. The Professionals—the lawyers &c—challenged the Mercantiles to a trial of skill. The result was a game in which the former, by a judicious choice of substitutes, vanquished their opponents by a score of 41 to 13. This was the first game of base-ball, we, your humble scribe, has engaged in since leaving the beatific shores of "Old Ky."

The railroad fever has taken hold of our people and bids fair to work some results. Yesterday, a delegation of about forty distinguished looking gentlemen from Kansas city, and other places along the line, passed through Clay Center en route for Concordia, Cloud County, working up the extension of the J. C. & F. K. Railway. On next Saturday a meeting will be held in Clay Center in the interest of the "Narrow Gauge R. R." to be extended to Clay Center. Other lines are spoken of, and among them a connecting line between Beatrice, Neb., and Clay Center will have another road before long. Semper et vere tuus, C. C. C.

STATE NEWS.

—In some sections worms are going for the tomato plants.

—Wheat in Robinson County is estimated at from 25 to 30 bushels per acre.

—Robinson County has a man 94 years old. Last week he did four days' work in the harvest field.

—The Frankfort Yeoman of last Thursday said of the 950 convicts in the penitentiary not one was sick.

—The apple crop of Magoffin is good, and the makers of apple brandy are already rubbing up their stills.

—Mr. James Ridwell, of Fleming County, was killed by lightning on the 4th. He was sitting under a locust tree in his yard.

—A correspondent to the Mount Sterling Sentinel says, I saw an Early Rose potato a few days since with 17 young potatoes on it.

—Last Saturday evening, a Mrs. Wilson and her little sister, of Carroll County, were fatally burned by the explosion of a coal oil can used in kindling a fire in the stove.

—A vigilance committee notified an attorney in Fleming County not to engage in the defense of any more horse thieves, he having been successful in obtaining the release of one.

—W. Underwood, colored school teacher, was arraigned before the Police Court, last week, for unmercifully whipping a little girl, and was fined $25 and costs.—Elkton Witness.

—The Owensboro Examiner says, it is no exaggeration to say that the corn crops in the bottoms on this and the Indiana side of the river promise the farmers as fine a yield as they have reaped in a dozen years.

—The Maysville Eagle says, the new crop of barley is bright and will sell at the top of the market, though not heavy, the deficiency in weight is attributable to the want of lime in the soil, caused by the excess of rain last spring.

—W. A. J. Smith, who was arrested in Monroe County, Kentucky, by a man named Richardson, some time since, and taken to Green County, under the mistaken idea that he was the man Weems, who had murdered his wife in that county, returned through here on foot yesterday, having walked all the way back, a distance of about 300 miles. He intends bringing suit against Richardson for damages for false imprisonment, Richardson having kept him in the jail at Winchester for a week before going to Greenville.—Nashville American.

—Richard Shuck, who is condemned and sentenced to be hung Friday, July 27th, was brought to this place Saturday last, by Sheriff Gray, and lodged in the Owenton jail. He is not very communicative, but looks well and seems cheerful. We called at the jail Monday, where there are eight prisoners confined, and from appearances we would as soon have selected either of his companions as the doomed man, so perfectly unconcerned did he appear. He complained some of being sore from his ride from Frankfort, which he accomplished on horseback over a rough road. He has made a confession, which he wants published before his execution.—Owen News.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

St. Louis, Mo., July 21, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

About the time we were closing our last week's letter, the Butchers and Drovers' Bank, of this city, closed doors, and on Monday, the North St. Louis Savings Institution and the Bank of St. Louis followed suit. In the afternoon of the same day, as well as on Tuesday following, there were runs on nearly every bank in the city, but with the exception of those named, each and every bank seemed ready and willing to pay every dollar on demand. The Boatsmen's Savings Institution, the largest and oldest bank in the city, kept its doors open Monday until 8 p. m. It is thought the Bank of St. Louis will resume business again in a few days, with ample capital to pay every dollar they owe. The others will likely go into liquidation, but it is thought depositors will be paid dollar for dollar.

We have had quite chilly weather the week through, but the suicide mania seems to be on the increase. It is altogether useless for us to specify or particularize, as our time and your space will not permit. We will, however, say one gentleman in the Northern part of the city, of German extraction, shuffled off the mortal coil at the age of 75 years and some few months, by adjusting one end of a rope to his neck, and the other to a beam in his back yard. The next day (Tuesday) a lady of the same nativity, and aged 78 years, residing in the lower part of the city, ended life's woes in pretty near the same manner, the only difference being the latter twisted a sheet, tied one end around her neck, and the other to the top of the bed post and then made a jump for eternity. She made it. The next day a gentleman of exceedingly religious turn of mind, who for years had made the Book of Revelations a study, came to the conclusion that he was the Beast spoken of in the Book, and went out into his back yard and blew his braines out. It is supposed that he knows all about it now.

We had about the same routine of business this week as last. About the same receipts of wheat and corn, and market this evening closes at about the same figures as this day week on both cereals.

On Thursday evening, the 19th inst., Mr. William Shepherd, of this city, and Miss Lou Jones, daughter of R. H. Jones, of this city, but formerly of your county, were made man and wife according to the laws of this State, and, we trust, the High Court of Heaven.—Elder I. H. Smart officiating. The bride and groom left the same evening for the Rocky Mountains, and will probably visit California before they return. Mr. Jones says he begins to feel a little lonesome, as he had a son married about six weeks since, but as he supports Col. Henderson, and believes in the "old dispensation," and as that is the way they did under the old dispensation, he supposes he will have to stand it. The only difference being, in one or two cases under the old dispensation a feller had to work seven years for his gal's dad, before she could become his bride. We think that rather, hard but it is none of our business.

The Recorder, of Thursday, came to hand yesterday, and we see Col. Henderson is still solid on his platform. We still insist that he ought to modify his views somewhat on the school question. We are doing our best for him and if he is beaten it will be that plank in his platform that did the job. The young idea ought to know how to shoot, and if a poor boy ain't able to buy a gun in these times of plenty, his neighbors ought to help him. We are willing to shoot off our gun in favor of Col. Henderson, and we think he ought to be as generous toward the boy who has no gun. Yours truly.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

THE members of Mount Pleasant Grange are requested to be present at a special meeting, to be held Saturday, July 28, at 3 p. m.

ESQ. REUBEN CONNER was in town Monday. This was the first sight we have had at a candidate since the first Monday in July.

IF the windows in the jail were made as long again, and the building painted red and penciled, it would look semi-respectable, at least.

MRS. JOHN SCOTT lost a pair of spectacles on the road between her house and Mr. Berkle's. The finder will confer a favor by returning them.

LEN SANDFORD got two of his fingers mangled, last week, by getting them caught between the rope and pully of a hay fork. The end of one finger was torn nearly off.

WE call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of coal for sale by Thos. Clore, of Bellevue, and say to them that, in preparing to keep warm this winter, they may do well by patronizing him.

MONDAY morning some of the boys began scraping their pockets for surplus funds to invest in the circus at Lawrenceburg. Some of the pockets had their bottoms scraped out, but no nickels were exhumed.

THE burial of Oscar Crisler did not take place on Wednesday of last week, as we announced. The inclement weather caused its postponement till Thursday. Rev. James A. Kirtley preached the funeral sermon on Wednesday, and Rev. Lafe Johnson on Thursday.

ON account of the strike at Pittsburg, no stock was shipped from the Covington Stock yards the first of this week. About five or six hundred fine shippers were driven from the pens to the pastures along the Lexington pike, Monday, to await a settlement of the railroad trouble.

OUR Petersburg correspondent is still among the living and chuck full of life. That fraction in the Taylorsport District, as figured by Mr. Snyder, gives Rouse 2 102-151 votes, and Conner 1 49-151. The mistake was the fault of the person who held copy while the proof was read.

THE elongation of the jail is complete. The necessary amount of sawdust has been deposited on the third floor, the woodwork made a beautiful rust color (don't know what color it will finally be), and the total cost of the building stretched to $5,000, or so near that amount as to dangerously weaken it.

THIS paragraph is penciled for the especial benefit of those who are contracting the habit of loafing about our office during working hours. We can not entertain those who have no business more than to interfere with those who have sufficient to claim their attention. Endurance sometimes ceases to be a virtue and it is near that point in our case. Any Sunday those who have such a liking for our room will come around we will laugh and talk all day with them. Boys, working hours close at 6 p. m.—please remember the hour. W. M. CONNER.

WE have a communication from Waterloo, but it is unavoidably crowded out. It communicates the fact that two of the politicians there have been on a strike. No one killed.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

COVINGTON STOCK YARDS, July 23.

Report of the Covington Live Stock Market for the week ending July 23, 1877:

On account of the railroad strike out East, the market is over-run and the prices are a little off on all kinds of stock, but not as much so as was expected, which indicates a good market as soon as the trouble are over.

Cattle—Shippers are going off very slow at 5@5¼c. Butchers' are selling at 4¼@5c. for extra; 3¾@4c. for good; 3@3½c. for common.

Milch Cows—A few good cows on the market sold at $35@45. Veal calves sold at 5@5½c.

Sheep are selling at 3½@4¼c. to butchers' and shippers'. A few stock sheep on the market and selling at 3@3½c. per lb.

Lambs—But few good ones on the market, and but few wanted as shippers are afraid to buy. They are selling at 5@5½c. The market is overstocked with common lambs and selling at 3@4¼c. per lb.

Hogs—Receipts have fallen off a little as has the demand, and they are selling slow at $4 50@4 90. W. M. CONNER.

"Justice" Rampant.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

It seems that my article, published in a late issue of your paper, touched more chords than I had intended; instead of having one, I have three articles to reply to, and I am sorry to say that they are all tinged with the same ignorance of the real language of my production. Had the gentlemen noted carefully my language, they would have seen that I made no estimate of the delegates. Their number was determined prior to the primary election, and I claim that, according to the language of the instructions of the Executive Committee, it is immaterial, in obtaining the fair count, whether this number be one or one hundred from each district. Further on, I shall endeavor to prove this.

We will first examine the three articles written in reply to mine. First in order is that of "Fair Count." In giving his article a careful perusal, we find that Big I pervades the whole of it. It is the personification of egotism. He writes as though he were Governor-General of Boone County, or of some small province of the county. In reading his article, we see spite, prejudice and injustice plainly visible. How could he sign himself "Fair Count" when he was filled with such passions as there? He plainly shows that he is for Mr. Rouse, that he was a member of the Returning Board, and that he is a boomeranger; and I predict that, on the 6th day of August next, like that strange missile that the Australian throws, his political boomerang will slap him on the nose. Doubtless he sighed with relief when he penned the wonderful discovery that I had used, in obtaining the vote the delegates were to cast, the fifty mentioned by the Committee in determining the number of delegates. I simply used fifty as a standard vote, just as I would have used five, twenty or forty. Some standard was bound to be adopted, and I selected fifty as the most convenient number. The same result would have been obtained had I used any other number as a standard.

Again, the author borrows a sum from mental arithmetic, where the sixteen apples are to be divided between two boys, and proposes to solve the problem of the two candidates by the same. Now, the question arises, what does the sixteen apples represent in this case? Do they represen the four delegates from Petersburg, or the 145 votes cast at the primary election in that district? We claim that they represent the 145 votes mentioned.

We will now take a passing notice of the calculation he so egotistically announced as the only mathematical solution of the agitating problem. We think it a great pity that "Fair Count" did not study mental philosophy in connection with mental arithmetic, so that he might see farther than the end of his nose. Well, in examining his calculation, we find that he threw out one vote in Burlington District to make it a fair count. Pake Carlton next. We would like for the author to tell us by what rule in mental arithmetic he reduced 79-80 to ¾, and 159-160 to 1-9. Also, in Verona, how he reduced 39-71 to ½, and 32-71 to ½. Does 32-71 of 16 apples equal 39-71 of the same apples? Again, Take Walton, and we will ask "Fair Count" how he reduced 24-35 to ⅔, and 61-85 to ⅔? We would also like him to give us light on his count in Florence and Taylorsport.

Now, Mr. Editor, does it not seem to you an absurd absurdity for the author of this calculation to sign himself "Fair Count?" Don't you think Boomeranger would be more appropriate? Yes, there is nothing further in his article that deserves a passing notice, so we leave him happy in his knowledge of mental arithmetic till the 6th of August, when we predict the boomerang he hurls at Mr. Conner in this canvass will return and kill him as a politician, never to be revived in Boone County.

We will now take a view of "Pons Asinorum." We have read the English language compounded into many forms and many sentences, but never in the knowledge of our research have we seen such a conglomeration of meaningless words as contained in the communication of "Pons Asinorum." In reading this communication, we could but be reminded of Mr. Alphred Jingle, the incomprehensible hanger-on to the Pickwick Club. We think that "Pons Asinorum" made a grave mistake in his signature. Judging from the peculiar forms in his article, he should have signed himself Prince Asinorum. I refer the reader to Webster's collection of phrases from foreign languages for the meaning of pons asinorum, and I feel satisfied that he will agree with me in changing the nuthor's signature to Prince Asinorum.

The author's stomach seems to be filled with the language of the spelling book, ignorant of the meaning and use of the words it contains in compounding sentences; for we are certain the head had no hand in such an unjustified butchery of the English language as contained in his article. From the peculiar race of animals with which the author, by his signature, has identified himself, we are driven to the conclusion that the whole loud-sounding thing came from his stomach. If there were anything tangible in the author's article, I would answer it; but I have been unable to discern a single thought that deserves the passing notice of the most commonplace writer. And I have concluded, Mr. Editor, that unless your correspondent, Prince Asinorum, permits his head in future, to direct his pen, I will treat with silent indifference any communication from him intended as an answer to any article I may write. I would say, by the by, Prince Asinorum——but I am am afraid that in reply he would let issue from his stomach one of those unearthly sounds so peculiar to the race of animals with which he has identified himself.

Mr. Editor, I will now have to part with your two correspondents "F. C." and "P. A.," as I wish to enter the field of reason for a few moments in endeavoring to prove that my former calculation was in the spirit, as well as the language, of the instructions of the Executive Committee.

All of the Committee agree that the object of the convention was to nominate a candidate that would represent the majority of the voters of Boone County. Now, when Mr. Conner received this majority, was not the object of the Committee achieved? and would not the action of a convention, whether in favor of or against Mr. Conner, be superfluous? Had Mr. Terrill remained on the track, a convention would have been necessary in order to obtain this result. But when he withdrew, there was no need of a convention; for, had our so-called convention followed the instructions of the Committee, it would have obtained the same result as that of the primary election.

Now, read the language of the Committee after they had determined the delegates each district was entitled to. The Committee says: "The delegates chosen shall meet in the Court-house, in Burlington, on the 2d day of July, 1877, and cast the pro rata vote of their districts, and the candidate receiving a majority of these votes," &c.

Now, the whole question turns on what is meant by pro rata vote of their districts. What vote is here referred to? Why, the vote at the primary election. Does it refer in any way to the vote cast for Tilden and Hendricks? If it does, I must confess I can not see it. Then you ask, what were the delegates appointed for? Why, in order that each district might select two, three or four delegates, according to the strength of the party in their districts, to cast the vote polled at the primary election, giving each candidate his pro rata of the vote of the district. You ask, then, how is this to be done? Why, by taking some number as a standard (say fifty), and letting it represent a vote in the convention. For instance, if Mr. Rouse had received 101 votes in Burlington, he was entitled to 2 1-50 votes in the convention, adopting 50 as the standard. Could a candidate be selected representing the majority of the voters of the Democratic party in any other manner? We say no, and defy the whole independent party to produce a man that could prove otherwise. Then, we conclude that it was immaterial whether there was one or one hundred delegates; the result would have been the same.

Then you ask how it was that Mr. Rouse received the nomination in the convention, when Mr. Connor undoubtedly received it at the polls. Why, it was done in this way: A few politicians in the county had bet all the money they had to spare on the result of the election, and, after figuring all day Sunday, they saw, by misinterpreting the Committee's language, they could break up the convention and stand a chance of saving their money through the votes of the Republican party. But in this I think they reckoned without a host, for I was talking with some of the prominent members of the Republican party, the other day, and they told me that the intelligent element of the Republican party would support Mr. Conner, the regular nominee of the Democratic party. They said they knew that the independent party expected to elect their candidate with their party's votes, but they could not conscientiously vote for an independent candidate that had been rejected by his party by a fair and impartial election; for by so doing they would violate the most sacred principles of that Republican form of government that their party had fought so bravely to preserve. I tell you, Mr. Editor, I heartily congratulated the speakers on their good sense, sound judgment and patriotism.

It has been charged the Conner party conducted the convention to beat Mr. Terrill. Let's see. The Executive Committee was composed of four men. The only one that favored and insisted on a convention was Dr. Jonas Terrill, a relative and strong supporter of Mr. Terrill, and to-day an enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Rouse. Does that sound like a Conner convention? Not until Mr. Rouse was beaten at the polls did they conceive the plan of counting the vote that was adopted by the Returning Board, of which the Rouse delegates were the leading spirits.

Feeling confident that Boone County contains enough just and honorable men to elect Mr. Conner, the representative of the people, we will conclude this article.

JUSTICE.

P. S.—We omitted to take notice of Mr. D. M. Snyder's article. Well, I must confess that I haven't much to say about it. It takes too much figuring to count in a candidate by his rule. Well, I suppose his conscience hurt him, and he had to do it for relief. I believe he was a member of the Returning Board. It looks a little suspicious that, among all the calculations of the members of the Returning Board, no two of them agree. There must be a crack in their rule somewhere. It looks like it requires too much hedging to save themselves. J.

Petersburg Items.

That the warm weather and consequent laziness laid your correspondent from here on the shelf last week, was most fortunate, as it gave more room than there otherwise would have been for the lively discussers of the political situation to spread themselves in. The interesting articles should have more special notice, Mr. Editor; where is your criticising pen?

As a cheerful indication that the candidates have unanimously concluded to trust to luck until after August 6th, we note the fact not one of them has shown himself since the convention. Why they don't dash on their war paint, shoulder their little tomahawks, and proceed to save us from the wrath to come, is one of the unpenetrable mysteries of political tactics.

We expect a long and cheerful blast from that Henderson horn this week, blown by Robert Along, in recognition of the "old dispensation" as it crops out in the platform published last week. That is if the warm weather don't make away him, as it has already done once.

How would it do to suggest to Bro. D. M. Snyder that he made at least two mistakes in his long fractions last week? one in the Taylorsport vote and the most serious in his addition; as by the figures he gives, Rouse's majority in the convention is less than one-half a vote, when in reality it is about eleven-twelfths. The figures of "Fair Count" are correct to the splitting of a hair.

The communication of "Pons Asinorum" is a pithy one, full of solemn facts, and it is to be hoped may be to "Justice" what the name of the writer indicates that it is intended to be, a pons asinorum.

If that long To-be-Continued correspondent with a "P. S." who bursts so brilliantly upon us from the Petersburg and Burlington X Roads last week, don't change his boarding-house and bar accommodations from the Southern to the St. Nicholas, where a milder article of diffusible stimulant is used, he will look up out of that hole in the ground where his town is, some morning, and add a few feet more to the present altitude he has given the location. Why, it is a common thing for an ordinary hound on the chase of a fox to jump clear over the whole town from one hill to the other, with no further inconvenience to himself than that occasioned by inhaling his lungs full of the peculiarly sulphurous gas that rises from the factory.

If the affectionate seeker for Te-rewth a la Chudband, had been careful to attend a certain theological discussion in the Recorder city last fall, he would have had his questions voluminously answered. As it is, his best chance now is either to refer to a certain volume called the Bible, or else wait until he "shuffles off the mortal coil."

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Business was quiet last week. The stock market was fair; there were about 50 horses sold at auction; the offerings were better than they have been for two or three weeks, but still not enough to supply the demand. They brought from $35 to $160 for fair to good plugs; choice horses brought from $75 to $125. Mules are in demand at good prices.

The cattle market was fair; the offerings were fair with a steady demand; choice butchers' sold at 4@4½c; medium to good, 3@4c.

There was a slight decline in sheep and lambs; old sheep sold at 3@4c; lambs, at 3½@5c.

Hogs—There was an advance of 25@50c. per cwt. in the price of hogs.

The poultry market was steady. Old chickens a little scarce at $2 50@3 per doz; young chickens plentiful at $1@2 50 per dozen.

There was a demand for good butter at 12@13½c; choice table brought 14@17c; the market was stocked with common at 10c.

Eggs steady at 8c.

Feathers—Choice geese, 45c; mixed lots at 25@35c.

Wool—The prices remain firm; heavy wool at 15@20c; black wool at 18@25c; grease, 25@40c; combings, 32@36c; tub washed 38@40c.

The grain market is steady; amber white wheat at $1 20@1 25, and fair to good $1 15@1 20.

New rye, No. 2, 60c.

Oats—New No. 2, 30c; mixed and white oats, 33@34 on the track or levee, or at store in sacks, 40@42.

Corn, 60@63c. in bulk on the track, or delivered in sacks at 60@62c.

Vegetables—Market unchanged except in a few instances. Onions advanced 25 to 50c. per brl.; Roasting ears declined to $1@2 per brl.; tomatoes bring $1 50@2 per bushel; new sweet potatoes are coming in at $2@3 per bushel.

Choice apples, $1 50@2 50 per barrel; peaches, $3 per bushel; common $1 50@2; pears bring $3@7 per barrel; blackberries, $2@3 per stand; plumbs unchanged.

The tobacco market was active; no material change in prices. F. M. F.

Tributes of Respect.

At a stated meeting of Burlington Lodge, No. 264, F. and A. M., the following preamble and resolutions, relative to the death of Bro. Oscar Crisler, were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Grand Master of the Universe to call our beloved Brother Oscar Crisler, from our midst here on earth to that temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, therefore, expressive of the sentiments of this lodge, be it

Resolved, That while we deplore the death of our beloved Brother, and grieve at the loss we have sustained by his departure from us, yet we submit with reverence to the edict that called him from hence, and feel assured that our loss is his gain.

Resolved, That we tender to his family our heart-felt sympathy in this their great affliction, that has deprived them of a kind, indulgent father and devoted husband, and bid them look to Him who can heal all sorrow for consolation, and who has promised to be a husband to the widow and father to the fatherless.

Resolved, That this lodge be draped in mourning and the members wear the usual badge for thirty days, and that a memorial page be inscribed upon the lodge record to his memory.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the lodge, and that the Secretary transmit a copy to the widow of Brother Oscar Crisler, and a copy to the Boone County RECORDER for publication.

At a regular meeting of Excelsior Grange No. 717, held in their hall in Boone County, Ky., July 14th, 1877, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted, to wit:

WHEREAS, In the providence of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, it has pleased Him to remove from our midst by death our highly esteemed Sister Mary Ann Grubbs, wife of Lafayette Grubbs, who departed this life May 4th, 1877, in the 42d year of her age, after several months of extreme suffering, caused by cancer, and called her from toils and pains here on earth to rest and happiness, we hope, in heaven, and that to her name is due this tribute of respect,

Resolved, That while we humbly submit to the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well, we sincerely mourn the loss of a Sister whom we knew to be kind and charitable, always ready to administer to the wants of the distressed, and whose exemplary life as a friend and neighbor, and as a wife and mother, was worthy our highest admiration and esteem.

Resolved, That we proffer our heart-felt condolence and sincerest sympathy to her husband and children in the afflicting dispensation of God, by which he has been bereft of a lovely and devoted wife and they deprived of a kind and affectionate mother.

Resolved, That this preamble and resolutions be spread upon the records of this Grange, a copy sent to the family of our deceased Sister, and copies to the Cincinnati Grange Bulletin, the Commonwealth and the Boone County RECORDER for publication.

THE SECRET OF MASONRY.

The story is told of a Mason's wife
Who plagued him almost out of his life
To learn the secret—whatever it be—
The mystic words of Masonry.
Said he, "Now, Mary, if I should tell
The awful words, I know very well
When you get mad, my darling dear,
You'll rip them out, that all may hear."
Said she, "Oh, Edward, Never! Never!
They'll rest in my heart a recess forever!
Tell me, Edward, and never more
Shall I scold or fret or slam the door;
And I'll try to be quiet with all my might,
No matter what how you come in at night."
No man, unless he was made of wood,
Could resist an offer so fair and good;
So he said, "Now, Mary, my woe or weal,
Depends on the words I'm about to reveal."
"Oh, Ned," she answered, "you may depend,
I'll keep the secret till life shall end."
Said he, "The secret that Masonry screens
The awful words are—Pork and Beans!"
Scarcely a week had passed away,
When Mary got mad, and what did she say?
She shouted out that all might hear,
"Pork and beans! Ive got you there!"

The Government and the Mexican Scheme.

Territorial extension to embrace the five rich auriferous States of northern Mexico is not a subject new to the people. The enlargement of the bounds of the nation, though not always favored by the whole people, has ever been a favorite theme with a large and influential class, and every occasion has been seized to press the national importance of such a measure upon the government. A few days ago, Senor Mata, the duly accredited Diplomatic Representative of the Diaz Government in Mexico, arrived here with proper credentials from the new President. He also bears with him some documents of a decidedly positive character, not the least important of which is the order to General Trevino, to resist any attempt on the part of the American military commanders on the Rio Grande to pursue, capture and arrest Mexican marauders upon Mexican soil, as authorized by the government of the United States. The presence of Senor Mata, it is ascertained, will have no effect to change the determination of the American Government at this late day to protect its citizens on the Mexican border in its own way. The Mexican authorities have repeatedly had their attention called to their violation of international rights, have promised to remedy the causes of complaint, and have as often omitted to carry their promises into execution. It is for this reason that our government has taken this decisive step, and as was observed at the Department of State yesterday: "We will adhere to the resolution on the Mexican border question, which we have reached after careful consideration. If Mexico does not wish it carried, then let her authorities remove the cause. The orders to Trevino have been laid before his government. If he wishes to devote his attention to protecting the borders against pursuit of Mexican marauders across the Rio Grande, instead of keeping the marauders in the first place on his side of the line, he will be gratified, if occasion for the punishment of Mexican cattle thieves should arrive." The improved sentiment on the part of the Mexican authorities since the inauguration of the new policy is shown in their disposition to avail themselves of the extradition treaty and to surrender some of the most notorious offenders, such as Cortina. A salutary use of hemp or ball upon a few such notorious characters would unquestionably summarily dispose of the Mexican question. The Secretary of State, however, does not think much of this process of restoring peace. He said to-day, "Extradition may be well enough in a country with established courts of law, juries, and a police, but in a wild ungoverned country, where the criminal may even be without a name to identify him from his companions, the enforcement of the terms of an extradition treaty would be impracticable."

Official advices received but a few days ago state that Diaz has established a force along the Rio Grande to check these marauders' expeditions. This, the Secretary of State says, "is the first instance of tangible measures on the part of the Mexican Government to control its own people, and to fulfill its obligations." He anticipates, as a consequence, security and order. The recognition of the Diaz government is certain at an early day. The stress laid by Senator Blaine, in his Woodstock speech, on the dangers of the Mexican policy of the Government is considered here as a sort of counter-irritant to divert the public mind from a course so popular with the people, and which is likely to rally a large share of the recalcitrant elements now dissatisfied with the Southern policy to the side of the administration.

"PLEASE make yourself quite at home, General," observes the hospitable British aristocrat to General Grant. "Put your legs right hup on the table and spit hon the floor, just as you do in Hamerica. Never mind the carpet. Hand by all means whittle the chair with your jack-knife. Hi know you must feel like it—you all whittle your furniture in Hamerica."

NEIGHBORLY Telegrams—Can't stop a minute—baby's crying; but I just ran over to tell you Mrs. Jones' husband came home a moment ago just as unsteady on his legs as he could be. Only think! Must go—knew you were not at the window. Good bye, love.

Husband and Wife.

Of course, quarreling between husband and wife in public is very vulgar; so is love-making. Among our acquaintances is sure to be at least one pair of turtle-doves who make love to each other in the most barefaced manner, and quietly ignore the calming presence of bystanders in the rapture and endearments to which they so frankly deliver themselves. If they have been separated for a few hours, they rush into each others' arms with a fervor that might be condoned as a public manifestation had they been separated or were going to be separated for years. As an expression of joy at their reunion after perhaps a few hours' absence, it is puerile and unseemly. No matter who is there—the self-restrained wife, reticent and modest; the satirical man of the world, intolerant of all kinds of gush and contemptuous of unrestraint; burned out age or unwakened youth—it is all one; they give way to the ecstacy of the moment, kiss, and hug, and fondle, and hang about each other with every endearing epithet, every jesture and expression of delight, so that the well-bred stare in wonder, and the sensitive blush for shame. Other vulgarities are to be found in the way in which some husbands and wives banter each other in public; they mean no harm, but they put their friends to discomfort by the manner in which they play at crimination, and by the hard-looking pellets—really nothing but moss and wool, mere "property" accusations—which they fling at each other without cessation. You, who have not le mat Æmigme do not quite understand the meaning of it all. You think him rough, her teasing, and both rude; but to themselves it is only a little comedy which they are enacting to their own satisfaction, howsoever to the embarrassment of the bystanders. When the husband accuses his wife of various faults, any one of which would be a serious failure of morality, you, the bystander, do not know how to take it. If real, you feel your respect for the woman ooze out like Bob Acre's courage; if not real, the husband, to your mind, deserves horse-whipping; that is, supposing he means what he says. When you come to the knowledge that this is banter, and that they are a little comely between themselves, you simply relegate them to that large army of conjugal vulgarians whose society you do not affect, and wish that they would go elsewhere to transact their small and silly pretenses, and leave you to the enjoyment of their absence, since there is none in their presence.

Hood on Courtship.

Hood in his "vista of the ludicrous side of life," says, in reference to courtship:

We like short courtships, and in this Adam acted sensibly—he fell asleep a bachelor and awoke to find himself a married man. He appears to have popped the question almost immediately after meeting Mademoiselle Eve, and she, without any flirtation or shyness, gave him a kiss and herself. Of that first kiss in the world, we have had, however, our thoughts; and sometimes, in a poetical mood, wished we were the man "wot did it." But the deed is done—the chance was Adam's and he improved it.

We like the notion of getting married in a garden. It is in good taste. We like a private wedding. Adam's was strictly private. No envious beaux were there; no croaking old maids; no chattering aunts or grumbling grandmothers nor mismated married sisters of the bride were there. The birds of heaven were the minstrels; and the glad sky flung its light upon the scene.

One thing about the first wedding brings queer ideas to us in spite of its Scriptural truth. Adam and his wife were rather young to be married (some two or three days old, according to the sagest speculations of theologians), mere babies—larger but not older—without experience, without a house, without pot or kettle, without anything—but love and Eden.

A MASONIC lodge in Indiana was presided over by a Master who had an exaggerated notion of discipline. One night he met his Lodge in called meeting (not a member absent) to instruct them in the work. Teaching them the use of the gavel, he had just called them up with three knocks, when he leaned too far back, fell to the ground, four stories, and broke his neck. Picked up next morning, he was buried decently, but not a Mason came to the funeral. More strange still, not a Mason appeared any more in that village. It was inexplicable. Forty women left widows, 220 children left orphans, 84 merchants left in the lurch with unpaid bills. Twenty years after that, somebody went up into the fourth story, broke open the door and beheld the lodge—a lodge of skeletons! Strange, but true, they had strictly obeyed the orders of the W. M., and waiting for the knock to seat them, starved to death. Each was standing in an attitude of respectful attention, "looking to the east," and had not pitying citizens taken them down, they would have been standing there still. Such is life.—St. Joseph Herald.

"HI, where did yez get them trowsers?" asked an Irishman of a man who happened to be passing with a pair of remarkably short trowsers on. "I got them where they grew," was the indignant reply. "Then, by my conscience," said Paddy, "you've pulled them a year too soon."

A "HORRIBLE" affair occurred at Loveland, Ohio, on the 4th, when Hon. Will Cumback was delivering his address, causing "intense" excitement. It came about in this way: On the outskirts of the crowd a toad hopped up the pant-leg of one of the spectators, where he was instantly followed by a garter snake which was chasing him, and both the "varmints" arrived safely in the seat of his pantaloons, at which stage of affairs the beseiged individual beat a hasty retreat to the woods, and was proceeding to remove his garments when a carriage load of ladies drove up. Unable to endure his agony any longer, he bowed himself over and one of his friends hammered him with an umbrella until his snakeship surrendered his lease on life.

A THICK-HEADED Squire, being worsted by Sydney Smith in an argument, took his revenge by exclaiming, "If I had a son who was an idiot I would make him a parson." "Very likely," replied Sydney, "but I see your father was of a different opinion."

IT doesn't do a bit of good to go to a picnic, and stand on the river bank and admire the gorgeous sunset, and talk about the tender beauties of nature to a man who has just sat down on a custard pie.

HE ran three squares after what he thought was a street-car light; and after he got out of breath, he laid down on a doorstep, disgusted to find out that it was only a lightning bug on his spectacles.

WHEN a Portland man called another citizen a fool he was arrested and made to prove it. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the defendant had been duly found a fool.

A TENNESSEE girl riding on the cars crossed the aisle, kicked a young man up against the window, and remarked, "I was brung up never to allow a yaller-eyed man to wink at me."

DON'T go to Chicago to suicide. The papers of that city have got so they only give a real good case a three line notice.

It Will Come.

The bolt will fall. There will be a terrible crash. Fraud, forgery and perjury will not always triumph. Before the autumn frosts we look for new revelations of the way the work was done in Louisiana.

We are informed that both Mr. Hayes and the most intelligent members of his cabinet are living in constant apprehension of disclosures in the light of which it would be morally impossible for them to continue to hold office.

Their fears are well-founded. The conspiracy was too comprehensive to be permanently successful. The secrets were in the possession of too many to be securely kept.

Mr. Hayes is in a very weak position, and is likely to be in a worse one. With the fraudulent character of his election judicially established, and at the samo time three-fourths of the Republican party bitterly dissatisfied with him, how is he going to get along? The Southerners will junket him, and then vote against him to a man. What is he going to do when the crisis comes, as come it will?—N. Y. Sun.

A Trillion.

A trillion is a word easily written and easily spoken, and we know it is a million times a million; but who is able to count it? You count say 200 per minute; then an hour would produce 12,000, a day 288,000 and a year 105,120,000. Let us suppose that Adam, at the beginning of his existence, had begun to count, had continued to do so, and was counting still, he would not even now have counted enough; for to count a trillion, he would require 9,612 years, 34 days, 5 hours and 20 minutes. If we were to allow him 12 hours daily for rest and food, he would need 19,024 years, 68 days, 10 hours and 40 minutes in which to count a trillion.

SPEAKING of the prosperity of Virginia, the Danville News says: Twelve years ago Richmond, with 45,000 inhabitants, lay half in ruins. Now she has rebuilt the whole of the burnt district, has established two hundred factories, and with a population of 75,000 people is the handsomest city in the world. Norfolk ships near 1,000,000 bales of cotton this year, and has developed a trade in vegetables, fruit and fish which has extended through our great Northern cities, across the Atlantic, and has increased the value of lands in the adjoining counties many hundred fold.

THE DYING SAILOR BOY.

See yon vessel swiftly sailing!
Hear the shouts on board resound!
Why is all this great rejoicing?
Happy sailors homeward bound.

See yon harbor in the distance!
Soon the good ship will be there,
And the brave and hardy sailors
Then will rest from toil and care.

But there's one among the number,
Lying in his bunk below,
Who will never see the harbor,
Nor another greeting know.

On his brow the death-damp gathers,
Still he calls, again—again:
"Shall I meet you once more mother?
Must my hopes be all in vain?

"I can feel the soft breeze blowing,
Coming from the land I love;
And I hear your sweet voice calling,
But a voice calls from above.

"Though your hands I'm almost clasping,
And your lips mine almost press,
Yet, I'm going, mother, going
To that land of happiness.

"Even now I see you waiting,
Watching at the cottage door,
Ready for a happy meeting,
But I shall return no more.

"God has willed it so, dear mother,
To him all my trust is given;
Rides the vessel now at anchor—
Farewell, till we meet in Heaven."

History of the Small-Pox.

How small-pox first arose among men it is difficult to conjecture. It has been supposed that it may have been originally derived from some disease in the camel. Its history leads to the settled belief that, while few persons are not readily susceptible of it, it never occurs now except from contagion. It does not appear to have been known in Europe till the beginning of the eighth century. No mention of any such disease is to be found in the Greek or Roman authors of antiquity. Now, whatever may have been the deficiencies of these ancient physicians, they were excellent observers and capital describers of disease; and it seems to me scarcely possible that a disease so diffusive, and marked by characters so definite and conspicuous, should have escaped their notice, or, if known, should have been obscurely portrayed in their writings. On the other hand, Mr. Moore, in his learned and interesting "History of Small-pox," has shown that it prevailed in China and Hindostan from a very early period—even more than one thousand years before the advent of our Saviour. That it did not sooner make its way westward into Persia, and thence into Greece, may be attributed partly to the horror which the complaint everywhere inspired, and the attempts which were consequently made to check its progress by prohibiting all communication with the sick, partly to the limited intercourse which took place among Eastern nations, but principally to the peculiar position of the regions through which the infection was distributed, separated as they were from the rest of the world by immense deserts and by the ocean. The disease is said to have broken out in Arabia, at the siege of Mecca, in the year in which Mohammed was born, i. e., in the latter half of the sixth century. It was widely propagated by his wars, and by those of the Arabs afterward; and it is generally believed to have first found entrance into Europe at the time of the overthrow of the Gothic monarchy in Spain by the Moors, when, to avenge the well-known outrage upon his daughter, "Count Julian called the invaders." Whensoever and wheresoever it came, it spread with fearful rapidity and havoc. What is worthy of special remark is this, that while almost all men are prone to take the disorder, large portions of the world have remained for centuries entirely free from it, until at length it was imported, and that it then infallibly diffused and established itself in those parts. Of the more modern history of the disease, our knowledge is more precise and sure. It tends uniformly to the same conclusion. There was no small-pox in the New World before its discovery by Columbus in 1492. In 1517 the disease was imported into Santo Domingo. Three years later, in one of the Spanish expeditions from Cuba to Mexico, a negro covered with the pustules of small-pox was landed on the Mexican coast. From him the disease spread with such desolation that within a very short time, according to Robertson, 3,500,000 people were destroyed within that kingdom alone. Small-pox was introduced into Iceland in 1707, when 16,000 persons were carried off by its ravages—more than a fourth part of the whole population of the island. It reached Greenland still later, appearing there for the first time in 1733, and spreading so fatally as to almost depopulate the country. Evidence of the same effect is furnished by results of vaccination in some countries. To take one instance: Vaccination was adopted in Denmark in 1801 and made compulsory. From that time small-pox disappeared altogether for fifteen years, whereas during the twelve years preceding the introduction of the preventive disorder, upward of three thousand persons died of the smallpox in Copenhagen alone.—Nineteenth Century.

COOT, but not always collected—An ice bill.

Capital and Labor.

It is not uncommon to hear persons complain very bitterly of corporations. They are denounced as oppressive, grinding, tyrannical. We hear it said that they must be put down and crushed out; that they are great monopolics, sucking the life-blood out of the country. These and many similar expressions are based upon some sort of vague idea that corporations are vast dragon-like monsters that have sprung up out of the earth to prey upon its inhabitants. We would like to say a word that would abate as much as possible this unreasonable hostility to corporations. Possibly we may be able to suggest thoughts that will be of value just now, when discontent has broken out into open violence, and has caused much destruction of corporate as well as private property. Individual efforts and individual capital can not build great works of internal improvement. All the great enterprises in the country which bring progress and prosperity are necessarily established by combined effort and combined capital. The only method by which capital and effort can be combined, is by corporate organization. No individual can build and operate a railroad. The telegraph is made available only by means of corporations. Large factories of every description; large newspapers, canals, steamboat lines, insurance companies, &c., are all operated by the instrumentality of corporations.

This is the only method by which sufficient capital can be aggregated to carry on these industrial enterprises. They all employ multitudes of hands. Thousands upon thousands find the means of making a living for themselves and families by working for corporations. Destroy corporations and these are all thrown out of employment. Whenever we read of the destruction by fire of some great manufactory, we read that hundreds of hands have been deprived of the means of making a living. The combination of capital by corporate organization for the purpose of carrying on the great industrial pursuits of our great country is one of the blessings for which working people should be thankful. They of all others are most interested in the establishment and prosperity of such institutions; and they are the unfortunate ones who suffer most when corporate enterprise is crippled.

The great lines of railroads that spread like net-work over the United States are not greedy monsters which have sprung up of the earth to devour and destroy. They have been built by the surplus capital drawn from thousands of pockets by means of corporate organization and enterprise. The same may be said of other institutions.

Now it is of the utmost consequence that capital should be invited to this sort of investment, rather than be driven away to other enterprises, or be hoarded up and not used at all. There is room in this country for more railroads; we are constantly talking about the encouragement of manufacturers. We want great factories built in our midst about the falls of the Ohio, but men who have money will not use it in this way if there is a probability, or even a pretty fair chance, that discontented employes will turn in and burn up the factories and destroy the railroads. English capital has sought investment in the industrial enterprises in this country. Capital from New England has come out West, and thereby employment has been given to thousands of men. It will be easy to give the alarm to this capital, and if capital ceases to supply the places for work, the laboring men must expect to see harder times than they do now. There is a fable of a man who killed the goose that laid the golden eggs. This is not an inapt illustration of the bad policy of those who destroy the railroad and machine shops, where they can only expect to find work. Weaken faith in the great corporations, and the laboring man must seek elsewhere for employment, for capital will cease to be used in such enterprises if confidence in them is lost.—Louisville Commercial.

THE Calhoon Progress man, in an unguarded moment, printed some things in his paper about us last week, and we went over and sat down on him. We then picked him up and spread him out all over ten square feet of ground. We drove his spinal column clear up through the crown of his hat. We ran our blue gingham umbrella down his throat and hoisted it. We put a Mansard roof over one eye, and let a gory awning down over the other. We impaled him on the blunted point of a carving-knife and spun him around like a button on a smoke-house door. We brass-knucked him over eight hundred times, and then only withdrew for the want of something solid to hit at. He was as boneless as a beef liver when we got through with him, and we ordered his "remains" packed in a sardine box, to be sent, with our compliments, to one of his harems at the North. We always pulverize editors who call us Turkish names and things.—Owensboro Examiner.

Mr. Smith's Boy.

A family named Smith has recently moved to Germantown, and Mr. Brown's boy, on Saturday, leaned over the fence and gave to our reporter his impressions of Mr. Smith's boy, a lad about 14 years old.

"Yes, me and him are right well acquainted now; he knows more'n I do, and he's had more experience. Bill says his father used to be a robber (Smith, by the way, is a deacon in the Presbyterian Church and a very excellent lawyer) and that he has ten million dollars in gold buried in his cellar, a'ong with a whole lot of human bones—people he's killed. And he says his father is a conjurer, and that he makes all the earthquakes that happen anywhere in the world; the old man'll come home at night, after there's been an earthquake, all covered with sweat and so tired he kin hardly stand. Bill says it's such hard work.

"And Bill told me that once, when a man came round there trying to sell lightning rods, his father got mad and et him right up; and he takes bites out of everybody he comes across. That's what Bill tells me; that's all I know about it. And he told me that once he used to have a dog—one of those little kind of dogs—and he was flying his kite, and, just for fun, he tied the kite-string onto his dog's tail; and then the wind struck her, and his dog went a boomin' down street, with his hind legs in the air, for about a mile, when the kite of a sudden began to go up, and in about a minute the dog was fifteen miles high, and commanding a view of California and Egypt, and Oshkosh, I think Bill said. He came down anyhow, I know, in Brazil, and Bill said he swum home all the way in the Atlantic Ocean, and when he landed his legs were all nibbled off by sharks. I wish father'd buy me a dog, so's I could send him up that way; but I never have no luck.

"Bill said that where they used to live he went out on the roof one day to fly his kite, and he sat on top of the chimbly to give her plenty of room; and, while he was sitting there thinking about nothing, the old man put a keg of powder down below on the fireplace to clean the soot out of the chimbly; and when he touched her off Bill was blowed over agin the Baptist church steeple, and he landed on the weathercock, with his pants torn, and they couldn't get him down for three days; so he hung there, going round and round with the wind, and he lived by eating the crows that came and sat on him, because they thought he was sheet iron, and put up there on purpose.

"He's had more fun than enough. He was telling me, the other day, about a sausage-stuffer his brother invented. It was a kind of machine that works with a treadle, and Bill said that the way they did it in the fall was to fix it on the hog's back, and connect the treadle with a string, and then the hog'd work the treadle, and keep on running it up and down, until the machine cut the hog all up fine and shoved the meat into the skins. Bill said his brother called it 'Every Hog Its Own Stuffer,' and it worked splendid. But I do'no; 'pears to me's if there couldn't be no machine like that. But, anyway, Bill said so.

"And he told me about an uncle of his out in Australia who was et by a big oyster once, and when he got inside he stayed there until he'd et the oyster. Then he split the shells open and took one for a boat, and he sailed along until he met a sea-serpent, and he killed it and drawed off its skin, and when he got home he sold it to an engine company for a hose, for forty thousand dollars, to put out fires with. Bill said that was actually so, because he could show me a man who used to belong to the engine company. I wish father'd let me go out to find a sea serpent like that; but he don't let me have no chance to distinguish myself.

"Bill was saying, only yesterday, that the Indians caught him once and drove eleven railroad spikes through his stomach and cut off his scalp and never hurt him a bit. He said he got away by the daughter of a chief snaking him out of the wigwam and lending him a horse. Bill says she was in love with him; and when I asked him to let me see the holes where they drove in those spikes, he said he darsn't take off his clothes, or he'd bleed to death. He said his own father didn't know it, because Bill was afraid it might worry the old man.

"And Bill told me they wasn't going to get him to go to Sunday-school. He says his father has a brass idol that he keeps in the garret, and Bill says he's made up his mind to be a pagan, and begin to go naked, and carry a tomahawk and a bow and arrow as soon as warm weather comes. And to prove it to me, he says his father has the town all underlaid with nigro-glycerine, and, as soon as he gets ready, he's going to blow the whole thing out and bust her up—let her rip and demolish her. He said so down at the dam, and told me not to tell anybody, but I thought they'd be no harm in mentioning it to you.

"And now I believe I must be going. I hear Bill a-whistling. Maybe he's got something else to tell me."—Exchange.

DURING the election for the representation of East Aberdeenshire, one of the ministers in a rural parish, canvassing one day among his parishioners, came across one of them who was a staunch Liberal, and at once commenced scunding him on the subject. "I suppose they'll be all sound up this way, John?" "I daursay they are." "Of course, John, you'll be going to vote for our side?" "That's my business." A DISTINGUISHED clergyman lately preached an eloquent sermon on "faith" in which he took the ground that it was the source of all power and achievement, and more trustworthy than any physical or material advantage. While he was going home after church, one of his congregation, accosting him, said he was expecting to be assaulted by a bully whom he had offended, and good-humoredly inquired if he should trust to faith or muscle in the impending contest. "To faith—by all means to faith," earnestly responded the preacher; "but," he instantly added, and with a gesture suited to the occasion, "you must show your faith by your works."

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

Editor and Proprietor.

BURLINGTON, KY., AUGUST 2.

Announcements.

We are authorized to announce L. C. NORMAN as a Democratic candidate for State Senator, at the August election, 1877.

We are authorized to announce JAS L. HENDERSON as a candidate for the Legislature.

We are authorized to announce REUBEN CONNER as a candidate for County Representative, at the August election, 1877.

We are authorized to announce GRANVILLE V. ROUSE as a candidate for County Representative, at the August election, 1877.

WE this week received a voluminous calculation, devoted to the division of the delegate vote in the late convention, but the pressure upon our columns forced its non appearance. The gentleman who did the work is considered the "boss" mathematician of the county. He says that the calculations made by "Justice," "Fair Count," and D. M. Snyder are all wrong. The solution is based upon the rules of partnership. He starts off by saying that "Rouse and Conner engage in trade in the Petersburg district. Rouse furnishes 115 and Conner 30 votes as a consideration. They gain 4 delegates. What is each man's share?" Rouse's part, he makes 115-145 and Conner's 30-145 of the 4 delegates." This rule he applies to each district in the county, and as a result gives Rouse of a vote majority. It is an adage that figures won't lie, but in the cart load of solutions that have been showered in upon us since the 1st Monday in June, we find no two agreeing as to the result. The problem, the offspring of the primary election and convention, is certainly an anomaly.

THE Democrats of Ohio have nominated R. M. Bishop, of Cincinnati, for Governor. In the platform they declare that hereafter a person receiving a minority of the popular vote and a minority of the electoral vote shall not be inaugurated President. They denounce the inauguration of Hayes but indorse his Southern policy, the Resumption Act they demand repealed, declare greenbacks the best money the United States ever had, and oppose contraction.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 28, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Saturday evening has come and I take my pen in my hand to send you a few lines from this side of the Father of Waters. But where to begin or where to leave off I know not. You could not expect me, even were I ever so gifted with the pen, to give you a bare intimation of the troubles of the week. Our daily papers have each had from 15 to 20 columns per day of scenes and incidents of the times, yet we venture half has not been told. All branches of business have been suspended for the entire week, and for the past three days nearly all the stores in the city have been closed. The great railroad strike as it is termed, reached East St. Louis this evening a [illegible] ago, spreading over this entire [illegible] Sunday and Monday following [illegible] week, and [illegible] yesterday morning, our city was completely at the mercies of an infuriated mob, and not until yesterday about noon was there the least check given the roughs who seemed to have things their own way. But to-day our better citizens are hopeful, and by the middle of the coming week we think every vestige of riot will be wiped out. We have on duty at this time, about 600 police proper, about 15,000 regular soldiers and about 10,000 armed and well drilled citizens. Arrests of the ring leaders of the mob are being made every hour in the day, so we think by the middle of the coming week, railroad trains and business generally will move on as usual, and then it will only remain to be seen whether our executors of law will do their duty in meting out justice to the fellows who brought about all the trouble. We fear they will not. No very serious damage to property has been done, with the exception of the breaking into one bakery, two or three grocery stores and the burning of one or two old buildings. But had our citizens not closed their places of business, and organized as they have, there is no telling what amount of theft and robbery there would have been committed to-day and to-morrow. Passenger trains went out on some few of the roads yesterday evening, and some few of the roads are receiving freight to-day. It is also the intention of all the roads to send out their usual passenger trains this evening. While we are speaking of matters and things on this side of the river, we may as well say the United States troops took possession of railroads at East St. Louis this morning and we may reasonably conclude by Monday next, all trains from there will go out on time. As intimated, we can not even think of giving you a bare outline of the scenes and incidents of the week, and having let you know we, in common with all other large cities of the Union, have been full sharers in the troubles of the times we will now bid adieu to that gloomy subject.

As we further proceed with our communication, we are solemnly reminded that this is the last opportunity we will have to blow our horn and shoot off our gun in favor of him, for whom we have battled so nobly, viz: Col. Henderson and the Old Dispensation. Let us, in our valedictory, say to the voters of your county as they go to the polls on next Monday week, think of Baltimore—think of Pittsburg—think of Cincinnati—think of St. Louis and before you cast your ballot, remember, under the old dispensation every fellow run his own wagon, had as many dogs as it pleased him to keep, and srikes were never heard of—If you rightly understand Col. Henderson, he is opposed to all strikes and in favor of every man owning and running his own road. Think well of these things we say, and never let it be said of old Boone, that the good people of that county are opposed to the doctrines of the Fathers, and are in favor of high taxatiyn and disorder. A repudiation of all these new fangled things can be done by casting your ballot for Col. Henderson and the Old Dispensation. Yours truly,

BOB A. LONG.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Petersburg.

A genuine, live singing-school in full blast is one of the stirring sensations at present. It is to be supplemented with a concert next Wednesday night, to which everybody, of course is invited, and the small consideration of two bits admits the auditor to the best seat in the house. There are about 60 voices, some of them professional stars, and the entertainment will doubtless be first-class.

Rev. W. S. Keene has returned from Florida, where he has lately purchased farms for himself and Dr. J. E. Terrill. Bro. Keene has painted the glories of the land as beautifully enticing as those former pilgrims who reported on the richness of Palestine, and now we confidently expect a general uprising among the farmers of our town next winter, and a descent on the submerged forests of the Florida everglades.

In view of the approaching exhibition of stock, &c., at our annual fair at Florence, we notice that the handsome three-year-old bay horse belonging to Mr. J. D. Norris has been taken into a thorough course of training by that experienced gentleman, James Riddell, Esq., of the plains of Hebron, and the Directors of the aforesaid fair have ordered a half dozen bolts extra of blue ribbon. We confidently expect to see him (the horse, not Riddell) wear the whole length of it.

Among other distinguished names on the register at Loder House last week, were those of Joseph Wagstaff, of Florence, and Reuben Conner, of Walton. All the marriageable widows and old maids in the town held their breath and trembled with uneasiness until they left. Of course no one but an old bach, or a widower would be so far from home on a courting expedition such warm weather as this.

Plattsburg.

The buzz of the thresher is now the music of the land, and the sturdy Granger is reaping the fruits of his summer's toil. The wheat is shelling out bountifully, and it now appears that the call of the millions for cheap bread will be responded to.

Blackberry gathering is now at hand, and all who pursue that business for a little pin money are busily engaged—

Picking berries in the hot sun,
Improving each burning minute;
Not for the sake of simple fun,
But because there's millions in it.

It is very often of late days thus someone gets upon his ear about local politics, but one evening last week it appeared that we were to enjoy a first-class set-to between Capt. Cason, of the evening berry line and Terry Sweeny, keeper of the livery stable on North High street. The dispute was about some blackberries which were not quite up to the standard in measure. All were eager for the parties to lock horns, but, after Terry changed awhile like a little dog in high rye, he cooled down and said it beat Conner's whisky on the day of the election.

Pursuant to a call, the Oriental Canines [illegible] Thursday night, to consider political situation.—Old Ring Finn, since the last meeting having become politically disabled, Bulger was called to the chair. The first duty of the turbulent body was a parade through the streets. After the march was completed, several pups were initiated, when a general fight took place, and a few discharges of double-barrel pieces dispersed the rioters without accomplishing their object.

The wind, a few evenings since, blew down a tree on a cow belonging to Richard Wilson and killed her—the only cow the poor man had. DON JUAN.

Explanation Wanted.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

1. Some one of your correspondents in his calculation muddle throws out five delegates. Does he not thereby destroy the convention as a regular one, and substitute another in its place not called by the County Committee?

2. Does he not, by throwing out five delegates, disfranchise two hundred and fifty of the Democratic voters of the county, or silence their votes in the convention?

3. If such disfranchisement were carried out, and applied to every county in the State, would not the achievements of J. M. Wells, &c., to this be as the glow worm to the noonday sun?

4. Was not the order of the Committee understood?

5. With a majority against a candidate can he of right hold the track, Democratically speaking?

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Notwithstanding the strike, and the difficulties in the way of shipping, the markets remain firm, with no material change over last quotations. Cattle have advanced in the East from 4 to 6 cents per pound, with but few on the market, and they are of an inferior article. Common cattle sold in New York, last week, at from 12c. to 14c. Hogs also advanced 6c. to 6½c., the receipts at New York being from 2,000 to 3,000 per day less than usual. The receipts in our market were also lighter than usual, but prices remain about the same. There was a slight advance the last of the week on extra shippers', with none on the market. The hog market remains firm at 4@4½c. Sheep also firm at 3 @3½c. Lambs, 3c. to 4c.

The receipts for the week were: Cattle, 1,025; hogs, 2,450; sheep, 3,275; horses and mules, 75.

The leaf tobacco market has been still for a week past; the offerings were poor, the prices being well sustained at our last quotations.

The vegetable market remains unchanged. There is a good deal on the market now, the dealers not being able to ship last week.

Butter is steady: common to good table, 12c. to 17c.

Eggs remain steady at 8c.

No change in the prices of old chickens; young chickens have declined from 25 to 50 cents on the dozen. F. M. F.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. H. CONNER.

WHEAT threshing has commenced.

NEXT Monday is County Court day.

THE tobacco crop is doing well at present.

CORN fields are now coming out in their silks.

POLITICAL prognosticators say a very larg vote will be cast next Monday. They state, and charge that the Republicans as well as Democrats are going to take an active part in the election. This will be the lion and the lamb lying down together.

IT is with sorrow that we chronicle the death of two of Boone's worthy citizens. One is Mr. Henry Goss, of East Bend, who died Wednesday of last week, in the 63 year of his age. The other, Mr. O. W. Huey, of Big Bone, who died last Friday.

THE political temperature ranges higher in Boone now than for many years. Next Monday will determine who is to represent the county,and the valves be elevated and the political steam which has been generating for the last two months let escape.

THERE seems to be some objections raised against the practicing of the Hebron brass band, on the grounds that it is a nuisance. It is, no doubt, a source of annoyance at present but in the course of time it may become a source of great entertainment to the citizens of the town. So let the boys blow and pound a little longer.

Pro Patria Gloria.

BULLETSVILLE, July 26th, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

A period of one hundred years has passed since our fathers declared the then colonies are and of right ought to be free, and, stimulated by that noble and patriotic feeling they assembled in convention in Liberty Hall, Philadelphia, and that father of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson, drew from his bosom the Declaration of Independence which cast a profound silence in that body of patriots. It was handed to John Hancock, who read, and as it declared the inalienable right of man and the sovereignty of the people, our fathers could remain silent no longer, but burst forth in one patriotic exclaim: "This is my country and all power is in the people, for which glorious doctrine we pledge our property, our honor and our lives." The noble sentiment flashed all wart the sky, and found a lodgment in the patriotic hearts of the people, and they rallied to the standard of Washington from all sections, and inspired by the eloquent tongue of Henry, and the patriotism that flowed down the sword of Washington, they formed an army,and the enemy at Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill, drove the British lion to his den, and formed a Government, based upon the glorious principles, that all power is inherent to the majority of the people, which sentiment should be proclaimed once a month from the door of every court-house in the government.

Well, in this good year, 1877, we have had an election called primary. Starting out with three candidates, the County Committee, in their wisdom, laid down a programme. Mr. Terrill declining, left the race between Reuben Conner and Granville Rouse, and the people came from town, hill and valley, and, in the majesty of their strength, cast their votes. Conner receiving sixty-eight more votes of the freemen of Boone County than Rouse. But the wire-workers dug up some meaningless instruction from the Committee. Its Chairman said when the race was reduced to two, any instruction from any Committee or Convention, would be futile and nonsensical, for it falls powerless when brought in contravention of a majority of the people, and all the Committee said by "Justice," "Fair Count" and others are of no avail, for all the committee upon earth are insignificant when they come in contact with the voice of the people; they are sovereign and must be obeyed. I have no manifesto to announce, but I fear I have seen the re-enactment of the Returning Board of Louisiana; in which Stephen A. Packard and J. Madison Wells were conspicuous characters. The working of our convention, or Retruning Board, was similar to Packard and Wells. They counted out eight thousand of the free men of Louisiana, thereby giving the State to Hayes, which was a gross fraud upon the people. The Burlington Returning Board disfranchised nearly one hundred free men of Boone County by counting them out, and by so doing they declared Mr. Rouse the nominee. "Oh, shame! where is thy blush?" This principle would uproot civilization, and destroy civil and religious government, and all for what? to satisfy the frenzied ambition of a few. There is nothing conceivable when brought in contradistinction with the voice of the people, but what is a fraud. All power is inherent in them, and when they speak nations must obey. They make and unmake laws;they unmake and unmake governments; they make and unmake Presidents, Governors, Courts and Legislators, and shall it be said in the first year after the Centennial of the birthday of freedom, in the good county of Boone, their voice shall be disobeyed and trampled under foot? The voice from the graves of Washington and Jackson answer no. Disobeying and setting the majority of the people at naught is the precursor of the nation's losing its prestige and returning back to barbarism. It is a stab at popular government; it is a stab of the perfect law of political and religious liberty, and I warn you, my countrymen, to nip it in the bud and vindicate the right, for I fear there is a frenzied spirit coming up in the land, as I recently beheld in the mob spirit as exhibited by the vicious in burning towns and tearing up railroads and stealing and destroying private property. Patriots, stand firm and put your veto upon all such proceedings; it was the blood of the Martyrs that saved the church. Had they not shed their blood there would be no church upon earth,and their descendants, left grouping in heathen darkness. God grant the ruling of such tyranny as was inflicted upon our forefathers and Christians, may never find foothold in this glorious land again. Let us live up to the requirements of the law and Declaration of Independence, which cost blood, and which document emphatically declares all power is in the people and a majority shall govern in this land of Free America. OBSERVER.

A Couple of 'Em.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Didn't I tell you these convention figures would worry the life out of you if you did not quit publishing their absolution of the convention problem? No mortal man ever lived long enough to count the Schnider's fraction. "Justice" closes his eyes on it and begs for quarter, and when he, with his big mathematics, calculus and diplomas, flickers, who is brave enough to tackle her? Not one. Now, I am going to figurate Col. Henderson in by a little mental arithmetick. "Fair Count" will please pardon the raps of his thunder:

1. All the Conner men are for Henderson in preference to Rouse.—Axiom.

2. Conner has more votes in the county than Rouse (see pole books of primary election).—Truth.

3. Conner is not the nominee of the party (see report of convention).—Fact.

4. Rouse is not the nominee.—See "Justice's" big sum figurated up on the rules of calculus.

5. The Rouse men are all for Henderson, in preference to Conner.—See Col. Henderson's non-delivered speech and J. O. Huey and Jo Riddell.

6. All Col. Henderson's friends who induced him to come out, at least to the extent of two, are for him yet to the last man and last dollar.

Thus you see that neither Conner or Rouse is the first choice of the party. There being no first choice, the foregoing inexerable logic places the second choice in the person of Col. Henderson, to a mathematical demonstration, without a fraction and without the aid of calculus; and then, being no first choice, I now declare Col. Henderson the nominee and only choice of the party, and implore "Fair Count" and "Justice" each to give him his pro (for) rata (vote) either in Latin or English. If they do, may we not all unite like a band of brothers? for who will not follow where "Justice," and "Fair Count" lead? Can not they figurate to opposite results, one by mental arithmetic and the other by calculus, and prove their work by the higher rules of the mathematicus? If we should lean to the right, then "Justice" would hold up the calcium light of his calculus and illume our path and snatch out the kinks. If we lean to the left, then "Fair Count" would, with his 10 crab apples and two tow-head boys, prove we were still on the bee line of truth; and then, oh, then! would we not give Mr. Alford Jingles and all other black Republicans the Dickens. You see, my voice is for Peace, and I will bury out the word so loud and long that even "Justice" will hear and finally come and step across the pons asinorum kindly erected for for him, and clasp our hand in friendship's warmest grasp, and give in unison with us one loud and long bray for the old dispensation, truth and Col. Henderson, and thus will all this discord cease, and heaven smile so sweetly upon our long ears and shaggy locks.

Mr. Editor, will you please tell me where, when and how, and whose gage "Justice" used in graduating? I want to get it to go by in my mathematical course. I think I might get up by following the tracks made by "Justice." I want to be a mathematicer, so at the next election I can figurate some too.

Next, what paragraph and section of the Committee's order does "Justice" quote in his last communication (this word ain't as long as his piece)? I want to see that section. The Committee never got eyes on it, you bet. How does "Justice" know that rata is a Latin word and significates vote? Tell me before it is eternally too late or the boat sinks with his philosophy.

Now, I can't help my name as to the past, but for the future will change it to Prince Asinorum. Pons Asinorum is distasteful to "Justice's" mathematical ear—only the pons, however; he likes the asinorum on the ground that a feller feels more as he underpins his kind. You may consider the change made.

And now, "Justice," don't stand out and eat sage bushes and stamp yellow-jackets, but come; walk up over your pons asinorum to where there are fresh thistles, and graze along by the side of your friend, and get your liver right. PRINCE ASINORUM.

P. S. I like to have forgotten to say to "Justice," "Fair Count" and all concerned, beware! Keep out of the dead languages, Col. Henderson can beat you all in that line. Don't wake him up, then. If you do, your sheepskins won't save your scholarly reputation. Col. Henderson has an instinct for the language of the old dispensation. As to pro rata, he knew before he read the Bible through that it meant pro (for) rata (vote). He don't pretend to be a mathematician. He is a Granger by preedee and a grub hoer when he gets to Frankfort will be the right man in the right place. He is rooted and grounded in the true faith.

Nil Desperandum.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Again I ask a small portion of your valuable space in reply to that misnomer, "Justice." The old adage that "truth is mighty and will prevail," is very applicable to the case of "Justice," and seems to have struck him right square on his cranium. At any rate, we are led strongly to believe so, for in his last article,we see the course of human depravity plainly portrayed, which is the last remedy against facts. He has accused us of spite, prejudice and injustice. As for spite against Mr. Conner as a man, we entertain none, but "Justice" would like very much to impress the readers of the RECORDER with this idea, simply because we made a correction in his statements and his conclusion, to which he is too proud and too full of conceit to yield. Now, as to prejudice, I think I would not be assuming too much to say that not a man lives who will not decide between cases of this kind, and show his partinlity one way or the other. This, "Justice" only knows is one of his strong passions, because he has been so prejudiced as to take or sell a few pools on the bay horse when he knew he couldn't win. He throws that against us from his own load of guilt. We only made a calculation,as we said before, to show the only mathematical plan for solving such a problem as the one in question. We didn't pretend to give the exact fractions in that calculation, for the common denominator to all the fractions would be so great that a precise solution would almost be impossible, but the observer will notice that as much is taken from Mr. Rouse's vote as Mr. Conner's, and in some precincts more, in order to allay suspicion. But "Justice wanted to harmonize the popular vote with the Convention in order to retain those who had supported Mr. Conner, and to guilt a few of the Rouse men, and consequently set his wits to work with no expectation of ever hearing from anyone, and in a tone which sounded as though it might have emanated from a Lord of Lords and King of Kings, he boastingly defied the world to beat his calculation and promulgation of the present political situation. But, oh! "Justice," simple untarnished "Justice," reign with malice toward none—equality to all before thy high throne.

But then he says we are a boomeranger, a member of the Returning Board, and supposed Governor-General of Boone County. Oh! How sick we are, trying to keep this horrible fence in its proper place. But there is consolation to know that he won't have a chance to reply to this before the election, for if he did, I would not expect anything else but that he would go down to Louisiana and bring Eliza Pinckston and some other reliable witnesses, who make a government to suit themselves, and in less than two weeks, I would be metamorphosed into a second J. Madison Wells.

But he says we, doubtless, sighed relief when we discovered that the fifty votes were not essential in the convention. Well, those fifty votes that created a delegate were the cause of "Justice's" ignorance orhis intended misrepresentation. Now, in the case of the boys' apples, he asks the question what does the sixteen apples represent, do they represent the delegate vote or the popular vote? In the Petersburg district "Justice" says they represent the popular vote, the 145 votes. This we deny.

Now, friend "Justice" has told you what he saw in the article of "Fair Count," which is spite, prejudice, and injustice. But "Justice," without thy strong arm, J. Madison Wells and Joe Bradley, and the Boone County Returning Board couldn't be kept down. Without thy self-conceit which sticks to every line thou hast penned, we would not laugh worth a cent; unless your fruitful imagination had not cropped out at nearly every word of your last article it would have been of no interest; and above all, if your first article had been a correct solution of the question, it would have given Mr. Rouse a majority in the convention, and a reply never would have been made to your article, and we could only have read it with the surprise and astonishment that so much gas could have been created from such little material. But we don't believe "Justice" wants to enter the field of politics and be classed with such scalawags as Wells and Anderson, Joe Bradley and boomeranger, and Returning Boards, and the Lord only knows what else. We think he is inclined to be of a religious turn of mind, and, no doubt, when he is removed from his present dilemma, he will be almost forced to obey that Holy injunction of the Scripture, go forth into all nations and preach the Gospel to every living creature, and many success crown his efforts. Don't, friend "Justice," as you have already killed me, as you say,politically, don't listen too much to that old saying, "Knowledge is power," and die from our own teachings. Give up that feeling which pervaded that late Indian Chief:

I am Captain Jack of lava beds,
I'm cock of the walk and chief of the reds.

Do give that up, and on the 6th day of August go to the polls and vote for Mr. Conner—vote for him cheerfully—get all you can to vote for him, and if on the 7th day of August the returns say that Mr. Conner is the man who shall represent Boone Conhty in the next General Assembly, we quietly drop the subject and submit to the will of the people. FAIR COUNT.

Another Richmond in the Field.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

After the voluminous debate upon the political complications that has already appeared in your paper, it might, at first glance, appear unkind to thus shower another flood of argument upon your readers. Nothing but the persistent course taken by "Justice," "F. C." &c. ad libitum, in misinterpreting, and thereby perhaps misleading, can be plead in extenuation of this infliction. Let us reason for a moment, Mr. Editor, upon the convention in the abstract. It is quite likely that our forefathers, who instituted this machine for manufacturing candidates, were satisfied with it, from the fact that it was, perhaps, never so severely tested as it has been so lately among us. Conventions are expressly designed to give to each candidate his full strength before the same, as nearly as it can possibly be estimated, according to which the number of delegates is determined is adopted, and then the voice of the people is heard in some previously determined way. Now, in the last convention (which is the bone of contention at present) this was heard through a primary election. A and B are candidates; in precinct No. 1, which ordinarily casts 250 votes, and is, therefore, entitled to 5 votes in the convention, A receives 50 votes and B 100; when the 5 delegates from this precinct assemble in the convention, how should they vote? The answer of the sane would receive of their support and B is inevitable. This is the only rule by which to fairly adjust the matter, and thus give to each man his proper share of the 100 votes that were not cast. Even if in that number 90 would have voted for B (or A) if they had come to the polls, the 10 delegates have no right to know or suspect as much. A friend of B (or A) who will not support him in a primary election (where in the Democracy of Boone County a nomination is equivalent to an election) is not worth a fig to him as a friend; and the sooner the members of that party make that in staying at home they virtually surrender their influence to those who are more zealous and industrious in selecting a candidate, the better for the party. In the simplicity of a mental problem, "Fair Count" states the case in a nut shell. A puts in 6 parts of the money and B 4 parts. The business gains a certain amount of anything, which is signified by the 16 apples. To let the 16 apples represent the 145 votes cast in Petersburg is absurdity itself, for where, then, is a basis of division? What is to be divided? Has not the popular vote of this district been divided already by the people? Nothing can be more manifest than that the property to be divided is the 4 delegate votes from the precinct, and the 145 votes, as divided by the people into 115 for Rouse and 30 for Conner, furnish the basis of equitable division. This rule is observed in each district, considered separate and apart from all the rest, taking nothing else into consideration but the delegate votes of the precinct as the ting to be divided, and the respective vote for each candidate as the basis of division. This was the literal instruction of the Executive Committee, as any one of those gentlemen will positively affirm.

For anyone to make such a flourish of his erudition as one of your correspondents has already done, while at the same bhast he utterly annihilates all public faith in the same by the asinine stupidity of his platitudes is bad enough; but to cap the climax with the inappropriate nom du plume of "Justice" is to hold himself up before your readers as a despicable object of derision, which is fully expressed in the article, and emphatically in the signature, of "Pons Asinorum." An exploding squib, charged with bad powder, always tilts the noses of those nearest it with disgust and nausea, except the hair-brained boy who applies the match; and now it is pitiably amusing to see the traveling public slip cautiously by on the windward side of the local habitation of this same "Justice," who, in the ambition of his little heart and smaller head, has so injudiciously fired his little pop-gun full of puerile simplicity and bad-smelling personalities. He is excusable on the Scriptural ground that nothing good can come out of Nazareth. He asks questions and answers them with the impudence of a veritable Solon, without seeing that they are as bombastically nonsensical as the speeches of poor old Don Quixote; criticises "Fair Count" with the smashing qualifier "egotistical," when in the two poor tirades of miserable stuff he has perpetrated, the pronoun by which the first person singular or plural is expressed occurs just 82 times, while in "Fair Count's" article it is only to be found 12 times. Here is another "boomerang" for "Justice's" head. He stoops to the low personal invective, directed at the delegates to the convention, and unjustly suspects the writer of every article against him of being a delegate; just as if no one but delegates were honest. He spells Alfred with a "p" and an "h," and if he had substituted a "w" for the "p" it would be more in keeping with his characteristic boarding-school simplicity. He looks with complacency back along the undulating sights of his crooked, old, brainless smoothbore, and sees what these letters predicted before it was too late to mend the matter. The events are in the past—the golden opportunity was allowed to pass unimproved on the first Monday in June—and now this poor braying donkey wants to scald someone else for his own stupid foolishness.

Now, Mr. Editor, please advise poor "Justice" to split that awkward pen of his into kindling wood, and go back to his old vocation of driving ponies and telling remarkable and questionable yarns to the denizens of the forest of Gainesville. Let him who lives in a house of glass not throw awkward brickbats, lest his own house be demolished. His criticism of the figures of D. M. Snyder is in perfect harmony with all his letter which precedes it. He finds fault with a man who, without the "ip-roarious calculus" of education of "Justice," can put him to shame in at least a half-dozen branches of lesser mathematics, to say nothing of the rest of an English education.

That the friends of Conner will permit such a hair-brained ink-spiller to drag his name into the perpetration of his verbose epistles, and blow such blasts of mud and grass all around, is past comprehension, when he could be silenced with a rusty counterfeit quarter, or, better still, with a sprig of shillalah. That they do permit it, however, and by many secret chucklings, rib-poking, whisperings and smothered grins abet and encourage it, is as true as an AXIOM.

"Justice" Defended.

PETERSBURG, July 30, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

I have read with a great deal of interest the last three issues of your paper. The controversy between "Justice" on the one part, and "Fair Count," "Pons Asinorum" and D. M. Snyder on the other, is becoming quite interesting. The first letter written by "Justice" caused the men of honest conviction to pause and think in their enthusiastic support of Mr. Rouse, the independent candidate before the people, and the fair and able arguments presented in his last article, together with his withering criticism of the three articles written in answer to his first has settled the matter. A regular stampede exists throughout the county among the independents, and especially is it the case in our district. Many of the first citizens of our district, that the independents have counted on supporting their candidate, have declared in the last few days in favor of Mr. Conner. They are deserting the ranks of the independents all along the line, and flocking to those ranks that have Mr. Reuben Conner, the regular Democratic nominee, for their standard bearer.

Both of the national political partics agree that, at the present state of affairs of our government, it is dangerous to tamper with the republican form of government should be most sacredly preserved; and that any candidate failing to receive the majority of the votes of his party, announcing himself as an independent candidate, should be discountenanced and shoved to the rear. The office should seek the man, and not the man the office. The prosperity of our government demands two parties and no more, and the closer the division of these parties, the better for the country.

Many of your readers will be curious to know why I write this letter. You may tell them it is to see fair play between "Justice" and your three correspondents that have attacked him. He floored them in his last article, and cuffed them till they played dead, like the opossum, and now, that he is powerless to defend himself, they come to life and, I understand, are preparing to make a combined assault this week through the columns of your paper. "Justice" will have no means of defending himself, since this is the last issue of your paper till the election comes off. Hence, I concluded to ward off some of the boomerangs that will be hurled at him.

I will now take notice of some of the discrepancies that "Justice" failed to note in the productions of your three correspondents "F. C.," "P. A." and "D. M. S." First in order is "Fair Count":

In the first section of his article he says, "This is only a mental arithmetic question." Judging from the many errors in his calculation pointed out by "Justice," and some others that I will expose, I think "Fair Count" had better have used his slate and pencil a little more and not depended too much on his knowledge of mental arithmetic. The second section of his letter, where he accuses "Justice" of misusing the fifty mentioned by the Committee, has already been ably answered; and I am surprised that "Fair Count" did not notice that "Justice" made no estimate of the delegates, but, on the other hand, estimated the votes the delegates should have cast, supposing fifty votes at the primary election to represent one in the convention. In the third section of his article he calls up a sum from mental arithmetic, where 16 apples are to be divided between two boys, but doesn't tell what the 16 apples represent in this case. Why did not "Fair Count" meet the real issue, as "Justice" did. What the people want to know is what is meant by "the pro rata vote of the districts." That determined, the question is easily settled. "Justice" is the only one of your correspondents that has met this issue squre in the face. All of the others have dodged this question. "Justice" has plainly shown you that "pro rata vote" refers to the vote cast for Messrs. Conner and Rouse, and has no reference whatever to the delegates nor to the vote cast last fall for Mr. Tilden. Then "Fair Count's" whole article was in answer to something "Justice" had never written.

I notice in "Fair Count's" calculation that he gives Florence only four delegates, when she was entitled to five; then Taylorsport, that was entitled to only four, he gives four and one-third. In summing up his votes and delegates separately, we find he makes 351 delegates cast 36 votes. If a delegate should represent a vote in the convention, what becomne of his ⅔ (two-thirds) of a delegate missing. Perhaps that was what was left of Mr. Jerry Murphy after the chairman sawed him off so abruptly.

After making all these mistakes, he has the presumption to say go to the polls and vote for Mr. Rouse, also says "if the Rouse men do their duty the first Monday in August, the boomerang will return on that day and slay those who gave it life." All very good, Mr. "Fair Count," but it seems to me the boomerangs are being hurled by the independents. The democratic party, by a majority of 68, chose Mr. Conner as their representative. Then where's the necessity of their hurling boomerangs?

I shan't have much to say about "Prince Asinorum." I think "Justice" gave him about as much as he will be able to digest for some time to come. By the way, I looked in Webster's dictionary for pons asinorum, and concluded that "Justice" was right in changing his signature to "Prince Asinorum." I don't think I ever read a more nonsensical and meaningless composition in my life. There was nothing in it deserving the notice of a rational reader, and I think "Justice's" criticism was nothing more than the author deserved.

"Justice was rather lenient with D. M. Snyder, and I think he was right in it. Davo is a clever fellow. He presented his calculation very modestly. He deserves a great deal of credit for his patience and perseverance in obtaining the result he did. It would have been better for him, however, to have spent the time in studying what is meant by "pro rata vote of the districts." If "Fair Count" could have seen Dave before he affirmed that it was "only a mental arithmetic question," he would have concluded, no doubt, that it would require a barrel of chalk and the whole side of a barn 60x80, and 40 feet to the comb, to obtain the wee bit of a fraction Mr. Rouse was entitled to by Dave's calculation. If Dave was really sincere in asking the people to examine his calculation, he should have sent the barn along.

Believing that enough has been said to convince the good people of Boone that it won't do to follow political tricksters in independent movements, I will conclude this letter. FAIR PLAY.

BURLINGTON, KY., AUGUST 2.

THE FARM HOUSE ON THE HILL.

There is a spot to me most dear
Where memory loves to dwell,
An old time scene of long ago
My heart recalls full well.
'Twas where my honest father lived,
His fertile soil to till,
And peace and love dwelt ever in
The farm house on the hill.

No matter where my fancy leads,
Or where my footsteps roam,
Or though equipments choice and rare
Shall cluster round my home;
Though brilliant guests and life and mirth
Are subjects of my will,
Still backward ever turn I to
The farm house on the hill.

'Twas there our gentle mother made
With her own canny hand,
Our home and homely duties seem
The sweetest in the land.
Her patient smile, her loving voice,
Alas! my eyelids fill,
With knowing they no more can light
The farm house on the hill.

'Twas she who taught her wayward child
To follow wisdom's plan,
That only truth and honesty —
Can grace God's image, man.
Again I see her angel face,
Her arms are round me still,
As when she rocked me in that home—
The farm house on the hill.

They say that I am fortunate,
For wealth my labors bless,
They little know it seldom brings
The truest happiness.
Ah! who can find where fashion reigns
Amid her votaries' chill,
The warmth of love that crowned supreme
The farm house on the hill.

Hogs in California.

The tule lands of this county are everywher inhabited by droves of hogs that have doubtless originally been propagated from domestic stock, which have escaped into the jungle and have become as wild as the famous game infesting the Black Forest, the hunting of which affords so much amusement to the German nobility. They live and thrive on the succulent roots to be found in the tules, and appear moderately fat whenever they are seen. They are exceedingly shy, however, and it is only by accident that one catches a glimpse of them, as they instinctively avoid the haunts of men. They are trapped and caught occasionally in an ingenious manner by the tule farmers, who build small but very strong corrals or pens on their stamping ground. A heavy gate, made to drop perpendicularly, is fitted so as to close the corral when down. This is raised and held by a trap, to which a strap leading to the ground is attached. Barley is then scattered on the ground inside the corral, and in continuous lines for some distance in different directions. The corral having been built over the trails of the hogs, they are not very long scenting the barley, and once inside the corral they can scarcely fail to spring the trap in eating the barley. A drove of a dozen or more have before now been captured in this manner. The young ones are easily domesticated, but the old ones are slaughtered at once.—Stockton (Cal.) Independent.

How Poisons are Spread.

Mr. G. Owen Rees, Consulting Physician to Guy's Hospital, London has called public attention to some unexpected sources of arsenical poisoning. The green calico lining of bed curtains has been found to have produced, for months, severe symptoms, which were treated as those of natural disease, without benefit to the patients. When the curtains were removed the patients at once recovered their health. The beautiful pale-green muslin, largely used for ladies' dresses, has been found to contain not less than 60 grains of the arsenical compound known as Scheele's green in every square yard. He suggests that, in order to prevent much of the nausea, vomiting, headache, inflammation of the eyes, etc., from which so many suffer, there be a prohibition of the manufacture of such deleterious fabrics. Red, scarlet, and mauve-colored fabrics are not always free from arsenic. He adds that the agitation of skirts in dancing discharges arsenical poison, which probably causes some of the pallor and languor almost always wholly attributed to illventilated and crowded rooms, and to bad champagne.

Interesting Facts.

The number of seeds of wheat in one pound is ten thousand five hundred.

The number of seeds in one pound of barley is fifteen thousand four hundred.

The number of seeds in one pound of oats is twenty thousand.

The number of seeds in one pound of rye is twenty-three thousand.

The number of seeds in one pound of buckwheat is twenty-five thousand.

The number of seeds in one pound of clover is two hundred and forty-nine thousand six hundred.

The number of seeds in one pound of white clover is six hundred and eight-six thousand four hundred.

If you do not begin you will never come to the end. The first weed pulled up in the garden, the first seed set in the ground, the first shilling put in the savings' bank, and the first mile traveled on a journey, are all important things; they make a beginning, and thereby give a hope, a promise, a pledge, an assurance that you are in earnest.

Habits of a Man of Business.

He is strict in keeping his engagements.

Does nothing carelessly or in a hurry.

Employs nobody to do what he can easily do himself.

Keeps everything in its proper place.

Keeps his designs and business from the view of others.

Is prompt and decisive in his dealings, and does not overtrade his capital.

Prefers short credits to long ones, and cash to credit at all times either in buying or selling; and small profits in cases with little risk, to the chance of better gains with more hazard.

He is clear and explicit in all his bargains.

Leaves nothing of consequence to memory which he can and ought to commit to writing.

Is always at the head of his business, well knowing that if he leaves it, it will leave him.

Holds as a maxim that he whose credit is suspected is not one to be trusted.

Is constantly examining his books, and sees through all his affairs as far as care and attention will enable him.

Balances regularly at stated times, and then makes out and transmits all his accounts current to his customers, both at home and abroad.

Avoids as much as possible all sorts of accommodation in money matters, and lawsuits where there is the least hazard.

He is economical in his expenditure, always living within his income.

Is cautious how he becomes security for any person, and is generous when urged by motives of humanity.

Let a man act strictly to these habits (when once begun they will be easy to continue in), and success will attend his efforts.

Take pleasure in your business, and it will become your recreation.

Hope for the best, think for the worst, and manfully bear whatever happens.

Good-Bye.

The editor of the Albany Register comments thus upon this simple word, common and yet so full of meaning: "How many emotions cluster around that word. How full of sadness, and, to us, how full of sorrow it sounds. It is with us a consecrated word. We heard it once within the year as we hope never to speak it again. It was in the chamber of death, at the still of night's noon. The curtains to the windows were all closed and lights were shaded, and we stood in the dim and solemn twilight with others, around the bed of the dying. The damps of the earth were on her pale young brow, and coldness was on her lips, as we kissed them for the last time while living. 'Good-bye, my darling,' we whispered. 'Good-bye, father,' came faintly from her lips. We know not if she ever spoke more, but 'Good-bye' was the last we ever heard of her sweet voice. We hear that last sorrowful word often and often as we sit alone, busy with the memories of the past. We hear it in the silence of the night, in the hours of nervous wakefulness, as we lie upon our bed, thinking of the loved and lost to us. We hear it in our dreams, when her sweet face comes back to us as it was in its loveliness and beauty. We hear it when we sit beside her grave in the cemetery, where she sleeps alone, with no kindred as yet by her side. She was the hope of our life—the prop upon which to lean when age came upon us and life should be running to its dregs. The hope and prop is gone, and we care not how soon we go down to sleep beside our darling, beneath the shadow of the trees in the city of the dead."

Sound Argument.

In these pinching times, when every industry is trammeled and distressed, when every chord of the nation is stretched to its utmost tension, there is need of mutual forbearance and confidence, and the display of our best manhood. There can be no hard lines laid down between employer and the employed, if we would tide over to-day and hasten the morrow of brighter and better things. Everybody must yield something—of desire, or even right—for the common good. The situation is lamentable and alarming, but it is not without hope. We must make what allowance we can for the workingmen who feel that they have been denied the means of support for their families, and we must not lose our faith in the good sense of the American people. The judicious will grieve, but they will also bear themselves discreetly and exert their influence toward toning down the excitement and readjusting the differences between labor and capital. Above all things, we implore the honest workingmen to beware of the sharpers who prey on them and make use of them, to the serious disadvantage of labor. This is not a time for alarming sensations. It is a time for calmness and for manhood. The truth is bad enough. Let us not exaggerate it, nor fan the flames that are already burning. A great nation must exert itself to restore its wonted calm and return to its customary peaceful avocations.—Baltimore Gazette.

A young lady has been trying for three weeks to get a photograph of her pet poodle, but the fidgety little animal wouldn't be taken. So she just had the artist take a photograph of her nicest young man, whitening the mustache and painting the ears up a little, and the resemblance is so perfect that the innocent young man himself admired it, and begged a copy as a "souvner of the s'gacious an'mal."

STATE NEWS.

—Wheat in Robinson County averages 25 bushels to the acre.

—Peach-trees in Pike County are bending with their loads of fruit.

—A Newport Justice of the Peace has been arrested for "wife threshing."

—Gov. McCreary has remitted the fine of $100 against George Burch, of Louisville, for betting on an election.

—Mrs. M. A. Hughes, of LaGrange, is a party to the suit for the Lawrence-Townley estate in England, valued at $500,000,000.

—It is announced in the Anderson News that Col. A. G. Hodges will resume the publication of the Commonwealth at Frankfort some time in August.

—The Trigg County Democrat says a reliable farmer living near town reports that there was a slight fall of snow in one of his fields on the 4th, while he and his laborers were engaged raking hay.

—Maysville Republican: John McDonald, of Mason County, is the possessor of a book, "The Rule and Exercises of the Holy Dying." It was printed in London by James Flesher, for R. Royston in 1658.

—Cumberland Courier: The Cumberland River is now covered for miles with oil from the new Crocus well. At Scott's Ferry it stood fully half an inch deep on the river's surface, from bank to bank, all day yesterday.

—The disturbances in Carter County are thought to be virtually ended. Nineteen persons, consisting of four of the Underwoods and fifteen of the Hollbroke and Stamper party, were arrested, taken to Grayson, and left in charge of the civil authorities.

—Winchester Chronicle: Rev. Henry White, a colored Methodist preacher of this city, has sued a negro named Coleman, in the Common Pleas Court, for slander, laying his damages at $5,000. Coleman charged him with Beecherism, which White says is a foul slander.

—The vineyards around promised at one time to give an abundant yield and in fact would have done so, but for the appearance of an insect that is causing some little distruction, boring into the grape and causing rot to set in. We hear of considerable complaint as to the ravages.—Pantagraph.

—Trigg County Democrat: Everything has fallen in price. Land is down at bottom figures, and the productions of the soil have followed the downward tendency. The people everywhere in the State have raised the cry of reform and reduction of salaries, and aspirants for office must govern themselves accordingly.

—Kentucky Observer: The wife of Mr. James Hora, formerly of this county, now residing in Anderson, about ten days ago gave birth, as we are informed, to four healthy boys. They are still living and doing well. The year before that she gave birth to three girls; the year before that she gave birth to twins, and the year previous she gave birth to another pair of twins, making eleven children in four years. If the State or the nation can beat this let us hear.

—Clinton Democrat: Mr. Chas. F. Armstead, colored, late State Senator of Mississippi, delivered a political address at the court-house in Clinton last Saturday night. Mr. Armstead is an intelligent, educated man, and his address showed that he fully appreciates the responsibilites resting upon his race, particularly in the South. His counsel and advice to the colored people here was wholesome and well-timed, and, if heeded, will do them and their children good.

—Washington County Herald: There is a fellow living on Chaplin River, in the northern part of this county, who sinks hollow logs in that stream, holding them down with rocks, by which means he catches very fine fish. It is said that fish prefer hollow logs to going under rocks. He says that the law, while it prohibits fishing under the rocks, does not prohibit log-fishing, and he is subject to no penalty for engaging in his novel way of fishing. He should have a patent on his fish-trap.

—Grayson Journal: S. C. Williams, living two miles notheast of this place, has a calf 14 months old that gives milk. Some two months ago he noticed that she was making bag, and he was surprised, as there was no evidence of her being with calf. As the calf was gentle, he thought he would feel her udder, and upon doing so discovered it to be strutted with milk. She is now milked regularly with the other cows, gives about one-half gallon at each milking, and bids fair to make a noble milker. This is certainly a most extraordinary case. Can any of Craddock's short-horn stock beat this?

—Quite an animated contest is going on among the owners of Alderney cows in Lexington, in making tests of the the richness of the milk given by their cows. The tests are made by placing the milk in glass tubes, ten inches long, and after allowing it to stand over night, the depth of the cream is measured. Tested in this way the following results were obtained: By M. Pointer, 2½ inches of cream; Rev. J. S. Shipman, 2 11-20 inches; Dr. J. S. Wilson, 3 inches. In another test where the strippings were used, 5 inches of cream were obtained. Dr. Wilson, however, beats this, as the result was all cream.—Lexington Press.

Why are we Right-Handed.

Investigations which were very recently carried through by a French physician (Dr. Fleury, of Bordeaux), have adduced facts showing that our natural impulse to use the members on the right side of the body is clearly traceable to probably physiological causes. Dr. Fleury, after examining an immense number of human brains, asserts that the left anterior lobe is a little larger than the right one. Again, he shows that, by examining a large number of people, there is an unequal supply of blood to the two sides of the body. The brachiocephalic trunk, which only exists on the right of the arch of the aorta, produces, by a difference in termination, an inequality in the wavos of red blood which travel from right to left. Moreover, the diameters of the subclavian arteries on each side are different, that on the right being noticeably larger. The left lobe of the brain, therefore, being more richly hæmatosed than the right, becomes stronger, and as, by the intersection of the nervous fiber, it commands the right side of the body, it is obvious that that side will be more readily controlled. This furnishes one reason for the natural preference for the right hand, and another is found in the increased supply of blood from the subclavian artery. The augmentation of blood we have already seen suggested; but the reason for it is here ascribed to the relative size of the artery, and not to any directness of path from the heart. Dr. Fleury has carried his investigations through the whole series of mammalia; and he finds that the right-handed peculiarities exist in all that have arteries arranged similar to those of man. At the same time such animals, notably the chimpanzee, the seals and the beavers, are the most adroit and intelligent.—The Eclectic.

"I DON'T know what you mean by not being an Irishman," said the gentleman who was about hiring a boy; "You was certainly born in Ireland." "Och, your honor, if that's all," said the boy, "small blame to that. Suppose your cat was to have kittens in the oven, would they be loaves of bread?"

JOSH BILLINGS says: "The live man is like a little pig: he is weaned young and begins to root early. He is the pepersass ov creashun and alspice of the world. One live man in a village is like a case of itch, at a district school—he sets everybody scratching at onst."

THE DISCONTENTED PEDAGOGUE.

BY D. E. C.

With wearied limbs he wends his way,
Past verdant fields and landscapes gay;
His troubles vanish—he's happy indeed—
He forgets the loved ones at home and in need.

The pretty gray squirrel is skipping along,
The robin is happy, for loud is his song;
The sweet vernal flowers have sprung from the earth—
All nature seems joined in this common mirth.

His happiness departs, for through the green trees
A little log house in the distance he sees.
He envies the wealthy, he pities the poor,
And his eyes speak his thoughts as he enters the door.

The scholars are scared—it's seldom the case
Such a frightful expression is seen on his face.
Their voices are hushed, their lessons begun,
Inwardly wishing that books there were none.

The daily routine of classes are hoard,
Paul Trickey is whipped for pulling his beard;
The others take warning, they're respectful enough,
For the rod on the desk is exceedingly tough.

The roll is called, his task is done,
The scholars dismissed and out they run.
He slams the door, he's done at last,
He's glad, indeed, the day has past.

He thinks of his troubles, and pleasures so few,
He thinks of his mother and lady-love, too,
Ardently hoping the powers above
Will prosper his life and smile on his love.

Discontentment predominates in his troubled mind;
He thinks in life's drama to him was assigned
A part that a saint would weary of acting,
Aware of the fact that God is exacting.

ELAM'S ADVENTURE.

"Can't you tell us some of your adventures?" I asked of my friend Elam, who had returned from his many years' travels in the bush and other outlandish places, and was sitting with me and my wife. And, though absent so long, he was, so to say, a young man yet.

"Adventures? Well, I have had plenty. Rough ones, some of them."

"Please tell us one," chimed in Mary.

Elam laughed. "I can tell you of a curious one that I met with in the mountains."

"Oh, yes; do. Which mountains?"

"In California; up in one of its wild districts!"

"That will be the very thing."

"Well," said Elam, running his taper fingers through his hair, and smiling at my wife, "I'll soften down things in the telling as well as my blunt speech and uncivilized modes of thought will allow me, and you must excuse the rest."

"Oh, I'll excuse anything. Please begin."

"When I started from home to settle in unfrequented districts," began Elam, "I set up a theory that no young man should ever ask a woman to marry him until he had prepared a home for her. It is surprising how much you begin to think of a wife over yonder, arising, I suppose, from the loneliness of one's existence. I was no exception. The land I took up with was in the Rogue's River Valley; and, after I had got a bit shipshape, I worked away with that object in view—to bring home a wife."

"But, Elam, had you selected a wife?" I asked.

"No. I intended to do that as soon as I could, though you may say that I was full young to be thinking of it. I worked on, and was pretty successful. I built me a house, got a considerable quantity of stacks, made a flower-garden for my wife; even put up the pegs and nails she should want to hang her dresses on. I intended that same autumn to get on my horse, ride through the Wallamet Valley, and find me my wife, marry her, and bring her home."

At the notion of courting in that off-hand style, we laughed a little. Elam laughed too as if the recollection pleased him.

"You think it strange, I see. It was not so over there in those days, when girls were as scarce as angels. There was not a girl in forty miles of me; and I assure you the very thought of one, as I drove those nails in for her garments to hang on, went through me like a thrill. You don't believe? Go out yourself and try it."

"But I do believe."

"I had about two hundred and fifty head of cattle, a good house with a garden, a young orchard, vegetables growing, sweet-scented flowers—all in readiness for the wife I hoped to bring home to bless me and to take care of this, my possession. And what do you think happened to it?"

We could not tell.

"There came such a plague of grasshoppers upon the valley that everything perished. Crops, orchard, flowers, grass, every green, and delightful, and promising thing; the grasshoppers destroyed them all. You remember the Second Chapter of Joel?"

I nodded.

"'The land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness.' I was ruined. My stock died; at least, the greater portion; they had nothing to feed upon. Yes, it was complete and absolute ruin."

Elam paused a moment; mentally looking at the past.

"I considered myself disappointed in love too," he resumed in the quaintest of tones. "Though I had not yet been out to find my girl, I knew she was somewhere in that other valley waiting for me; and when the greedy grasshopper ate up everything, I felt that I had been jilted. It actually gives me a pang now to think of those useless pegs on which my imagination had so often seen a girl's pink cotton dress and a white sun-bonnet."

Elam gave a great sigh. He was an eccentric fellow.

"I became misanthropic; said to myself that between fate and the grasshoppers I had been used hardly. Packing up my books and a few other traps, I bade adieu to the Rogue's River Valley forever, and started for the mountains. It was a longish journey, as I had to drive before me the stock I had left. There, in the mountains, I settled down again, but built myself a fort, and played hermit. No jilting girls should come near me now."

"A fort?"

"A regular fort. A stockade eighteen feet high, with an embankment four feet high around it, and a strong gate in the middle. My tent was in the midst of the enclosure, with my books and household goods, fire-arms, and all the rest of my property stowed away in it."

"Were you afraid of the Indians?"

"Indians and white men. Yes, I saw a good many Indians at first within the range of my rifle. They learned to keep away from my fort, finding it did not pay to attempt to invade it. Down in the valley below there were mining camps; and you perhaps know what some of the hangers on of such camps are. I sold beef—that is, heads of cattle—to the miners; and as I sometimes had a tidy sum of money by me, it was necessary to be careful."

"What a strange life for a young man. For you Elam!"

"I herded my cattle, drove them to market, cooked, studied, wrote, and indulged in misanthropy, combined with some rifle practice. By the time I had entered on the second summer in the mountains, I felt quite at home and was getting rich. After all the life had its charms. A man can not quite tire of it when he is but a few years out of his teens."

"And the girl-wife?"

"I am coming to that. Having had time to forget my ill usage, a reaction set in, you see, and I thought, after all, I must ride to the Wallamet to see after my girl. But I was not in the hurry over it that I had been before. This is all very dull, you will say, but there'll be some stir presently."

"It is not dull at all."

"One Sunday afternoon—how did I know it was Sunday, you ask? Because I had kept an account of the days all along; kept my diary regularly. One Sunday afternoon, I was sitting outside writing, when a shadow fell across the paper; and, looking up, there stood a skeleton. Accustomed as I was to lonely encounters with strange men of all kinds, my hair stood on end as I stared at the spectre before me. He was the merest boy in years, pretty and delicate by nature, and evidently reduced to this shadowy state by starvation. His story was soon told. He had left Boston on board a vessel bound for the northwest coast, had been wrecked at the mouth of the Umpaqua, and had been wandering about in the mountains ever since, subsisting on roots and berries."

"He was——"

"No, I assure you," interrupted Elam, with an amusing look at my wife, "the boy was not a young woman in disguise, if that's what you are thinking. He was just a poor, weak, half starved lad, named Edwards. I fed and nursed him until he was able to work for himself, and then I got Sam Chong Sung to let him take up a claim alongside a Chinese camp, promising to favor the Chinaman in a beef contract if he would be good to the boy. I still continued to see a great deal of him."

"And did Edwards succeed?"

"Yes, he got on. One day two Chinamen stole some of Sam Chong Sung's horses; and he offered four hundred dollars to Edwards if he would go after the thieves and track them. Edwards asked my advice, and I encouraged him to go, telling him where I fancied he would find the men. So he started in pursuit; and I confess I missed him."

Again Elam paused. We did not interrupt him.

"A man came to my fort one day who was naked and starving. He was a bad looking fellow, very; but you will say a man naturally does look bad when his clothes are nowhere, and his bones protrude through their skin. I clothed him, fed him, cared for him kindly until he was able to travel, and then he went away. The next Sunday I was sitting outside my fort, as customary on that leisure day, reading some translations from the Greek poets—for I daresay you remember I could never make much of Greek itself—when, chancing to look off my book, I beheld a vision."

"A what?"

"A vision. A vision of a lovely woman. And I can tell you I should as soon have expected to see a vision there as a woman. I had seen neither for a year or two. She was riding up the approach to my fort on a fine horse; riding gracefully and very slowly as if to give me time to get over my surprise; and I believe I needed it. The picture she made is in my mind now; I see the very flicker of the shadow and the sunlight across the road and the glitter of some steel that fastened her horse's trappings, as he arched his neck in impatience of her restraining hand.——Are you tired, old friend?"

"Never less so in my life."

"You see I had been alone so long; and I think I must be susceptible. That vision, breaking in suddenly as it did upon my solitude, gave me the queerest sensations. I was just spell bound. Not so she. Reining in her horse at my gate, she squared around on her saddle and looked at me, silently asking my assistance to dismount. I helped her down—what else could I do?—and then, at her request, gently preferred, went to put up her horse. Had she dropped from the clouds? I did not know."

"Well?"

"If you'll believe me, when I returned indoors my guest had got her habit off. Evidently she meant to make herself at home. A tall, young, beautiful, well-dressed woman! Just a goddess she looked to me. Her eyes were large, black, and melting, her hair was grand, her manner easy. She was hungry, she said; would I give her something to eat? And while I was making preparations to give her of my best, she read aloud one of the Greek translations, an ode to Diana, commenting upon it herself. That she was a woman of culture and education, whatever might have brought her into her present strange position, was obvious. Well, now," continued Elam, "you can guess whether a young man isolated on the mountains, ruined by the grasshoppers, and jilted by the girl of the Wallamet Valley, was bewildered or not. Entertaining goddesses was not in my line."

"How long did she stay?"

"Wait a bit. What with reading and eating, our acquaintance improved fast. She offered to sing me a song, and gave me 'Kate Kearny.' I might have lost my head to her, perhaps, to say nothing of my heart, but for a certain inward latent doubt. I did not care that my girl should ride about elegantly attired, on prancing horses, and drop down unexpectedly upon hermits. Still it was a pleasant feeling to find one's-self near her, and certainly a novel one. I asked her her history and she told it me. She was of a good New England family, reared in affluence, well educated and accomplished; but by a freak of fortune she became reduced to poverty, and to be an exile from home——"

"What was the freak of fortune, Elam?"

"Ah, what indeed? The old story, I suppose; but I did not ask her. She had made her way to California, resolving to get on and get money—and she had got it. She went about form camp to camp, of the miners and others, with stationary and various articles needed by them; sold them these things, wrote letters for them, sang to them, nursed them when sick, and carried their letters express to San Francisco to be posted. For all these services she received large payments—money is not much valued, you know, over there—and she had also had a good deal of rough gold given to her as specimens. Did she like that kind of life, I asked her, so contrary to her early habits, and she answered me quickly: 'It is not what we choose that we do in this world, but what Fate chooses for us. I have made a competency, and gained a rich and varied experience. Life may not be what I once pictured it would be, but I am content.' She sighed as she said it; and I didn't believe in the 'content.'"

"But what had brought her to you that day?"

"She had not told me herself then. Presently I asked her; asked her why she came to see me. I never shall forget the smile with which she turned to answer. I pretty nigh disarmed me. We were sitting somewhat close too; her flowing silk gown touched my knees. Altogether, I began to think of those useless pegs in my house in Rogue's River Valley. But what she said pulled up my wandering thoughts and turned them to present things. 'Shall you be surprised to hear that I have come to do you a real service?' said she. And she went on to relate that, having had to spend the previous night at a place not many miles away, in a house where partitions were thin, she had chanced to overhear a plan for my murder and robbery; the villian in chief of the plot being the starved and naked wretch whom I had sheltered and sent away rejoicing not many days previous. All in a moment, while I was pondering on the doubtful problem of gratitude, a fancy came over me that she might not be telling the truth; that it might be an excuse got up to justify her own entrance; and I playfully hinted so.

Look Out For This.

About four or five years ago, a project known as the Louisville Lottery Association was extensively advertised in this section of the country, and so plausible were the terms and prizes offered that a great many people were induced to invest in it. As is usual in such schemes, many of the subscribers saw no prizes and heard no more of the money they had invested in the concern. Within a few days a circular has made its appearance in these parts addressed to all the parties who had subscribed years ago, stating that $94,000 worth of unclaimed prizes remained in the hands of the Louisville Lottery Association, and, after a long introductory, the circular goes on to state that the party to whom it is addressed has drawn such and such a prize, but in order to pay certain lawsuits in which the Finance Committee has been involved in attempting to secure, as they claim, the rights of subscribers, a percentage of ten per cent. of the value of the article is levied to pay the expenses of said suits. The circular further states that a firm in New York, known as Messrs. Russell & Co., was authorized to receive the ten per cent. and forward the prizes. A prominent gentleman in this city invested in the enterprise when it was inaugurated. He heard no more from his money until he received one of the circulars, which stated that he had drawn a gold watch and chain, valued at $150, and that by sending the ten per cent. assessment ($15) he would receive the prize. The gentleman wrote to the above firm, instructing them to send the watch and chain per Adams Express. In the meanwhile, he wrote to an acquaintance in New York, asking him to investigate the standing of Russell & Co., and subsequently received an answer to the effect that the writer had looked up the above parties, and was satisfied they were a swindling concern. A day or two after, the gentleman received a letter from Russell & Co., saying that they had received orders to put his watch in good repair, which would cost $2 more, and on his sending the money it would be forwarded. In a few days he received another letter from New York, this time from "Hetherington & Co.," saying substantially that the business of collecting the ten per cent. had been transferred to them, and that his watch and chain would be forwarded per Adams Express. Thus the matter stands. The gentleman has no idea of paying $15. He thinks that the firm referred to has in some way got hold of the old books of the Louisville Lottery Association, and is taking this method of swindling people; that the whole thing is a fraud, and he hopes to warn all parties concerned.—Boston Herald.

Lynch Law in Texas.

GIDDINGS, July 6.—Lee County is largely woodland, the growth being mostly post-oak, affording excellent timber. The prairie portion affords splendid grazing for cattle. Thieves have long infested portions of the county. The cattle of the prairies have been stolen in large numbers. Horses and cattle have been systematically stolen and driven off. It has been impossible to convict the thieves. Their numbers are so great that they conceal each other and the stolen property, or conveniently prove in court all that is necessary to liberate the guilty. The people, despairing for redress by ordinary process of law, have for some time been engaging in pursuing extraordinary means. Judge Lynch has frequently been appealed to.

About fourteen persons in the last two or three years have been hanged or shot by vigilants in Lee County. Some were taken out of jail, some caught at their homes, and the latest haul was made at a dancing party at a private house, where four young men were carried two hundred yards from the scene of revelry and hanged. The people of the house were afraid to venture out till next morning, when they found their late guests, stark and cold, swinging by their necks from post-oak limbs. As the young men were being carried out by their masked captors, they repeatedly called out to the girls they had been dancing with to come out and see them hanged. They knew their fate.

A MAN who wears a very promising boot, went home the other night, and being asked to get a scuttle of coal, he refused because of weariness. Said he: "It don't seem as if I could put one foot before the other.' "What's the matter?" asked the miserable woman; "ain't there room?" He got the coal.

"TRIPLETS," said the doctor, sententiously. The husband of one year rushed out on the back porch, thought of his slim income, glared upon a snow-clad yard and exclaimed with a wild laugh, "Son-struck in January."

ON last Friday the city of Cincinnati was visited by one of the most destructive fires that has occurred there for many years. The cigar-box factory of Geo. Pelstring & Co., on Broadway, was destroyed and several lives of employes lost. The loss in property is estimated at $200,000.

JOE GOSS has a hard time of it. Last Saturday night, after the close of his exhibition in Cincinnati he was arrested on a bench warrant sworn out in Covington by his bondsman. Goss was detained but a short time, being liberated on his own recognizance. The arrest was considered a piece of spite on the part of his bondsman.

THE working men's ticket cut a considerable figure in the election Monday. This is significant of the fact that the laboring class is looking forward to an organization for the protection of their political interest in this country, and that the time when the fight will be between capital and is drawing near, is believed by many.

THE Maritime Exchange has appointed a Committee to arrange the united action of the members of the different exchanges in prosecution of their claims, to consult with legal authorities, and to ascertain upon whom falls the losses and damages done by the recent strikers, and to decide as to the method of preparing, presenting and collecting the claims.

WHEAT threshing is now under way and the crop is yielding as well as was expected. If there is any money in the country the large wheat crops that will be put upon the market by this State will surely soften the times about which there has been so much complaint. Although all the farmers complain of the scarcity of money, many of them will hold their small grain and doubtless realize a reduced price.

THE markets have been steady this week. Flour has a fair demand and is selling at $7 50 per barrel for best grades. Corn remains quiet and is bringing 49 cents. Wheat sells for $1 10 and $1 25 per bushel. There is a large quantity of potatoes on the market, and the demand being strictly local the sales were light, prices ranging from 90 cents to $1 20 per barrel. Eggs bring 7 and 8 cents per dozen.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

ST. LOUIS, MO., August 4, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

We begin to feel as if we were ourself once more. The first four days of last week, we did not know exactly whether we were living, existing, subsisting, or just staying a while. Had you been here and have seen what we saw, you, doubtless, would have felt about as we did, and that is, you did not exactly know how you felt.

The fore part of last week, communism was rampant, and good and orderly citizens stood in awe and dismay. Only think of it—on Tuesday, of last week, only one block from where we sit, we saw about 500 roughs (mostly colored) board the Steamer Centennial, that was then loaded and ready to start to New Orleans, ransack the boat on lower deck, from jackstaff to rudder, and then go through the main cabin, flourishing knives, clubs and pistols, compelling every honest laborer to quit work, and the boat, for the time being, to tie up, and not a man dare open his mouth against such proceedings. And this was only a fair sample of what was done throughout the city, at all the mills, manufactories, and places where the laborer earned an honest living. It was truly appalling. We heard, with our own ears, from the lips of men that heretofore made pretentions to respectability and honesty, that the railroads, manufactories and capital of this country, and even the Government itself belonged to the laboring classes, and from this time forward, they, the laborers would own, govern and control all things. These things were not only spoken on the street corners, but were proclaimed by the noble leaders from the platform and places of public speaking.

But business is now fairly resumed, and passenger and freight trains go out and come in on schedule time, and riot and communism is seemingly as a thing of the past. And we may now congratulate ourselves (though for a few days we were completely at the mercy of thieves and burners) as having come out of all without loss of life, or any serious loss or damage to property. We never in our life saw as big a thing as that riot promised to be, collapse in so short a time. Strange as it may appear, it is, nevertheless, a fact, that one week ago, there were here in this city, situated in a land of plenty, said to be governed by human and Christian principles, no less than two regular organized bands of communist, one of whites said to number 1,500, whose sole object it was to take what ever they could lay their hands on by force or otherwise, and appropriate the same to their own use and benefit. The whole affair seemed to come so suddenly, and in such gigantic proportions that it seemed to take our better class of citizens completely by surprise. In fact, the affair came with such fury that only one of our daily papers at first seemed to have the manly courage to meet the thing fairly and squarly and condemn it, and that paper, be it said to its great credit, was the Republican. The other papers, while it can not be said that they encouraged the riot, it may be truthfully said that they did not boldly condemn it, and one paper, the Globe Democrat, the first of the week, gave its readers to understand that it would not do to tread on the coat tail of a mob. Thousands of individuals at first, through fear alone, expressed themselves as being in sympathy with the strikers. But by noon Friday, the better class, with the aid of the U. S., State and City Governments, tested their strength, and on that afternoon, arrested in one batch 73 of the Internationals and a number of the leaders of the communists, and kept on making arrests during Saturday and Sunday, and when Monday morning dawned on us, we had peace and quiet throughout the city. There are now about 100 of the ring leaders looking through iron bars at the jail, many of whom will, undoubtedly, shortly be furnished with lodgings at Jefferson City, with board furnished for several years, and clothes thrown in, made after the manner and style of that big man in New York City, known as "Boss Tweed." It is not within the jurisdiction of this Court to say what ought to be done with these fellows, but were we called upon to make a decision therein, an application of hemp would be used in most cases. Now, while we are prepared to express our utter condemnation of rioters, disturbers of the peace, or even what are commonly called strikers, we are nevertheless prepared to affirm that the man, be he citizen, politican or statesmen, that views this mighty uprising of the working masses as being without significance, is certainly blind and can not see afar off. There is food within it worthy of the consideration of the wisest heads in this nation. What is the real remedy in the case we know not; but there is certainly a screw loose some place. This thing had its beginning at the Atlantic Coast, extending and spreading to our western, northern and southern borders, and, though we can, to-day, boast of a land flowing with milk and honey, it is nevertheless true, there are thousands, yea tens of thousands, at this day, of able bodied men and women, all over this land that go to bed every night hungry, and do not know where the next day's rations are to come from. These things we say are not without significance, and they demand the most serious and earnest consideration of our law-makers as well as our executors of law. No longer than yesterday, while we were emerging from the smoke and confusion of the hour, we noticed in one of our city papers that our City and County Collector would be compelled to gather in all delinquent taxes within the next few months, and that besides the heavy penalty for not paying within the time prescribed by a law, the law gave the Collector or his deputy, the right to seize the last piece of property a man has and sell the same to the highest bidder. Now, we have known of the poor widow's only means of support (her sewing machine) being seized for taxes, for with us everything is taxable, and not even the last bed upon which the poor old worn out laborer rests his weary limbs is free or exempt from taxation on the hands of the tax-gatherer. May we not modestly ask, these things being so, is there not a possibility or a probability that some of these days this government may rightfully be considered as becoming oppressive? Your many readers are too intelligent to not know for the past few years, everything in this country in the shape or nature of trade has had a tendency to rings or monopolies, all of which has a tendency to enrich a few and impoverish the masses. Our boasted government seemingly can not borrow a few million of dollars unless it does so through a syndicate at an expense of ½ of one per cent. commission, to enrich what our learned Secretary of the U. S. Treasury politely calls a Syndicate, but what common people know to be nothing more and nothing less than a ring. We, in common with the masses, think it right to issue the 4 per cent bonds and redeem bonds at a higher rate of interest with the proceeds, which of course lessens taxation; but we can see about as much use for the fifth-wheel to the wagon as we can for employing a syndicate for the disposal of said bonds, while the whole country is full of National Banks. As intimated, we do not propose in this article a remedy, but we do insist that the signs of the times demand the earnest, thoughtful and most serious consideration of our most prudent and wisest statesmen.

There are, however, a few things that stare us in the face from Monday morning until Saturday night, and on the Lord's day our mind is not entirely freed from them: First, we, as a nation, are groaning and writhing under heavy taxation. Secondly, there is too great a tendency all over this land, in every branch of trade or commerce, to corporations and monopolies. And, lastly, for this article, there are but few men that know how much we are taxed. We do not pretend to know; but we do know that we, the people of St. Louis, are paying a direct tax of 3½ per cent., but how much indirect tax the consumer pays we know not. But the man who takes his social glass of Kentucky's favorite beverage, pays indirectly a tax of 600 per cent. The man who takes his drink of coffee or tea, pays a tax of ½ of its original value, and so on with at least half that it takes to clothe the inner and outer man. But these things wo only throw out in the way of suggestions and for the present leave their discussion for wiser and better heads.

Elder John A. Brooks, of the Christian Church, and Rev. Jacob Ditzler, of the M. E. Church South, both former Kentuckians, are having a theological tilt, this week, at the town of Sante Fee, this State. We have the honor of knowing both of these gentlemen for more than 20 years, and for our knowledge of both of them, we think we are authorized to say the debate may be set down as occuring under the head of "The eternal fitness of things." They are gentlemen near the same age, each possessing an excellent flow of speech as well as having individually a goodly share of self-confidence and self-respect. We believe both of them are old dispensationists, as Bro. Brooks seems perfectly at home in Latin and Greek, and Bro. Ditzler professes to understand the "Arabic" better than he does the English. We, however, think Bro. Brooks a little the best looking. This we say without any intended offense to Bro. Ditzler, or without the least desire to take sides in the contest; for we in conclusion say: "Go it John, go it Jake, we don't care which whips."

Well, now, having spoken of strikes and strikers until we are tired, we would only say it strikes us that this letter will strike you as being about long enough, and for the present we will strike for a rest.

Darius Workman, convicted of bigamy on his own confession and to leave for the penitentiary next morning for three years, refused to go out.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

IMMENSE.

Three Thousand of Boone Yeomanry Listen to the Trio of Grange Speeches —A Big Procession—A Big Dinner—A Big Thing All Over.

Last Saturday was the day selected by the Boone County Grangers to give their annual harvest feast at this place. The weather was fine, and at an early hour Saturday morning the crowd commenced gathering from all parts of the county; and, judging from the immense number that assembled, the county was well drained, there being but a few sick and their nurses left to take care of the greater portion of the county. That everything pertaining to feast should be done at the proper time and in the proper manner, a programme half the length of the Declaration of Independence had been prepared, adopted and placed in the hands of Mr. Wm. M. Conner, Marshal of the day, for execution.

The members of the Grange who took part in the procession assembled in the woods near the tollgate, where the procession was organized, there being six lodges marching in the column as lodges, viz.: East Bend, Bellevue, Mt. Pleasant, Petersburg, Point Pleasant and Mt. Zion.

THE PROCESSION,

Headed by a brass band, was formed as follows: First came the banner bearer (upon the banner was inscribed the name of the Grange, its number and date of organization), followed the Master accompanied by Ceres, next the Overseer with Pomona, then the Lecturer with Flora, then Steward with Lady Assistant Steward, next Secretary and Treasurer, the Gate-Keeper and Assistant Steward, the Chaplain with a sister. These officers of each Grange were followed by the remaining members, a male and female marching together. When the procession was complete and ready to move, it contained two hundred and thirty persons. The point from which the column marched was near four hundred yards from the stand. When it arrived at that point, it encompassed the stand and the seats twice, and was dissolved.

THE FIRST SPEAKER,

And the only one before noon, was Mr. Whitehead, Master of the Massachusetts State Grange. He spoke about an hour and a half, at the conclusion of which the feast became literal.

THE DINNER

Prepared for the occasion consisted of everything that the best of cooks and the liberal farmers of the county could furnish. That our readers can form some idea of the amount of food spread before the multitude, it is only necessary to say three thousand people satisfied their hunger and failed to exhaust the sumptuous supplies.

IN THE AFTERNOON

The exercises of the day were resumed by a speech from Mr. Pratt. This was followed by Mrs. Pratt. During her speech, the entire crowd seemed anxious to catch every word as it fell from her lips. For an hour and fifteen minutes she held the crowd in breathless silence, with her eloquent and instructive speech. Many there were who, being unable to get within earshot of the stand, stood and watched her during the entire speech, as though every syllable spoken was clearly audible. Mrs. Pratt's speech was the speech of the day, being highly complimented by all who heard it for its eloquence and valuable teachings.

TERPSICHOREAN.

After the speaking the programme was varied. The benches were removed and the dancing fraternity turned loose in the dust, which arose and went up from off the ground as a great fog. The crowd began melting away at the conclusion of the speeches, but those who could brave the dust on the ground prepared for dancing, and many others remained till near 6 o'clock.

By some the crowd during the day was estimated at 4,000 people; but that was undoubtedly an over-estimate. It was decidedly an orderly crowd, and especially so when its immense proportions and the altitude of the political temperature are considered.

The dancing fraternity, not being satisfied with the limited time devoted to tearing up the dirt in the woods, resolved to have a ball in the hall at the Morgan Academy, in which is the finest room in the county for said amusement. Quite a number of those who delight in tripping the light fantastic remained and attended the ball, which was quite recherche.

The entertainment of the entire day was marked with quiet and good behavior.

County Court.

In the County Court, Monday, the following business was transacted:

Oscar Crisler's will was probated; T. W. Finch qualifying as executor with J. A. Kendall on bond.

Rosa King, of Walton, was granted tavern license.

H. Ashley was allowed $40 for material and work on the jail.

T. W. Finch was allowed $11 79, poor-house account.

A copy of the will of Richard Banks was admitted to probate.

J. A. Huey was appointed administrator of O. W. Huey, G. W. Huey on bond.

Elijah Parker resigned as Deputy County Clerk.

J. A. Wilson was appointed and qualified as Deputy County Clerk.

THE School Commissioner informs us that the per capita for each white child reported for the school year ending June 30th, 1878, is $1 65. This does not include the interest on the county bonds. The Commissioner has received Collins' History of Kentucky for the use of common schools in the county. One copy of this history will be furnished the Trustee of each district by his receipting for it.

No rain election day. That's strange.

OFF FOR SALT RIVER!

The new, elegant and splendidly furnished Steamer,

BOOMERANG,

Will make an excursion trip up that romantic stream, Salt River, leaving Anderson's Ferry Saturday, the 18th inst., at 2 p. m., and touching at all the way landings as far as Hamilton. Those who want passage will meet the boat at the several landings. None but Conner men need apply for passage. The steamer will be "officered" next week.

Geewhillikins.

This county has now just emerged from one of the most heated political contests experienced since the days the Whig and Democrat hosts were so equally divided. At no time in the history of the Democratic party in Boone has it passed through just such a season of heat and labor in its camps; but the war is now over, so let peace reign supreme. The vote polled Monday was unprecedentedly large, and hung heavily on one side.

At some places considerable excitement existed, and the election was not as quiet as it has been known in the past. At Burlington the crowd was large, and in a manner quiet on the part of the whites. The negroes got slightly top-heavy, and in the afternoon two of them had an old time set-to. Neither was badly hurt.

At Petersburg we hear of one man who got his eyebrow taken off by a bullet, and another who was cut in several places.

Florence, Taylorsport, Bellevue and Rabbit Hash were each the scene of slight knock-downs.

In the result of the vote cast, the Conner men were greatly surprised, and it is highly probable that the Rouse men were also. The poll-books were not opened in time for us to give the official vote at each district, but enough is known to safely say Mr. Rouse's majority in the county is 350. We will give the official vote by districts next week.

Died.

WALTON—On the night of the 5th inst., Mrs. Nora Walton, wife of Jas. H. Walton.

Mrs. Walton was a member of the Grange, and was interred by the members of that Order on last Monday.

PIATT—On July 28th, Lida, only child of Jacob and Inez C. Piatt, aged 9 months and 8 days.

"There is no flock, however watched and
But one dead lamb is there; [tended
There is no fireside, howsoe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair.

"She is not dead, the child of our affection,
But gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection
And Christ Himself doth rule."

THE Old Hoosier Base-Ball Club will play the Preston Club, from New Haven, Ohio, Saturday, August 11th, at Aurora.

No one has died from the effects of the election yet.

THERE is a general sobering off now.

THE politicians now have time to rest.

Krums of Kumfurt for the Konner Krowd.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

As a supporter of the defeated candidate, we hardly have sufficient command of our faculties to risk an expression of our thoughts on the subject of this worse than Plevna disaster. But we feel swamped, and can only seek consolation in resigning our preference and accepting that of the people in the kindliest spirit possible under such adverse circumstances, remembering, "Vox populi vox Dei."

KRUM 2. Ho now for that historic stream, in ancient days renowned as a happy retreat for the weary, care-worn and down-hearted politician, for we know that, though outnumbered, routed and panic stricken here, we have many friends who have gone before and are waiting and watching for our coming, ready to extend to us that sympathy and consolation it were worse than madness to dream of here. Then let us be off and up Salt River to its furthest rill! Let the pilgrimage now begin, with our Captain in the lead.

KRUM 3. No school tax in that home far up this noble stream will e'er thrust itself athwart our path. Men—men alone—live in that happy land. No women or prattling ones to educate.

KRUM 4. No dogs, terrier, hound or sneaking cur, has ever chased a fox, caught a rat or sucked an egg up where we go. No dog tax or sheep fund is heard of there to turn the rustic's head and knock the statesman's cob house down.

KRUM 5. We will have no stock law, good nor bad; for cow, nor calf, nor horse, nor hog, nor pig is food for this pilgrim band; and there the fish laws are not in force, we understand.

KRUM 6. And there we will stay till "Justice" figures our Captain in.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Business was very good last week. The stock market was looking up quite lively. There were 60 horses sold at auction at prices ranging from $15 to $110. The offerings were better than for two months before, but still not enough to supply the demand. There is a good demand for mules at good prices, and but few on the market. There were 12 or 15 sold at auction at from $45 to $105 per head.

The cattle market opened fair last week, with about 600 head on the market. Best butchers' sold from 4c. to 4¼c; medium, 3½@3¾c; common, 1½@2½c. There was a slight decline on good cattle the last of the week.

The hog market opened with good offerings and a fair demand at 4½@4¾c. for best grades, and 3½@4c. for common to fair. This was an advance of ¼c. over last week.

The sheep and lamb market was dull, with good offerings of old sheep at 3½@3¾c. for the best, lambs 4½@4¾c. for choice and 3½@3¾c. for common.

The tobacco market was active, with no material change in prices. The offerings and demand was fair. The receipts for the week were 1,165 hhds.

The wool market remains firm, with but little doing. The prices remain stationary at last quotations.

The grain market remains firm. The receipts of wheat were light, with a fair milling and shipping demand at $1 10@1 15 for red, and $1 20@1 30 for amber and white on arrival. There is a good deal of damp grain coming in at 60c.@$1 per bushel. Oats are quiet, without change in prices. Corn remains firm, without change. Rye brings 53@60c., on arrival. Barley remains as last quoted. Hay unchanged.

The poultry and produce market was very good. There was a slight decline in eggs; good fresh eggs are worth 7c. Choice butter, 15@18c. Old chickens, $2 50@2 75 per dozen; spring chickens, $1 25@2.

Potatoes have declined 25@40c. on the barrel. Onions have also declined from 40 to 60 cents on the barrel, and the market is overstocked at $1 25@2 per brl. Roasting corn has declined largely, the market being stocked at 60c. per brl. Tomatoes have fallen from $1@1 25 per bushel to 15@25c. per bushel. Cabbage firm at 40@50c. per brl. Sweet potatoes have declined, and are readily had at $3@3 50 per brl. Cucumbers are plenty at $1 50 per brl. Pickle cucumbers, $1 per brl. Egg plants bring 25c. per doz.

The fruit market is still, with no material change in prices. Plums, $1 50@2 per bushel. Blackberries scarce at $2 per bushel. Cantoupes, $4@4 50 per brl. Watermelons, 15@20c. by the car load. They retail from 40 to 60 cents.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

COVINGTON STOCK YARDS, August 6.

Cattle—Supply liberal and demand not quite so good, with prices some lower. Shippers' selling at 4½@5c.; butchers' extra, 4@4¼c.; butchers' good, 3½@4c.; butchers' common, 2½@3½c.

Milch Cows—None on the market.

Veal Calves—Selling at 4½@5c.

Sheep—Supply liberal, with a demand about equal. Shippers' selling at 4½@5c.; extra butchers', 4@4½c.; good butchers', 3½@4c.; stockers, 2½@3c.

Lambs—Receipts more liberal in the last few days than they have been since the strike, with a better demand and prices higher. Shippers' selling at $5@5 30; butchers', $3@5.

Hogs—Receipts about equal to demand, and the market ruled firm, selling at $3@5 30.

The basket meeting at Mount Zion was a grand success. The day was fair and a very large crowd in attendance. Rev. Ilyer preached a very able sermon. Not over half the persons present were able to get in the church. We noticed people from nearly all parts of our own county and quite a number from Grant and Kenton counties.

The Annual Association Meeting of the Old School Baptist of this county occurs on the last week in August at the Dry Creek Church. We understand that efforts are being made to have it in Mr. Carpenter's woods, near Florence, where there is one of the finest groves in the county. Should the weather prove unfavorable, there are two churches near the grove either of which could be had for the occasion.

Walton.

The passenger trains on the Southern R. W. have been running daily for over a week, one train each way. The citizens of Walton and vicinity are very much interested in the location of the Southern depot. There are two places under discussion, one on Mr. Joe Chambers' land, where the present switch is; the other, on the opposite side of the pike from the old Murphy place. The Trustees have right of way for building a road from the Railway to the turnpike. So it is generally believed this will be the site decided upon.

There were two additions to the Walton Baptist Church on last Saturday a week.

The two Sabbath Schools are not in as flourishing a condition as could be wished.

So many meetings in the neighborhood to attend Sunday a week that it took a great deal of thought to determine which one it would be most profitable for one to attend.

Mr. Justus Hudson met with quite a streak of luck the other day. He found three twenty-dollar gold pieces near an old chimney on his farm. The place had formerly belonged to Mr. Fountain Riddell, who, during the war, is said to have buried eight hundred dollars in gold. It was stolen, as he supposed by some of his negroes. This, probably, was lost at the time, and has remained hidden until this late day. It is not often one finds such a bonanza in one day, as sixty dollars.

Mr. Warren, a former resident of this place, lent the light of his countenance to us for a short time, and made at least one fair face look exceedingly happy.

Mr. George Gaines has again been on a trip to Texas, and returns more anxious to remove there and make it his permanent home.

Mrs. Frederika Schaffer has been on a short visit to her parents.

DON'T TAKE IT TO HEART.

BY GEORGIANA C. CLARK.

There's many a trouble
Would break like a bubble,
And into the waters of Lethe depart,
Did we not rehears it,
And tenderly nurse it,
And give it a permanent place in the heart.

There's many a sorrow
Would vanish to-morrow,
Were we but willing to furnish the wings;
So sadly intruding,
And quietly brooding,
It batches all sorts of horrible things.

How welcome the feeming,
Of looks that are beaming,
Whether one's wealthy or whether one's poor;
Eyes bright as a berry,
Cheeks red as a cherry,
The groan, and the curse, and the heartache can cure.

Resolved to be merry,
All worry to ferry
Across the famed waters that bids us forget,
And no longer fearful,
But happy and cheerful,
We feel life has much that's worth living for yet.

Monthly Report from the Bureau of Agriculture, Horticulture and Statistics.

FRANKFORT, KY., August 1, 1877.

The first of August greets us with prospects of a most bountiful crop year. The latter part of the month of June was generally dry, except in some favored sections of the State. The first half of July was also dry; so much so as seriously to interfere with the growth of corn and tobacco; but this drought greatly favored the harvesting of all the small grain crops and hay, so that, probably, there never was a harvest completed under more favorable weather in the State. Since the middle of the month there have been copious rains everywhere in the country, and now the ground is in excellent order for the growth of all kinds of vegetables, fruits and crops.

Dividing the State into agricultural sections for convenience, I find in section 1, composed of the counties west of the Tennessee River and in the southwest part of the State, that the reports make the acreage of corn 108; wheat, 105; oats, 95; rye, 90; clover, 85; hay grasses, 105; tobacco, 110; potatoes, 105; ground peas, 100; apples, 105; peaches, 90; pears, 90; vineyards, 105; berries, 110; garden products, 110; and dairy products, 105. Live stock, in average numbers, are reported: Horses, 102; mules, 105; cattle, 90; hogs 80; sheep, 75; bees, 90; poultry, 105. In present condition, corn is 90; tobacco, 85; potatoes, 100; apples, 75; peaches, 25; melons and garden products, 110; dairy products, 110; vineyards, 100; berries, 105. All kinds of live stock and poultry at full average. The wheat, oats, rye and hay grasses have all been harvested in excellent order, and have yielded fully up to previous calculations. The largest wheat average is in Graves County, where some picked crops will go over 25 bushels per acre. There are some sporadic cases of hog cholera, but less than usual.

In the second division, lying west of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and south of Muldraugh's Hill, the reports are on acreage of crops: Corn, 110; wheat, 105; rye, 100; oats, 90; flax, 65; clover, 90; hay grasses, 100; tobacco, 110; potatoes, 108; apples, 90; pears, 85; peaches, 90; vineyards, 108; berries, 110; garden products, 110; dairy products, 110. Live stock, in average numbers, are reported: Horses, 100; mules, 102; cattle, 95; hogs, 85; sheep, 75; bees, 90; poultry, 105. In present condition corn is 90; tobacco, 90; potatoes, 95; apples, 75; peaches, 20; melons and garden products, 110; dairy products, 110; vineyards, 95; berries, 105. All kinds of live stock are in good average condition, with very little hog or chicken cholera, except in Crittenden, Ohio and Daviess counties, and even in these it is not as fatal as usual. J. D. Bennett, of McLean County, says: "Barley, buckwheat and rice are being experimented with this season, and promise, at this time, to succeed well. Farmers are also experimenting with fertilizers, and trying to get out of the old 'ruts.'" This is the only rice we have ever known tried in the State. The wheat, other small grain and grasses have been harvested in first-rate condition, and the berries are more full and plump than for many years. The largest yields of wheat in the State are reported from Christian and Henderson counties, where some farms yield an average of from 25 to 30 bushels to the acre, and in some extra cases over 40 bushels. It is thought that Christian will export about one million of bushels, which will be the largest amount ever sent from one county. Two-thirds of the wheat in this section is threshed, and one-third sold and mostly delivered.

In the third district, from the Louisville and Nashville Railroad to the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, and south of the Lebanon branch, the reports place the acreage of corn, 105; wheat, 100; rye, 100; oats, 95; flax, 60; clover, 95; orchard grass, 110; hay grasses, 100; tobacco, 105; potatoes, 105; apples, 100; pears, 95; peaches, 90; vineyards, 100; berries, 110; garden products, 105; dairy products, 105. Live stock, in average numbers—Horses, 105; mules, 105; cattle, 85; hogs, 80; sheep, 80; poultry, 105; bees, 105. In present condition, corn is 95; tobacco, 85; potatoes, 100; apples, 75; pears, 70; peaches, 30; melons and garden products, 105; dairy products, 110; vineyards, 100; berries, 110. All kinds of live stock are in unusual good order, with less hog cholera than usual at this season of the year. The wheat, oats, rye, barley and hay grasses are all harvested in good order, and much of the wheat threshed. The grain is excellent, and the yield fully as heavy as was anticipated. The best average wheat crops are in Barren and Hart counties.

In the fourth district, composed of the Ohio River counties above Louisville and below Cincinnati, the acreage of crops is—Corn, 105; wheat, 90; rye, 100; oats, 95; hemp, 80; clover, 90; tobacco, 80; potatoes, 105; pears, 100; apples, 105; peaches, 75; vineyards, 105; hay grasses, 110; berries, 105; garden products, 110; orchard grass, 110; dairy products, 110. Live stock, in average numbers—Horses, 90; mules, 80; cattle, 95; hogs, 85; sheep, 100; poultry, 110; bees, 105. In present condition—Corn, 95; tobacco, 80; potatoes, 100; apples, 70; peaches, 20; pears, 75; melons and garden products, 110; dairy products, 110; vineyards 100; berries, 105. Live stock is in good condition, with some hog cholera, particularly fatal among pigs. The wheat and other small grain and hay harvested in very fine order, and the yield the best since the war. In Boone is the best average wheat crop, some fields yielding 20, some 25 to 30 bushels, and one field reported at 40 bushels to the acre. The barley is sweet, clear and fine.

In the blue-grass counties, which compose the fifth district, the reports of crop acreage is—For corn, 105; wheat, 95; rye, 105; oats, 90; hemp, 90; clover, 95; tobacco, 85; potatoes, 105; apples, 105; pears, 100; peaches, 70; vineyards, 105; berries, 105, garden products, 110; orchard grass, 110; hay grasses, 90; dairy products, 110. Live stock, in average numbers—Horses, 95; mules, 90; cattle, 105; hogs, 90; sheep, 100; poultry, 110; bees, 80. In present condition—Corn, 90; tobacco, 85; potatoes, 100; hemp, 100; peaches, 20; pears, 60; apples, 65; melons and garden products, 105; berries, 110; vineyards, 100; dairy products, 110. Stock of all kinds is in excellent average condition, owing to the fine blue-grass pasturage this summer. The wheat, barley and other small grain and hay were all harvested in most excellent order, and the grains are large, full and plump, being better in quality than for fifteen years. The largest average wheat yields per acre are in Woodford, Boyle, Madison and Washington counties, where 30 bushels per acre are quite common, and over that on some choice lots. Scott and Franklin have the best average yields of barley. There is less hog cholera than usual.

In the sixth district, composed of the mountain counties, the acreage of corn is 105; wheat, 90; rye, 100; oats, 95; flax, 60; clover, 90; tobacco, 100; potatoes, 105; garden products, 105; apples, 110; peaches, 100; pears, 100; vineyards, 105; berries, 105; dairy products, 105; hay grasses, 90. Average numbers of live stock—Horses, 105; mules, 95; cattle, 105; hogs, 100; sheep, 95; poultry, 100; bees, 75. In present condition—Corn, 90; tobacco, 80; potatoes, 100; peaches, 100; apples, 105; pears, 105; berries, 110; vineyards, 100; melons and garden products, 105; dairy products, 105. In present condition, the live stock is above average, owing to the fine mountain grass this season.

In the entire State, the corn will average 108 in acreage; wheat, 105; oats, 95; barley, 105; rye, 95; orchard grass, 110; tobacco, 108; hay grasses, 90, clover, 90. In the yield of wheat, barley, oats and rye, the State has the best crops since the war, and the best in quality for 20 years. The wheat yield, in bushels, will be 12½ per cent., and barley 8 per cent. above average. There is a marked increase in the hog crop, owing to the cessation of cholera in some sections. Isaac Shelby, of Boyle, in connection with several others, recommends Crab Orchard salts as both a cure and preventive for hog cholera; and C. Deweese, of Carroll County, says that he finds poke root, boiled, mashed up and given to hogs will destroy vermin and cure the cholera most effectually. There is great complaint of sheep-killing dogs from almost every county in the State. They seem to prefer the mutton of fine-blooded Merinos, Southdown and Cotswolds.

The exceedingly fine showing made by the crops in Kentucky, this season, is due in a great measure to the fact that nature last winter, through the heavy freezes, disintegrated the mineral elements of plant food naturally existing in the soil, and the spring rains dissolved them, so that the rootlets of the plants could reach them and appropriate them as food. Such a combination of circumstances happens only about once in ten years, and ought to teach our farmers that, if they would fertilize their lands every year, just as nature did this year, by placing plant food, in a dissolved condition, where the rootlets can get it and assimulate it in the stomachs of the plants, they will have first-class crops every year, without fail. This they can do by the proper use of chemical or mineral fertilizers. I do hope that every farmer will begin to break up his wheat fallow early, so as to let the green crop rot well, and that he will try some fertilizer on a small lot of his wheat by way of an experiment. Bone-dust (superphosphate), land plaster, salt and potash (German kainit or ashes) are what wheat lands need. A good formula for wheat has been prepared by W. Skene, of Louisville, and probably by others there and in Cincinnati.

In reply to several correspondents who ask, "Will the good crops give us relief? and will we ever get over the hard times?" I can only say that we can not expect anything else but "hard times" so long as the bullionists have possession of the national government and make all the laws for the benefit of the moneyed men and bondholders. This crop is not a drop in the bucket toward giving relief, and nothing will do it so long as contraction of the currency is pressed on the country under the utopian pretense that a gold basis is what is needed. The only relief will be when greenbacks are made the full legal-tenders, even for tariff dues, and issued so as gradually to fill in the needs of commerce, and made to produce means to pay gradually the bonds. When this is done, and the national banks' circulation withdrawn, then, and not till then; can the farmers and merchants expect to get rid of hard times, whether it is done in one year or one hundred. Coming to a gold basis will, we think, give no relief, but only aggravate the matter, and double the danger from strikes, for all these strikes are the outgrowth of bonded indebtedness and contraction of the currency. We must look to the next Congress for the remedy.

I return my thanks to correspondents for their full and accurate reports.
W. J. DAVIE, Commissioner.

STATE NEWS.

—Mt. Sterling is to have a new library.

—Russell County is infested with a gang of thieves.

—Paris has made 1,000 gallons of blackberry wine.

—The yield of wheat throughout the State is large.

—Grayson Springs have become quite a summer resort.

—Extensive beds of marl have been discovered in Caldwell County.

—The blackberry trade in Paris amounted to $3,000 this season.

—Bath County holds her first fair this year, commencing August 14th.

—Grayson County has eighty-one school districts and but seventy-seven teachers.

—The Clark County Democrat says several sales of new corn have been made at $2 per barrel.

—It is said that some of the stock shippers about Lexington suffered much by reason of the strike.

—In the Covington District, for the month ending July 28th, there was $21,779 35 revenue collected.

—A Robertson County turkey hen has hatched nine partridges, and they follow her with the rest of the brood.

—In Larue County two men, one aged 75, and the other aged 72 years, each made a hand with the cradle in the harvest field.

—The sale of short-horns at Vanmeter's sale in Clark County, on last Thursday, netted $15,850. Sixty-three animals were sold.

—At several points along the Cincinnati Southern Railroad persons demand the fare on that road reduced. It is four cents per mile.

—Deputy United States Marshal James Walker was shot dead in Floyd County, and his body, after being robbed, was thrown in the creek.

—A fourteen-year-old son of Alex. Cooper, a farmer of Washington County, went to the field to plow, and in a short time the mule which he was using came running to the house with the mangled dead body of the boy entangled in the gearing.

—Paris True Kentuckian: A pig born at Dudley Talbott's, near Talbott's station, had two mouths and three eyes, one eye being situated in the center of the forehead, and the other eyes in their natural places. The pig was perfectly developed, but lived only three or four days.

—A man named Snapp, living in Nicholas County, was snapped on the foot by a copperhead snake. His foot swelled to twice the usual size, and he drank three pints of whisky, with no more intoxicating effect than a cup of coffee would have on a hungry tramp. The liquor, however, had the effect to counteract the poison sufficiently to save his life.

WE now and then hear of a grange store that is departing from the teachings of our Order, and selling on credit. Such a course will not give the success that should come from co-operation. If goods are sold on credit they must be bought on credit and at higher prices, and going in debt always involves risk. Make it a rule and live up to it, either to have the cash in the drawer or the goods on the shelves and you are safe. Any grange store on credit and encountering all the danger of the credit system, is sailing under false colors and is not a grange store. Our declaration of purposes says that "we discountenance the credit system, the mortgage system and all other systems tending to prodigality and bankruptcy." If failure comes to such a store the outside world point to it as a grange failure; it is not so; and directors, managers and stockholders should see to it that the teachings of our Order are lived up to or else take down their sign of grange store, and not bring discredit upon themselves and our whole Order by a failure or even the risk of a failure. Cash is king.—Grang Bulletin.

Shakertown and the Shakers.

This village, commonly called Shakertown, is one of the neatest in the world. The inhabitants thereof seem to believe that cleanliness is akin to Godliness, and carry out their belief by their works. This republic of Christians was first established in Mercer County in the year 1804—the oldest house in the town bears the date of 1811. The founders consisted of six persons—three of each sex—who came from New Lebanon, N. Y. For seventy-two years they have prospered.

The number of inhabitants, about two hundred, is not so great as in former years, and the head men have to hire from forty to fifty hands to assist in the farm work. A number are getting old and helpless. The Shakers do not manufacture as extensively as they did thirty years ago. Then they "cultivated" the silk worm with much care and attention; but finding it troublesome, as well as dirty work, and not at all remunerative, they have almost abandoned it. And when they found out it was more profitable to feed their calves than to take the milk and make cheese, they abandoned the manufacturing of that article for sale. And so with other things. But their preserves and brooms are the best in the market, and this trade they will have to keep up. Our Shakertown consists of five states or families, each separately governed, but conjointly controlled by the Church. Many of the men are intelligent and industrious, business-like and hospitable. The ladies are agreeable, and many of them handsome, and all remarkably tidy in their dress. They are plain but good livers; their tables are filled with all kinds of good and healthful food, but they do not use hog meat in any form, nor have they used it for nearly forty years. About the time they concluded to dispense with the use of swine, an order was passed to the effect that all under forty years of age should give up the use of tobacco, in all its forms, and, strange to say, only one, an elderly lady, continued in the dirty habit of using tobacco.—Observer.

OUR STATE.

Written for MAMIE PERKINS by her teacher, MR. GLANVILLE, and recited by her at the fourth of July celebration in 1877 at Grand Island, Neb., after reading an extract from SHERIDAN KNOWLES poem entitled "William Tell Among the Mountains."

Thus we, like Tell of old, would say,
When the Wind God rides his boist'rous way,
Nebraska's winds rush raging past,
Her winter storms howl hideous blast:
"Blow on! This is the land for me,
The land of purest liberty!"
And, ere we'll leave what thus we prize
To gain the smiles of calmer skies,
We'll brave her fiercest blast that blows,
Or struggle 'mid her blinding snows;
Burrow like wolves in her hills and hide,
Or build sod houses and keep inside
Till the tempest is past—its fury spent—
And then come forth, with our lot content,
Proud of the blessings our country gives,
For this is the land where Liberty lives.

We're free in life as her air above,
Except when bound by the law of love;
As free to speak as her winds to sigh,
Her thunders to roll, her lightnings to fly.
Free in conscience as free in thought,
Free in manners and bound by naught
Of old conventional rules and forms,
But true to Nature, and free as her storms.

Not only free from the tyrant's heel,
Oppression's grinding power,
But free from the thralldom of those who kneel
At the shrine of Fashion, and, cringing, feel
Its gilded chain and goad of steel
In adverse fortune's hour.

This is the land where the poor are free,
And royal honors may take and give;
Thus may our prairies forever be
The home where Nature's noblemen live.

ELAM'S ADVENTURE.

[CONCLUDED.]

'A woman does not trifle with subjects like these; nor deceive when she goes out of her way to do a service,' she answered. 'I rode off from that house the other way this morning, made detour and came here to warn you. And, now that I have done it, if you will please to get my horse, I will ride away again.' All fair, that. I, full of thanks and repentance, asked her to stay longer if she was not perfectly rested; but she declined, and I brought the steed round and helped her to mount him. Once in her saddle, her humor changed; she smiled and reminded me that I had not been polite enough to invite her to return. A week of reading, talking, riding, trout fishing, and romancing up in those splendid mountains would be very charming; perhaps she might come if I asked her."

"And did you ask her?"

"I did not. A young man with a reputation to sustain up there in the mountains, couldn't invite a young lady to stay a week with him, could he now?" cried Elam quaintly; which set us both laughing.

"So I parried the question as easily as I could, and she rode away. I going slowly down the trail, she turned and kissed her hand to me with a gracious sweetness. I assure you the struggle within my own mind was great at that moment; and I don't know whether I have forgiven myself yet for what happened afterwards."

"What did happen?"

"She came back again. She came back again, and I drove her away. That is, I made the best excuse I could for not re-admitting her, saying we should perhaps have fighting and murder—and what not—in my fort that night, and it would be no place or scene for a delicately-bred woman. The pretty and modest girl, who was to come from the Wallamet Valley, and hang up her pink garments on my pegs, had rushed into my mind, you see—but I never liked to confess this part of the story, because I get laughed at. But don't you think I did right? having my reputation to keep up?"

While we had our laugh out, Elam was pushing his soft, fine light hair off his brow with his slender fingers, that looked as if no rough work had ever come near them—and what must they have been before it did come? He went on thoughtfully.

"She finally rode away, not having been invited to get off her horse, leaving me in anything but a quiet frame of mind. From telling myself I was a bear, I turned to the other subject—my promised robbery and murder. Had she simply invented that little fable?—or was it a true bill? I felt inclined to believe it the latter. Any way, I deemed it well to be prepared for all contingencies, barring and bolting my fort against intruders, and sitting up late over the fire. This was Sunday night. On the Tuesday morning three or four mounted men rode up, one of whom was the traitor, my former naked and hungry portege. He no longer attempted to conceal his true character from me, but said he and his comrades were intending to 'clean out' the Chinese camp, and he asked me to join them in the raid. I was on my guard in answering him; simply saying that I would have nothing to do with robbing the Chinese, that they were my friends and customers, and I thought they had best be let alone. With that he went off. That same afternoon Edwards came in, having recaptured some of the horses. He was very tired and asked leave to stay with the horses at my place till next day. I said nothing to Edwards of the gang just gone away, or that (what I suspected) they had talked of making a raid on the Chinese only to throw me off my guard, that it was my fort upon which the attack was to be; and I hoped the fellows did not know of the arrival of the horses, as they would be an additional temptation for them."

"I'd not live in those wild, lawless regions for the whole world," cried out Mary.

"Dusk came on. I sent Edwards, dead tired, to bed; made a great fire in the tent and sat by it facing the window. My unexpected visitor came, the villian. He made believe to have been drinking, and put that forward as a plea for asking shelter until morning. The instant he was inside, I made the gate fast, driving the big wooden pins home with an ax. I caught a gleam from his eyes as I was doing this, which——"

"But why not have made the gate fast before he entered?"

"Because he was safer inside than out. A conviction came over me that this man was some desperate character. His comrades were no doubt waiting near, and his plan had been quietly to open the gate to them."

"Had you no arms but your rifle?"

"I wanted none, for we understood each other—my rifle and I. This villian understood us too. I don't think, cither, he liked to see Edwards sleeping in the tent. The lad was not good for much; but still he was somebody. It would now be a contest of skill between the fellow and me. He was waiting his opportunity, and so was I. Of all villainous-looking men, he was the worst. Tall, swarthy, black-bearded, with a hard face that must have been handsome once, and fierce, black eyes gleaming with evil. He sat on one side the hearth, and I on the other, our eyes fixed on one another."

Elam paused. I wondered what was coming.

"You guess, I daresay, that I have a quick ear, for you know what my temperament is, all sensitive consciousness. My good hearing had been cultivated, too, by listening to the Indians."

"By-and-by, I detected a very stealthy movement outside the fort, and then a faint chirp, such as a young squirrel might make. Up sprang the man, but I covered him with my rifle, cocked. He saw the movement, showed his teeth, and drew out a pistol; but not before I had ordered him to throw down his arms or die. He hesitated; he saw that in my eye and aspect that made him quail. With the rifle leveled and my finger on the trigger he threw down his arms—pistol and knife—with a dreadful oath. I had the best of him and he knew it; for before he could have put his pistol into form, or rushed on me with his knife, the ball from my rifle would have been in him. His language was awful—and we are not nice in that respect, you know, in California—the foam lay on his lips. He demanded to be let out of the house, denouncing me as a robber and a murderer. To all his ravings I had but one answer: to be quiet, to obey me and he should live; dare to disobey me, and he should die. He sat there, cowed, on the opposite side of the fire, nor daring to make even a doubttul motion. Then I told him what I knew—that I had heard what he was, and what he had meant to do. With that he broke down utterly—or pretended at it, howled like a child, declaring that he now knew my pluck, and I had been the first man ever to get the better of him, he loved me like a brother. All the same, love or no love, he had to sit where he was, and I in front of him, with my rifle on my knees. There was a long night before us; he could have no liberty in it, and the restraint was horrible to him. One moment he laughed uneasily; the next, cursed; the next, cried. It was strange experience, was it not? To pass away the time, I asked him to relate the history of his life. He said he would; but would first of all just shake hands, for the respect he bore me. Touching my rifle significantly, I pointed to the stick laying across the hearth-place between us. 'That's your boundary line, my man,' said I; 'don't you go to stretching your hand over that.' And it sent him into a fit of sullenness."

"What came of it?"

"We must have remained in the position till midnight. Several times I heard slight sounds outside the fort to which he listened; but he dared not respond to them, he could do nothing. After a while they ceased; his associates, rightly judging that something or other had gone wrong and spoiled the scheme, no doubt made off, tired of waiting. The fellows head was bent, his chin rested on his breast, his shaggy beard spreading over it like a mantle. He suffered martyrdom. He was like a hyena caged; though he showed it only by involuntary nervous startings and furtive glances. Finally he could bear it no longer, and entreated me piteously, abjectly, to give him his freedom or blow out his brains. He could not have his freedom just yet, I quietly told him; but he knew how to get his brains blown out if he desired it. Which brought forth some more of his choice language. And the lad, Edwards, slept through it all!"

"What a situation! What a night!"

"Ay, it was. By-and-by we got to talking; I not relaxing my vigilance for an instant. Once started on his own history, the subject seemed to have a fascination for him. He had been honestly 'raised,' he said, by good and loving parents, in the State of Missouri, had passionately loved a young girl in the town where he lived, and his description of her was so vivid that I declare it brought into my mind that other girl waiting for me down in the Wallamet Valley. To enable him to marry her he resolved to go to California and make in some honest way the requisite money. He went, and did make it, and, full of joyful anticipations, returned to find that she had married another. The man—the husband—had played them false, told the girl that her lover was dead, and married her himself. When he came out of the brain fever which this news gave him, he was invited to attend an evening party, one given in honor of him. To this party came his love and her husband; when he put out his hand to welcome her, their eyes met, and each knew then, and for the first time, how they had been betrayed. From that hour the man took to evil courses, and his first victim was the false husband. His hand was against every man's and every man's against him; and he became a desperate outlaw. Once again he saw his love, meeting her in the streets of Sacramento; she was married again, and she turned from him with a cry of aversion. Yes, he might be desperate now, he added, but he had had his trials. I asked him what his true name was. Hiram Creddin, he answered; but the one he was known by was Boone Helm. That made me start."

"Why did it?"

"Because I had heard of Boone Helm before, and I knew he was the greatest terror of the time. I suppose I should have done society a benefit had I shot him as he sat there; but I did not. Perhaps you won't believe that I felt a sort of pity for the poor fellow—but I did. Well, morning came at last. I sent Edwards to get the gate open, and escorted my visitor out, telling him that there was not room for him and me in that part of the country, and that he had better quit it for another."

"And did he?"

"I suppose so. He never attempted to molest me again. Not long after, I heard of his death. He met his fate up east of the mountains."

"And what of that pretty Amazon, Elam? I'm sure she was almost as good to you as a guardian angel! Coming on horseback to give you warning!"

"Was she not? And I had returned it by behaving so unhandsomely to her! But now, I must ask you, would it have been proper to have let her come in on that week's visit?—and I a young man with a reputation!"

"Again we burst out laughing. Elam's appeal to us was put with the most unsophisticated air possible."

"At any rate, you did not."

"No," said he, "I did not. And, taking all things into consideration, I think I did right."

"Have you never seen her since?"

"Once. It was in San Francisco. She was married, and staying at the same hotel as I was. Her husband was a fine, tall, dashing man, what with you would be called a gentleman, and very wealthy. She had been lucky, you see. I knew her as soon as she came into the drawing-room, and in a few minutes I saw that she recognized me; but she did not take any notice, neither did I. She told me with her eyes that she remembered; but there was an appealing glance in them which I interpreted rightly. After dinner she went to the piano and sang 'Kate Kearney.' We had got into conversation before that, the three of us, just as strangers will do in a hotel, and I found the husband to be a very intelligent, educated, well-informed man. In parting I got just a word aside with her. 'I am glad to meet you again, and thus.' 'Hush!' she answered; 'I thank you for your reticence. In the past of a life that has been composed of ups and downs, there is generally something or other lying on the memory that we don't care to recall or proclaim to the world.'"

"And about that young girl in the Wallamet Valley?"

"I never found her," replied Elam, shaking his head thoughtfully. "Truth to say, I never started fairly to look for her. Life is composed of ups and downs, you know, as that other lady observed, of blighted hopes, and all that. Perhaps it's as well."

He was sitting silently by her side one chilly evening last autumn, thinking of something to say. Finally he remarked: "How bad it is; the frost has come, and it will kill everything green." Thereupon the young lady extended her hand and said in a sympathetic tone: "Good bye."

Give the boy of the period a pair of low cut shoes and fancy stockings, a large seal ring and a revolver, and the happiness and pride of a new-made bride will be as nothing compared to his.

Thomas Edgar, of Warsaw, Ind., thought the whisky he found secreted in a bottle in his haymow had a bitter taste. The doctor who saved him by an emetic informed him that strychnine always tastes bitter.

Now is the time for lovers to get spooney over ice cream, she taking a few pretty dabs at his vanilla, and he borrowing a taste of her chocolate. This process inspires confidence in the day when they will be throwing corned beef and cabbage across the table.

A gentleman whose house was repairing, went one day to see how the work was getting on, and, observing a number of nails lying about, said to the carpenter employed on the work: "Why don't you take care of these nails? they'll certainly be lost." "No," replied the carpenter; "you'll find them in the bill."

A very young miss, who resides on Fourth street, thus addressed her paternal ancestor at the breakfast table, on Sunday morning: "Poppy, I want a new hat and a pair of new shoes." "I s'pose so. What don't you want?" remarked the paternal. "Well," answered the quick-witted miss, "I don't want any trousers."

A New York journalist sums up the value of newspaper articles in this fashion: A two column article has one reader in one hundred. A column and a half, one reader in seventy-five. A column article, one reader in fifty. A three-quarter column article, one reader in twenty-five. A half column, one reader in ten. A quarter column article is read by everyone.

Nobody who is afraid of laughing, and heartily too, at his friend, can be said to have a true and thorough love for him; and on the other hand it would betray a sorry want of faith, to distrust a friend because he laughs at you. Few men, I believe, are much worth loving, in whom there is not something well worth laughing at.

A quick-witted negro preacher had elaborated a new theory of Exodus, to wit: That the Red Sea got frozen over and so afforded the Israelites a safe passage; but when Pharaoh with his heavy iron chariots attempted it, they broke through and were drowned. A brother rose and asked for an explanation of that point. "I'se been studyin' gography, and de gography say dat be a very warm country—where dey have de tropics. And de tropics too hot for freezin'. De pint to be 'splained is 'bout breakin' through de ice." The preacher straightened up and said: "Brudder, glad you axed dat question. It gives me 'casion to splain it. You see dat was a great while 'go—in de ole times 'fo' dey had gography—'fo' dere was any tropics."

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

W. L. RIDDELL,
Editor and Proprietor.

BURLINGTON, KY., AUGUST 16.

THE cholera has made its appearance in the Russian ranks.

THE Cabinet sighs to have Sitting Bull return to his native heath.

THE Vermont people will celebrate the battle of Bennington next week.

THE workingmen camo near making a home run in Louisville on the 6th.

GEN. GRANT laid the first stone of an American church at Geneva last week.

OUR column of State News is composed principally of items of "bloodshed."

SECRETARY SCHURZ thinks the malcontents had the Maine Convention packed.

THE working men held a Convention in Cincinnati on the 11th, and nominated a straight ticket for State officers.

BEECHER thinks there would be no trouble known as strikes, were the laboring men to live on bread and water.

THE United States troops and the Indians in Texas had a battle last week. Two officers and twenty-six privates were slain.

THE Russians were compelled to flee into the mountains—the Balkans. Their reception across the Balkans was too warm for comfort.

THE political squabble in Ohio this fall will be a triangular fight. Democrats, Republicans and Workingmen are the three armies in the field.

IN Carroll County, Thos. J. McElrath, candidate for State Senator, received 1,163 votes. The four candidates for Representative together received 1,330.

IN the Taylorsport district a vote was taken on the proposition to move the voting place from the town of Taylorsport. The proposition was lost by several votes.

THE visit of Senator Conkling to Europe was brief; this was brought about by the conspiracy forming to defeat his re-election to the United States Senate.

FILIBUSTERING has made its appearance in the British House of Commons. Seven Irish Home-Rulers took advantage of it last week to defeat a measure that was obnoxious to them.

GOVERNOR HARTRANFT, of Pennsylvania, had quite a task to bring peace and quiet out of the turbulent elements that of late infected that State. He was poorly assisted by the militia, and deserves much credit.

SOME of the manufacturing establishments have decided to discharge their Chinese laborers and employ natives. This move is highly approved by the citizens, who have long since become tired of Chinese labor in Clifor-

THE resolutions that created such commotion in the Maine Convention were feelers gotten up by Mr. Blaine. Blaine is a wily politician, and that was his opportunity to see which is the stronger current on the policy question.

THE Carter County trouble has not exactly subsided. There is still some uneasiness up there, and a company of regulators have been organized and are being equipped for service in case there is another outbreak, which is threatened.

SENATOR SHERMAN is going to visit Ohio in a few days. While among the Buckeyes he will make a speech in defense of his views. The speech is expected to be the one upon which the Republicans will rely as the key note of the campaign.

ONE whipping post in Boone County would be worth one-half dozen workhouses. Why not have one and do away with the imprisonment as a punishment for certain classes of crime. A whipping post would do much toward lessening jail fees.

THREE cars, a locomotive and a baggage car plunged from the bridge across Oceanport Creek, on the Long Branch division of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, last Thursday. Nearly one hundred passengers were on the train and many of them were badly hurt, but none killed outright. The bridge was a draw bridge. The draw span being out of order was the cause of the accident.

IN Frankfort, polls were opened for the ladies, boys and girls to express an opinion on the local option question. Seven hundred and eighty-five votes were cast; 149 for license, and 636 against.

THE Frankfort Yeoman will not allow B. K. Sleet to vacate the office of Sheriff, in Boone. Friend Yeoman, Geo. W. Sleet was elected to that office one year since, and has served in the capacity of Sheriff since the first Monday in last January.

IN a fight with the Nez Perces Indians, near the mouth of Big Hole Pass, Montana, on the 19th inst., Gen. Gibbon and several of his officers were wounded, and about one hundred were killed. The fighting was desperate on both sides, the full force of the Indians being in the engagement.

THE Louisville Evening News says, the next Legislature will be a marked improvement over its predecessors. It will be composed of a much better class of men than those who served the State in that capacity two years ago. A large majority of the interior counties have elected as their Representatives their most intelligent and influential citizens.

THE fact that the policy of the opponents of the Administration was defeated in the Ohio Republican Convention seems to soften down the lion of the State of Maine. It is said Blaine is completely demoralized, and by the time Congress meets is expected to be the champion of the Administration. Blaine will lick the side of the pone which is buttered.

THE delightful rains of the past few days have almost put the corn crop beyond the reach of dry weather. A cut on the growing tobacco is about the last chance there is for any of this year's crops to be injured while growing. The raisers of this weed will now look forward to the coming fall with much concern about an early frost that might come this way.

GOV. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, is charged with using his office to further the interests of his family under any and all circumstances. The following certificate is said to have been issued by him while the strike was raging:

"EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATE OF INDIANA, }
INDIANAPOLIS, July 22, 1877. }

"To whom it may concern:

"The bearer of this is my son-in-law. I hope the strikers will allow him to transport his cattle to St. Louis in safety.

J. D. WILLIAMS, Governor."

SOME of the colliers of Scranton lately waited upon a leading man, and agreed to work for him, early and late, during one or five years and never ask for one cent of wages if he would furnish them and their families plain and sufficient food, such clothing as they really need, houses to live in, doctors and medicines when sick and bury them when dead. The poor laborers do not desire to break their employers, but only demand living wages.

BACK of Newport, Tuesday morning, of last week, three little boys, none of whom were over thirteen years of age, went to the melon patch of Mr. Lewis Thornton, for the purpose of stealing melons. Mr. Thornton's hired man, named Green discovered the boys, got a shot gun, and starteq for the patch. The little boys saw Green coming and two of them ran away, the other hiding behind a bush. Green came up, leveled the gun and fired, thirteen buckshot taking effect in the boy's head and killing him outright. The murderer then left, and after two or three days dodging gave himself up and was lodged in jail, to await an investigation. This seems to be a cool and deliberate murder committed, upon the very slightest provocation.

THE Philadelphia Times says: "About every time there is an election for anything or anybody in Kentucky, Colonel Tate is elected State Treasurer. This has happened regularly for a great many years, the oldest inhabitant, who lives to a wonderful age in Kentucky, having no knowledge. Nobody considers it worth while to run against Colonel Tate, and it would be an inexcusable waste of election tickets for anyone to do so. The Colonel seems to have been brought up to fill this particular place in his State; he is the only man willing to have the office at its present salary and give the high bond required, and the Constitution should be so amended as to relieve him of the annoyance of going through the form of an election every time the ballot-boxes are opened. He would doubtless live longer to enjoy the honors of the office if this care were relieved from his mind."

RANDALL'S prospects for re-election to the Speakership of the next House is not comfortably certain.

THE Southern policy of the President is apparently having the effect of a wedge in the Republican party. It has the appearance of a rock upon which the partyship will founder. The last dissention in the party ranks is that promulgated by a meeting at Columbus, Ohio, where the Southern policy was denounced in the strongest terms.

THE Frankfort Yeoman, of last Saturday, says: "Mr. Lawrence Gordon, of Henry County, gives us an account of the arrest in that county, on Tuesday and Wednesday, of Bob Goodrich, Sam Goodrich, Joe Goodrich, John Wisor, and Dave Cartor, all of them implicated by Shuck's confession in the several murders and robberies committed in Owen County. Mr. Gordon says they came very near capturing Jack Simmons, one of the worst of the gang. He made his escape, but they 'secured his hat.' Whether guilty or innocent, these men have been hiding and trying to evade arrest. It is said, however, that the proof is as strong against some of these as it was against Shuck."

WE have before us a copy of the Boston Gazette, dated March 12th, 1770, and is consequently one hundred and seven years old. At that early date the propriety of having soldiers quartered among citizens in time of peace was being discussed by the Gazetto, which in a brief article said: "The town of Boston affords a recent and melancholy demonstration of the destructive consequences of quartering troops among citizens in a time of peace, under the pretense of supporting the law and aiding civil authority." The paper contains a brief account of the depredations by the soldiers quartered in Boston, and a copy of the resolutions passed by the citizens declaring that the inhabitants and soldiers could no longer live together in safety.

THE Carrollton Democrat, of last Saturday, contains an account of the arrest of Joseph Myrick, Sheriff of Carroll County, and his brother-in-law, and Deputy Sheriff, Charles Gardner, on the charge of murdering Carrie Anderson at Worthville, a few weeks since. The arrest of these parties creates considerable excitement, they all being highly respectable citizens. Mr. Myrick is now serving his second term as Sheriff of Carroll, and is a very popular man. The Democrat says: "Whoever the guilty parties are, they ought to be punished when found. No position, social or official, should shelter them in the least. But while we have this view, and are anxious to see the law vindicated and the perpetrators of that murder brought to justice, we would have to hear evidence of a very direct and conclusive character to be convinced that the persons now charged with it are guilty.

THE Maine Republican Convention nominated Governor Conner for re-election. The platform contains not a word approving President Hayes' policy; not a word that expresses confidence in his integrity. In fact, it passes him quietly by, getting rid of the Southern policy on the best terms possible. After the platform was read an attempt was made to have added to it a resolution affirming the Republicans' unshaken confidence in the integrity, patriotism and statesmanship of Rutherford B. Hayes, &c. The presenter of the resolution, Governor Chamberlain, President of Bowdoin College, in a speech said he was unwilling the Convention should adjourn without commending the Administration. After Chamberlain's speech, a substitute for his resolution, "Declaring that Gov. Packard, of Louisiana, and Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina, were elected to their respective offices by the same votes that Rutherford B. Hayes was elected President of the United States, and that both Governors were clearly entitled to recognition by the General Government, and that the failure to recognize them placed the national Government in the humiliating attitude of surrendering to rebels threatening with arms in their hands to resist its legitimate authority," was offered. This set the ball rolling in earnest and the excitement that followed was intonse. These resolutions were each strongly advocated, and a split thereon appeared imminent. Blaine reconciled the trouble by moving that both resolutions be tabled. This carried and the Convention let the President and his policy pass totally ignored.

THE Eastern War is assuming a terrible phase. The last tidings from that quarter says a civil war of extermination is being waged at Eski-Saghra. All the male Christian population have been sentonced to death by the Turkish General. The Grand Duke Nicholas admits that his troops are somewhat demoralized and there is no prospect of a resumption of action for three weeks, by which time he will have 100,000. The Greeks have become anxious to take part in the war, and they are expected to join in a few days.

THE leading Chinese in California are becoming dissatisfied with the treatment of their countrymen in California. A deputation of the leading Chinese merchants of San Francisco waited upon Senator Morton, of Indiana, recently, and complained to him of the treatment of the Chinese in California. They do not blame the American people for their abuse but lay it at the doors of the foreign element which has been so opposed to them. They requested the Senator to introduce a bill at the next session of Congress for levying a per capita tax of one hundred dollars on every Chinaman landing in America. This tax to be applied to the payment of the passage of those who wish to return to China. Mr. Morton is represented as expressing his willingness to introduce such a bill.

There was a man in town Saturday offering to sell the county for $20. A patent right peddler, of course; no one else would have such cheek.

Drs. Ulrey and Harryman have removed their dental parlors in Aurora to the rooms immediately over the Postoffice, where they will be glad to see their old patrons.

The weather clerk came to time Monday with a copious shower, accompanied by vivid lightning and keen thunder. The corn crop was suffering slightly for rain, as were also the pastures.

B. Frank Buchanan, Rising Sun, Ind., has a standing advertisement in this paper. His Prescription Drug Store is daily gaining Kentucky patrons. The reason why is best known to those who give him a call and read this paper.

Now is a good time for those wanting a pike built from Lawrenceburg to the Petersburg pike to agitate the subject. We presume everybody in that section who likes good roads to travel on going to and from market would be glad to see the pike built.

One among the principal wants of Bellevue and the surrounding country is a good flouring and grist mill. That town is one of the best localities in the county for such an enterprise. We prophesy that not many years will pass before there is a mill at that point.

Something has been said about building a pike from Bellevue to Aylor's store. That kind of talk is, at all times and all seasons, in order. If the farmers along the contemplated route will come to Burlington by way of Bellevue and see what great change for the better is being made in the Bellevue road, they will be greatly stimulated and the more anxious for the road.

Petersburg Organ Concert. Six large organs on the stage, supported by a corps of nearly sixty singers and six first-class organists, all in full chorus. Held at the Christian Church, Petersburg, Ky., Friday and Saturday evenings, August 17th and 18th, 1877, at 7½ o'clock p. m. Admission 25 cents. Children under 12 years, 10 cents. For particulars, see programmes and bills. Prof. Blake, Manager.

We made a short run out on the Bellevue pike, Monday, and were surprised to find the road presenting such a pike-like appearance—considerable grading completed, bridges built, and a long line of stone broken and spread. About the 1st of next January, farmers from the Bellevue neighborhood can ride into Burlington dry shod, and with great smiles on their features, all because of the good road they will then have.

The Saturday News requests some of the Rising Sun turnpike builders to go to Bellevue and see what a pike should be. The News says that, with a good pike and the good ferry up there (Bellevue), Rising Sun can expect a good trade from that neighborhood. Yes; and unless some of our Boone County merchants wake up and go to business in a business like way, they may expect to lose a large portion of the trade they now have. People will go and trade where there is the best and largest stock to choose from.

We hear from one Postoffice in the county, where the Recorder has a very limited circulation, that when the paper makes its appearance seven men read from one copy at a time, while others stand on mackerel kegs and washtubs, lean over the shoulders of those surrounding the readers, and lend an attentive ear. When done with the paper, it is refolded and put back in the office. Now friends, send us $1 50 and have a paper of your own, and cease appropriating that for which your neighbor has paid, and is, or should be, the sole owner. We have room for many names on our list, and room in our pocket for the $1 50 each of you may send.

The first grand jury impaneled in Boone was by the Court of Quarter Sessions held in November, 1799. The amount of work did by that grand jury at that term was small. Three Road Supervisors were indicted, and four persons for profane swearing, making seven indictments. At the next term of the court, the indictments against the Supervisors were dismissed, as were also three of the indictments for profane swearing, the fourth being tried and the party fined five shillings. In those days salary grabs were unheard-of, but on the 18th of November, 1799, Richard Southgate was appointed Commonwealth's Attorney, his appointment ordered considered relating back to August 19, and $20 added to his allowance.

The Election.

The following is the official vote of the county by districts:

PRECINCTS.	Stock Law		Work'ho.		Representative		State Senator.		St. Treas.
	Against	For	Against	For	Henderson	Conner	L. C. Norman		I. Trabue	J. W. Tate

Totals	2216	262	1759	1759	1759	1759	1759	1488	1878	96	2974

The total vote cast was 2,641, being a much larger vote than was ever before cast in the county.

In the verona district there were 35 votes in favor of the sale of whisky and other intoxicating liquors, to 119 against. In Union, the vote for the sale of whisky, &c., was 68 for and 141 against.

In the Petersburg precinct, L. A. Loder and Joe Hensley were elected Justices of the Peace.

The proposed stock law was voted upon in but two districts. In Burlington, each voter was asked, "Do you vote for or against the amendment to the stock law?"; and 123 voted against the amendment(?) and 115 for it. The vote against the amendment(?) was virtually a vote for the present law, and a number who have heretofore prenounced their opposition to the stock law have their votes recorded in opposition to any change in it. But two districts voting on the proposed law (not the amendment, as it was construed in Burlington), the question now presents itself, Is Mr. Rouse instructed in regard to his action on the stock law? It is our opinion he is untied and turned loose.

The vote for a Work-house was not a circumstance.

Personal Mention.

Mr. F. Smith has been absent several days, visiting near Louisville.

D. A. Glenn, Representative-elect for Covington, was in Burlington, Monday, on professional business.

Mr. C. L. Crisler and lady were among our welcomed visitors last week. We were glad to see them, and promised Mrs. Crisler not to put her name in the paper.

Rev. W. S. Keene called upon us last Thursday. He lately visited Florida, and is highly pleased with the State—so much so that he is making arrangements to move there about the 1st of January. Dr. Ed Terrill, of Petersburg, will accompany him. They have purchased land near the St. John's River.

The town of Bellevue is taking the church fever. The members of the Middle Creek Church have their building under way at that place, and we hear an effort is being made to raise money to erect another church there, to be used by all denominations. Who knows but Bellevue will be a considerable town yet.

It sounds suspicious to hear, just at dusk, one boy propose to another to go and get some apples; but when, in the morning, you see these same boys taking laudanum, it looks twice suspicious.

Last Sunday night Mrs. Ann Rice, wife of Benj. Rice, fell down stairs, broke her collar bone, and was badly bruised in many other places about her body.

The first watermelons of the season were in town Saturday. Small melons and large prices don't suit the times—pocket-books we should have said.

If you want anything in the shape of Tombstons or Fine Monuments, call on Huschart & Co., Lawenceburg, Indiana.

Potato bugs now sit cross-legged on the street corners and weep because the supply of potato vines is exhausted.

Burlington is the banner district. More votes were cast in said district than any other in the county.

A total eclipse of the moon is looked for the 23d, early in the evening. Be ready "for to see it."

We are glad to report the condition of Mr. A. G. Winston as somewhat improved.

Go to Dudley Rouse's and get a box of Diamond Crown Cigars for $1.

Petersburg is to have a sangerfest.

There are melon-cholic days.

The river is being barred.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

Covington Stock Yards, August 18.

A red bat on exhibition at the Boone House has been attracting much attention for several days. It is a genuine bat, and of the species that so often strikes terror to the cats that inhabit the fence at the back of the yard about midnight.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Willow Vale.

News has been a scarce article with us for some time, however, we will again try to itemize a little.

You can hear the hum of the threshing machine just at present. When it is over, the buzz of the saw will break the monotony of our dull place.

We learn that the wife of Mr. Richard Howlett died very suddenly last Wednesday morning. We did not learn the particulars.

We have a very interesting singing school in progress at the Big Bone Church. It meets every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

L. P. Utz, teacher.

H. P. Parsons has at last started his mill on Gunpowder.

Mrs. J. S. Mason is quite sick at present.

Kate Kearney.

Craw Valley.

It has been some time since we saw anything from this quarter of the globe in your paper, so we will attempt to gather a few items concerning the business and pleasures of this charming and productive little valley.

There were larger crops of corn and tobacco planted here this season than usual. The corn has looked well all season, but it now wants rain. Twenty-five cents per bushel for corn in the field is the price talked of now.

I have made a rough estimate of the tobacco crop for about 2½ or 3 miles up and down Gunpowder, and will give the the size of each man's crop, as near as I can get it:

	Acres.		Acres.
Ed Parsons	5	George Smith	4
Williamson boys	7	Tony Rue	3
Mot Huston	7	Riddell boys	6
Joe Riddell	1	James Eddings	3
Sam Smith	3	Lis Stephens	3
Tilford Sullivan	8	John Pies	4
Milt Portwood	2	James Henderson	3
Lark Acra	2	A. Bradford	2
W. S. Huey	2	Rab Stucky	7
Dock Boudurant	4
Total			74

A much larger crop than was in the same boundary last year, but promises now only to be of light quality, as it is burning sadly for want of rain. The number of worms are in proportion to the size of the crop. There is some of last year's crop on hand yet and unsold.

Mr. Rue is building a large barn on his farm in the valley, which will add smartly to the appearance of things. George Smith is also building an addition to his barn, and all are making preparations for housing their large crops of the weed.

H. C. Parsons has moved one of his saw mills from Big Bone and located here. It is already in running order. His company costs him nothing, as it is the first thing of the kind that was ever in these diggings, so it is no sight to see five or six men and boys sitting astride of the log, with mouth and eyes open, watching the saw as it rips the log to pieces.

There will be a grand picnic at the Craw Grounds, on Gunpowder, the third Saturday in August. There will be refreshments on the ground. Music by the Stephens band. All are invited to attend and bring dinner enough along for themselves and somebody else.

Poverty.

Petersburg.

It is not a breath of summer air, nor the stroke of a feather light hand, that prostrates your correspondent, as happened last week; but it is sheer intimidation. Not until the day after the battle did he take courage to venture upon the field, and then it was with much trembling and many misgivings of doubt that all was not over. To see the shirtless, bleeding savages on our streets on the 6th inst. was to see a sight not easily forgotten. Beer and corn juice are to be charged with the whole row, and a most disgraceful charge it is. There was no one seriously hurt, and that is, perhaps, as remarkable as any fact in the whole case. One by one the offenders are being hauled before his Honor L. A. Loder, and called to strict account for their election crossdoings.

Besides the fight, the election was as quiet as usual, but the unusual vote polled showed that there was intense excitement under the apparently smooth surface that it was highly injudicious to stir up with any kind of diffusible stimulant. The friends of Mr. Rouse are evidently as much surprised at the general result as are the friends of Mr. Conner, the latter gentlemen bearing their defeat as becomes honorable citizens.

We are to have music upon music in this little town, it appears, for last Tuesday night Prof. F. L. Bristow opened a singing-school at the M. E. Church, and it is now in full blast. There was a hitch somehow in that concert predicted at the Reformed Church last week—telescoped itself on a conflict of opinion. A strong effort is being made to draw it out again, but it is too hard to tell who will pull the strongest just now to rick another opinion.

The Ohio River is lower than for several years, and this, with the heavy fogs common to this season, make steamboating anything else but pleasant. Nearly every up stream boat is behind time from two to five hours, having their crutches hanging overboard in evidence of the fact that they have been walking across the country some time during the night. Under these aggravated conditions a steamer like the Water Witch, that can run on a light dew, is a pearl of rare value to a river man.

We are uneasy about Porter. A gentleman reports seeing him and a lady in a buggy together, last Sunday evening about 5 o'clock, four miles from town and making the distance greater at each jump of the horse. Any reliable news as to his present whereabouts and conditon, will be gratefully received, and have a powerful tendency to allay the fears of all his lady friends in town.

Florence.

The election passed off rather quietly, considering the intense excitement, the only knock-down being in favor of Mr. Ben Stephens, who clubbed a negro for abusing one of his boys; but, as he hit him on the head, instead of on the shins, the negro was not hurt as much as he ought to have been. The friends of both Rouse and Conner worked hard at the polls, and for fear that we didn't know how to manage our own affairs, we had some electioneerers from some of the other precincts and from Cincinnati to instruct us how to vote. There were 29 more votes polled than ever were polled before at one time. Our ancient dispensationist, Jeenes H., would undoubtedly have carried the district, but Felix Moses said that some one told him that Lafe Garrison said that Bluf Adams was informed by a reliable party that somebody met a gentleman who informed him that he had heard that Jim had received a letter from the Great Mogul of Turkey, tendering him the Generalship of the Turkish armies, and that he had accepted, and consequently was off the track. We have since found out that it was a mere electioneering job, but it came so straight that we couldn't help believing it. However, we will all be for him the next time.

Mr. Conner came to Florence about 7 o'clock the evening of the election, and was called on for a speech. He responded:

"Friends and Fellow Citizens—I have visited several precincts, and I am satisfied that I am defeated. This evening closes the hottest contest that we have had in Boone County for many years. There have been a great many things said or done during the canvass that ought never to have been said or done, and it is a source of great satisfaction to me to know that, amid all the vituperation and misrepresentation of the present canvass, in the precincts where I was best known I received my largest vote. To those friends who stood by me, I return my heartfelt thanks. To those who have worked and voted against me, I have not a harsh word to say—there is not a spark of animosity in my breast. I went to the polls at Walton this morning and voted for Mr. Rouse, thereby swelling his majority one, and now I would request that you all go home quietly and become Rouse men."

There is to be a picnic next Saturday, the 18th, at Carpenter's Grove, for the benefit of the Catholic Church of Florence. As this is the first picnic here this summer, it will probably be largely attended.

Mr. John Buckner was baptized at Blick's pond, Sunday. The ceremony was very impressive.

At this writing, a very hard rain is falling. It is much needed.

Miss Jennie Gaines, of Richwood, has been visiting the Misses Platt this week. Uno.

Obituary.

HUEY—Died, at his residence, in Boone County, Ky., on the morning of the 27th of July, 1877, Oscar W. Huey, in the 55th year of his age.

The subject of this notice was a man of unquestioned integrity, with a genial, pleasant manner—one whose chief delight was to elevate his fellow-man socially, morally and religiously. He was highly respected as a citizen. Being full of charitable generosity, he was ever ready, with his purse and influence, to lend a helping hand to the needy, and forward any project that promised to promote the interest of society, thereby redounding to the general welfare of his fellow creatures. A man of good financial capacity, yet of sterling piety; one whose liberal disbursements to worthy objects demonstrated that his zeal in financial pursuits was clothed with a laudable desire for the promotion of the general good. Intellectually, he was far above the average men, possessed of staunch convictions of right and wrong, true and zealous as a friend, obliging as a neighbor, and as a husband his affection knew no bound. To the bereaved widow and immediate relatives we tender our deepest sympathy. As a friend and brother in Christ, (poor finite creatures as we are), we couldn't see the wisdom in removing one so good and useful to our community; but God, who is mighty, merciful and all-holy, issued His imperative flat. To us, it was crushing in the extreme; but to him who has crossed death's dark, clouded stream, now an inmate of the Holy City, joining in the heavenly anthems of praises, and drinking deep draughts of God's never-ending love, it is far better.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Business was good last week, considering the times. The tobacco market remains firm and unchanged in prices, and provisions remain stationary.

The stock market continues to look up. The horse trade was active. There were about 75 sold at auction, bringing from $40 to $125. The offerings were good, but not sufficient to supply the demand. There is also a good demand for mules at fair prices, especially for mules 15½ hands high. There were only about 20 sold at auction. They are very scarce.

There was a good demand for cattle at fair prices; the offerings were light. Best shippers' brought $5 25@6; best butcher stuff, $4 25@5; common to good, $2 50@3 75 per hundred. This is an advance of ¼@½c. over last week.

The hog market has been very active. Best hogs bring $4 50@5 per hundred.

Sheep and lambs firm at last quotations. The receipts for the week were about 7,600 head.

Poultry firm at last quotations.

Vegetable market active; but little change in prices, except potatoes and tomatoes. Irish potatoes are plentiful at $1@1 50 per barrel. Sweet potatoes have declined from 50c. to $1 on the barrel, and the offerings good at $2 25@2 75 per barrel. Tomatoes advanced from 15 to 25 cents per bushel.

Fruit steady with no material change, except in peaches and apples. Peaches have declined 75c. to $1 on the bushel, and are plentiful at $1 50@2 per bushel. Apples declined 25 to 50 cents per barrel, and are dull at 75c@$2 per barrel. Watermelons bring 10 and 15 cents by the load, and retail at 15@40c. Canteloupes have also declined $1 to $1 50 on the barrel. The market was pretty well supplied at $1 75@2 50 per barrel.

CHURCH RULES FOR LADIES.

Dress hard all morning, such is fate,
Then enter church some minutes late.

All eyes will then be turned upon you,
And will observe your bonnet new.

Let humble modesty wreathe your face,
And take your seat with faultless grace.

Let all your thoughts be fixed on high,
And rearrange your cardinal tie.

Think how religion's prone to bless,
And criticise your neighbor's dress.

Let all your heart be filled with praise,
And notice Mrs. Miggle's lace.

Put from your mind all thoughts of sin,
And readjust your diamond pin.

Think of how good religion proves,
And then smooth out your buttoned gloves.

Catch all the precepts as they fall,
And smooth the wrinkles in your shawl.

Think of the sinner's fearful fate,
And notice if your bonnet's straight.

Pray for the influence divine—
That lady's basque—mark the design.

Let tender peace possess your mind,
And criticise that hat behind.

Reflect on Christian graces dear,
And fix those curls behind your ear.

Let your heart warm with silent prayer,
And view the horrid green silk there.

Reflect upon the wicked's ways;
See if your gold chain's out of place.

Think of the peace the good shall find,
And wonder who are sitting behind.

Think of the burdens Christmas bear,
And notice those strange ladies there.

The last words hear with contrite heart,
And fix your pull-back when you start.

Information Given.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

In your issue of July 19th I see a number of questions, which I think merit at least a reply; and, seeing that no one has as yet essayed, in any commendable manner, to reply to them, I will make an humble effort in that direction. The writer of the questions, if he in fact be a seeker for truth, does not, I presume, deem sarcasm very palatable food, and I will say that it is the height of impropriety to indulge in such with reference to questions of such a coloring; so in this humble effort, it will be my design to give, in a candid, and I trust amicable, manner, some Scripture and reflections, also some Scripture references bearing upon the questions, hoping that in so doing I will induce "A Secker for Truth" to "search the Scriptures" and there find his questions more fully answered, or if not that, at least to induce some one to take up his pen and give, through the columns of the RECORDER, a more voluminous answer to them than I at present will give. Thinking that such a course, properly pursued, would be productive of good in more ways than one, I heartily recommend it.

The first question your correspondent asks is, "Does not justice require of us obedience to the law of God?" In reply to this, I would say, undoubtedly, yes. What is justice? According to the lexicon, it is "The virtue which consists in giving to everyone what is his due," or, as an eminent writer has expressed it, "Justice is that principle of right which gives to every being that which is properly his own." Certainly, God is worthy of our highest admiration (Rev. iv., 11) and has just claims on us for our love and obedience; accordingly he asks, "My son, give me thy heart," i. e., his love, affections. That is what the law requires: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," &c. So justice, that principle of right which renders to every being what is his due and satisfies his just claims, will only perform its true mission by ultimately giving unto God the obedience of all His creatures. In accord with this, it is written in the Book (Matt., v., 18), "One jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Now some may hold here that this law was fulfilled by our Lord when on earth, and hence the fulfillment does not concern us. Now we will admit that our Lord fulfilled the law to a notch as far as He himself was concerned. But what is the law? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," &c. Who shalt love? The Lord Jesus Christ? Certainly not. He was the divine personage who uttered this language. It will certainly be admitted that we—each and every one of us—are the ones to whom this commandment is given. Then the law requires of us obedience, and not until this requirement is met—fulfilled in a word—can the law in its full sense be said to be fulfilled. See Isaiah, xlv., 23-24; Psalms, xxii., 27-28; lxxii., 11-17; lxxxvi., 9-10; Philippians, ii., 9, 10, 11; Revelations, xv., 4; and numerous other passages of a similar import, setting forth the fact that God will have the obedience of all his creatures, and consequently his just claims.

Now, as regards the three next questions, I deem it unnecessary to occupy space in this article with reference to them, as the reader doubtless can readily conceive of the manner in which they would be answered, and believing them to have been mostly inserted for the purpose of making the others show up well(?). Suffice it to say, from their peculiar jingle, as well as that of the others, I presume the "Seeker" was being pretty heavily pressed with the truth when he penned the questions. Allow me to say here, I entertain hopes for his being in time.

The next, and last, question is, "As God has commanded us to overcome evil with good, will He not do the same?" In reply to this, I would say again, "undoubtedly yes." Notice, if you please, the context at one place within the lids of the volume where this command is given (Matt. v., 44-48): "But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do you more than others? Do not even the publicans so? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Here we have it. The distinct reason for so doing is here stated: "That ye may be the children (i. e., characteristically) of your Father which is in heaven; for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil," &c. God is good—infinitely good. The Scriptures so represent Him. Accordingly He has innumerable influences for good surrounding us here on earth. He is, too, continually speaking to us through these instrumentalities and dealing with us for our good. We see, too, as time moves on there goes on a rectifying process. The learned and eloquent Dr. Chapin has wisely said: "No wrong can go down secure and compact through the ages. It does not assimilate with God's order, and it bears no fertility of blessedness in its bosom. It must break up—it must give away under the pressure of events. Truth is tidal, like the sea that keeps throbbing in its rocky arteries. It will toss that which encumbers it like drift weed; it will swell over every breakwater that has been set to keep it back, until it reaches the mark that God has ordained for it." See work Lessons of Faith and Life, page 143, discourse on the Fallacy of Evil.

For a knowledge of the objects of divine punishments in this connection, the reader is referred to Leviticus, xxvi., 14-39; Job, v., 17-18; Psalms, cxix., 67, 71, 75; Proverbs, iii., 11-12; Jeremiah, ii., 19; Hebrews, xii., 9-11, &c. By candidly examining these passages, he will readily see that even punishment—the penalty of the law—is for our good, and not to defeat the object of the law which was confessedly placed over us for our good.

But I will close, hoping that the questions have been sufficiently answered, and sufficient reference to the Word of God furnished, and that what I have written will not prove in vain; with a full assurance that my friend who is seeking for truth will find it—that God will have all men to be saved and come unto a knowledge of the truth (1st Timothy, ii., 4), I am, with regards,

A LOVER OF TRUTH.

The Wool Clip for 1876.

The wool clip of the United States for 1876 was 200,000,000 lbs.; of England, Ireland and Scotland, about 162,000,000, mostly combing; of the continent of Europe, about 463,000,000; of Australasia, about 350,000,000; of Buenos Ayres and River La Plata, about 207,000,000 lbs. These are the principal wool-growing countries of the world, and produce 1,382,000,000 out of the estimated 1,419,000,000 produced on the entire globe. The selling value of the total clip would probably aggregate $450,000,000. Out of fourteen hundred and nineteen million pounds of wool (the estimated clip), there would be fully a loss of 567,000,000 lbs. in scouring, making the net yield of clean wool about 852,000,000 pounds.

A NEGRO was found dead in Georgia, having fallen and broken his neck while stealing chickens from a high roost. He was a class leader in a church, and his pastor, in preaching the funeral sermon, was bothered by the question where the soul of his dead brother had gone. "His well known piety," said the preacher, "indicates that he died a Christian; yet there are circumstances connected with his death that are perplexing. If, after he fell and before he struck the ground, he repented of his sins, there can be no question but that he is now in glory; but there was mighty little time for him to think about it."

Horseflesh for Human Food.

In 1875 the horse butcheries of Paris furnished for public consumption 6,865 horses, asses and mules; in 1876 they furnished 9,271, giving 1,685,470 kilogrammes of neat meat. At Lyons, the number has diminished from 1,262 in 1875 to 1,088 in 1876. On the 1st of January there were 58 butcheries in Paris and only 7 in Lyons. At its meeting on January 9, the committee de la Viande Cheval awarded a silver medal to M. Petard, who has nine butcheries in Paris, as a reward for his enterprise.

CALIFORNIA Republicans believe that Senator Morton and Zach Chandler are giving aid and comfort to Subsidy Sargent in his new campaign, and there is a good deal of outspoken indignation in consequence. "We shall regard any advice as unnecessary," says one influential paper, "and any interference as meddlesome. We are determined to destroy this devilish combination of party knaves, if in doing so we destroy the Republican party." This is explicit and to the point.

THE young man who boasted that he could marry any girl he pleased, found that he couldn't please any.

STATE NEWS.

—Scott County has a good pear crop.

—A little son of Ambrose Owens, of Mason County, aged twelve years, was killed by the kick of a horse.

—Paducah News: A woman died of delirium tremens in a local option town in Ballard County, one day last week.

—A four-year-old son of Mr. Demaree, of Oldham County, was bitten by a rabid dog, and died in extreme agony and suffering.

—Mickey, the noted Oldham County murderer, after several ineffectual attempts to get a new hearing, has been placed in the Penitentiary for life.

—Columbia Spectator: There is a mule on Cumberland River forty-three years of age. So says a reliable gentleman who knows the age of the animal.

—Dickerson and Pelley, two boys aged thirteen and fifteen, had a stabbing affray in Casey County a few days ago, and both are expected to die from the injuries received.

—George Smith, the supposed murderer of Dank Snyder, in Henry County, was arrested the other day, after having been shot twice in an attempt to escape, once seriously in the left shoulder.

—In Lincoln County, John Pebbles, an Irishman, was found drowned in a tub of water. He is supposed to have been drunk, and in attempting to drink from the tub was drowned in four gallons of water.

—Courier Journal: William Henry West, the Republican nominee for Governor of Ohio, taught a select school in Lexington several years. His competitor, Bishop, is a native of Fleming County.

—The peach crop in Bourbon this year is very large, and thousands of bushels are being shipped. Wm. Ashurst's crop, of about 2,000 bushels, has been purchased for about $1 50 per bushel by O. A. Gilman.

—Grayson Journal: The corn crop generally is looking very bad, on account of drought and the injury inflicted by insects. Even though it may be ever so seasonable for the future, the crop will be necessarily very light.

—Owen News: A difficulty occurred on election day at Corinth, Grant County, just across the Owen line, between Ambrose R. Morgan and Pete Jones. The latter struck the former with a pair of brass knuckles, killing him on the spot.

—Byran Yount had an examining trial at Cropper's Depot, in Shelby County, for killing Dan Brown, and was held to bail in the sum of $7,500, which was promptly given. Yount has not recovered from his wounds, and probably never will.

—Owen News: On Monday last the vote of Wake Dorsey, of color, was challenged. After being duly sworn, he was asked how he knew he was of age, and he replied that he remembered when he was born. Wake is the person for the next Republican candidate for Representative.

—Two fights occurred in Washington County, Monday, and one man, named John Butler, was shot and killed in Maxville, about 5 p. m., by John Sutterfield. At another voting precinct, Gardner's store, some seven or eight parties had a shooting scrape, in which one man, Sheridan, was killed and three others wounded.

—There was a shooting scrape at Nicholasville, on Friday last, between Postmaster Letcher and G. S. McAfee, resulting in McAfee being shot in the arm and a negro in the back. Another shooting affray occurred Sunday morning between Aleck Spillman and Joe Price, both colored. The latter was instantly killed by Spillman, who shot in self-defense. Spillman was arrested and released on $2,000 bail.

—Bowling Green Democrat: Mrs. Haynes, living near the Tennessee line, in Allen County, recently gave birth to four children, two boys and two girls; two weighing five pounds each and two weighing seven pounds each. At one week old they were living and doing well. The father and mother of the children have been married about twelve months, and we think have a good beginning toward fulfilling the commandment, "Multiply and replenish the earth."

—Samuel Johnson, son of Mrs. Ann Johnson, of Danville, aged about 11 years, while playing about a steam planing machine, was caught by the fingers of the right hand, and in less than half a minute his arm was cut off in quarter-inch pieces up to within two inches of the shoulder. He was also badly wounded about the face. The machine was stopped as soon as possible, and surgical aid summoned, when what was left of the arm was amputated at the shoulder. He lies in a prostrate condition, with the chances against his recovery.

—Last Saturday afternoon John Fowler, while passing along the road three miles west of Greenup, was met by John and William Rake, when a controversy arose in regard to Rake's cattle trespassing on Fowler's crops. After a few words passed between the parties, John Rake threw a rock, striking Fowler on the head and rendering him unconscious. William Rake then approached Fowler and beat him on the head, causing his death a few hours after. John Rake has been arrested and is now in jail. William Rake fled to Ohio, but will probably soon be arrested.

"Style" the Cause of Poverty.

There are various kinds of poverty. People perishing with famine are poor. People that can not procure fuel in the winter, nor sufficient clothing for warmth and comfort, are poor. People that are compelled by their circumstances to live in squalid apartments in ill-ventilated alleys are poor. People that are infirm in health, and need a warm climate, and have no means to get away are poor. These are poor in their own view, and in the view of all mankind. People may be said to be absolutely poor, too, whose intellectual natures have begun their development, and yet, who can not procure books, or access to libraries, or entrance into schools and colleges. But, after all, it is "style," that makes many people poor; the show in which other people live. The house that was well enough furnished before, becomes mean when the next neighbor furnishes her rooms with more expense and elegance. Bricks or woods were good enough till another's brown stone went up. And the sidewalk and the horse cars would answer very well, till a neighbor's horses pranced along the street, with glittering harness and glancing wheels, and a black coachman drove up to the door. And the same is true in circumstances of much humbler degree. Content is known to live in the cottage but takes its leave after it has once visited the "mansion." "Style" is the world in many people's thoughts. Is not this a rant folly, good people? Is our house the less comfortable because that of our neighbor is larger? Are our own blessings the less appreciable because his outnumber them? Out upon such folly! The strong-minded and the wise never find themselves poor, however their taste may be. The world of God's creation is so much larger, that they never have a want beyond their means. Can not you be as wise as they?

MORE CRUEL THAN WAR.

A Southern prisoner of war at Camp Chase, in Ohio, after pining of sickness in the hospital there for some time, and confiding to his friend and fellow captive, Colonel W. S. HAWKINS, of Tennessee, that he was heavy of heart because his affianced bride in Nashville did not write to him, died just before the arrival of a letter in which the lady cruelly broke the engagement. Colonel HAWKINS had been requested by his dying comrade to open any epistle which should come for him thereafter, and, upon reading the letter in question, penned the following versified answer:

Your letter, lady, came too late,
For heaven had claimed its own;
Ah, sudden change—from prison bars
Unto the great white throne!
And yet, I think he would have stayed
To live for his disdain,
Could he have read the careless words
Which you have sent in vain.

So full of patience did he wait,
Through many a weary hour,
That o'er his simple soldier faith
Not even death had power.
And you—did others whisper low
Their homage in your ear,
As though among their shallow throng
His spirit had a peer?

I would that you were by me now,
To draw the sheet aside,
And see how pure the look he wore
The moment when he died.
The sorrow that you gave to him
Had left its weary trace,
As 'twere the shadow of the cross
Upon his pallid face.

"Her love," he said, "could change for me
The winter's cold to spring!"
Ah, trust in fickle maiden's love,
Thou art a bitter thing!
For when these valleys, bright in May,
Once more with blossoms wave,
The Northern violets shall blow
Above his humble grave.

Your dole of scanty words had been
But one more pang to bear,
For him who kissed unto the last
Your tress of golden hair.
I did not put it where he said,
For when the angels come
I would not have them find the sign
Of falsehood in his tomb.

I've read your letter, and I know
The wiles that you had wrought
To win that noble heart of his,
And gained it—cruel thought!
What lavish wealth men sometimes give
For what is worthless all!
What manly bosoms beat for truth
In folly's falsest thrall!

You shall not pity him, for now
His sorrow has an end.
Yet would that you could stand with me
Beside my fallen friend.
And I forgive you for his sake,
As he—if it be given—
May e'en be pleading grace for you
Before the court of heaven.

To-night the cold winds whistle by,
As I my vigil keep
Within the prison dead-house, where
Few mourners come to weep.
A rude plank coffin holds his form;
Yet death exalts his face,
And I would rather see him thus
Than clasped in your embrace.

To-night your home may shine with light
And ring with merry song,
And you be smiling, as your soul
Had done no deadly wrong;
Your hand so fair that none would think
It penned these words of pain;
Your skin so white—would God your heart
Were half as free from stain!

I'd rather be my comrade dead
Than you in life supreme;
For your's the sinner's waking dread,
And his the martyr's dream.
Whom serve we in this life, we serve
In that which is to come;
He chose his way, you yours; let God
Pronounce the fitting doom.

Rotation in Office.

Up to the beginning of General Jackson's term of office, there had been, during the forty years of his six predecessors, 112 removals of such officers as required for their appointment "the advice and consent of the Senate." These few removals were not made from caprice, or to punish enemies, or to reward partisans, but for cause and by strict rule. The power of removal was exerted so exceptionally, only for just and salutary purposes, and was never used as an instrument of party success. Public policy dictated its exercise. Offices were not regarded as the private property of the President, or as the perquisites of a party, but as trusts for the general good.

General Jackson's accession to the Presidency began a revolution. Differences of opinion were punished by removal from office, and partnership was rewarded with places of profit. His successors have adhered too closely to a precedent which has almost solidified into a party law, or a principle of American politics. No party can claim exemption from the sin of using the civil list for party ends. The Whig, Democrat and Republican parties, in the distribution of "patronage," in federal, state and municipal governments, are alike abnoxious to censure. The poison has infiltrated every vein and artery of the body politic. Every branch of federal and of state service has suffered from the vicious maxim that offices are spoils to be divided among the victors in a party contest. Too often the condition precedent to appointment is unquestioning submission to party decrees, indiscriminate support of party candidates and party measures. The right to remove incumbents is now a conceded Presidential prerogative, acquiesced in by all parties.—Hon. J. L. M. Curry, in the Galaxy for June.

NOT many women are blacksmiths, but most of them can "shoe" a hen.

General Ben Runkle.

In 1872 Benjamin Runkle, then an officer on the retired list, doing duty by assignment in connection with the Freedmen's Bureau as a disbursing officer in Kentucky, was court martialed on the charge of misappropriating money, sentenced to dismissal from the service and to the Penitentiary. The finding of the court martial was approved by Belknap, then Secretary of War, although the sentence to the Penitentiary was remitted. Runkle since that date has constantly maintained that his case was not fairly tried before the court martial, and, indeed, has proved his innocence of the charge upon which he was convicted. He incurred odium from the fact that he was a disbursing officer under General Howard's management of the Freedmen's Bureau.

Runkle's lawyers have recently discovered a point in military law, the result of which, within a day or two, has been that the President has ordered Major Runkle's restoration to the service. The lawyers made the point that the military law requires that the sentence of a court martial, involving criminal charges, must be approved by the President of the United States, and can not be approved by the Secretary of War; that consequently the indorsement of Secretary Belknap was of no effect in the law, and that Runkle's case was still pending. The argument of this point was had before the President and the law officers of the Government, and the decision was reached that the point of the lawyers was well founded, and that in fact Runkle's court martial was legally still pending.

This point gained, the President gave Runkle a special hearing upon the merits of his defense. The evidence discovered by Runkle during the last five years was so overwhelming that that the President has decided that the accusation was unfounded. For these reasons the President declines to approve the recommendations of the court martial. This leaves Major Runkle on the retired list.

This is probably one of the most remarkable vindications in the military history of the country, due to the discovery of a point of law which seems to have hitherto escaped all the Judge Advocates. Major Runkle was a very brave soldier, was severely wounded, will be a life long sufferer, and doubtless deserves the retired life pay. The decision, of course, gives Runkle his pay since 1872, as the non-approval of the court martial leaves him in the service during that time. His back pay amounts to about $11,000.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Public Cruelty.

Massachusetts does not consider itself one of the dark places of the earth; quite the reverse. But the evidence taken by two or three recent legislative investigating committees pretty conclusively establishes the fact that even in Massachusetts a workhouse or reform school may become a habitation of cruelty.

Some of the stories told by witnesses, stories of brutal torture inflicted upon mere boys for comparatively trivial offences, are almost too shocking to believe. Unhappily the testimony of the sufferers, or of their their surviving fellow sufferers, is in a number of cases corroborated by that of subordinate officials who were agents in or eye witnesses of the cruelty testified to. In one case, after the effects of a particularly ingenious and effective torture upon those subjected to it had been described, the head of the institution maintained before the committee that it was a proper mode of punishment, important, if not essential, to the preservation of discipline.

The worst of it is, what is true of Massachusetts is at least equally likely to be true of other States—of New York, for instance. Only the other day we printed a letter about the condition of convicts in the Clinton State prison at Dannemora. We do not know whether the assertions made in that letter are true or false; certainly they call for investigation. If they are true, the state of things at that prison is a disgrace to the Christian and civilized Commonwealth of New York. That not one legislator in a hundred has any knowledge of his own as to the truth or falsity of such assertions, or any serious desire and purpose to secure such knowledge, is hardly less disgraceful.

The fact is, that the duty of the State to the men, women and children whom it locks up in its penal institutions, and to the other men, women and children, whom it virtually, if not literally, locks up in its charitable institutions, is as yet only imperfectly understood, and still more imperfectly discharged. Precisely because it has locked them up, the State is bound, not merely in humanity, but in common justice, to see to it that they are not maltreated by its servants, to whose custody it turns them over.—N. Y. Sun.

A RURAL editor was cowhided because he said the bride's "trowsers" were the loveliest he ever saw. He had written "trousseau," but the blarsted "comp." didn't like the word.

Another Polar Expedition.

The schooner Florence sailed from New London, Conn., last week, to establish a colony as a base of operations for a new Arctic exploration at a point on the north side of Cumberland Island. It is proposed to store supplies at this point for the main expedition, which will sail in July, 1878, under command of Captain H. W. Howgate, of the United States army. The plan for reaching the pole is substantially the same as that of Dr. Hall, and the preparations are to be more thorough and adequate to the end proposed. The gentlemen who have sailed in the Florence are many of those familiar with arctic life and its requirements, and their outfit is very complete, including sets of weather instruments, balloons, and a curious combination of both life-boat and sledge.

Esquimaux, sledges and dogs are to be gathered at the colony during the present year, and it is hoped that by August, 1878, all the preparations will be finished and the expedition ready to start for the pole.

So long as the highest point of northern latitude is unreached, we have no reason to suppose that arctic expeditions will cease.

It seems to be in vain to point out the comparative usclessness, even in a scientific point of view, of the necessarily imperfect and doubtful observations which could be made under the disadvantages and obstacles of a polar position. The expense in life and money of most of these expeditions is far beyond the value of the results, and thus far they have only served as an outlet for that personal ambition and love of adventure which might find a better theater in undertakings more truly valuable to the human race. We would not be understood as frowning upon scientific research or geographical enthusiasm. The enterprise and endurance of men during the present century have widened the domain of human knowledge and brought the blessings of civilization within reach of new tribes of the human race; but has not this Arctic field had more than its share of attention? Are there any fresh laurels or new advantages to be reaped in a path trodden, so to speak, by so many companies to a seemingly impassable barrier about four hundred miles from the wished-for goal? No one doubts that, by a sufficient expenditure of money and men, by establishing costly depots of provisions, stores, Esquimaux and dogs, and by a slow but persevering advance from depot to depot, the ultimate point of north latitude may be reached; but do the prospective results warrant such an effort? and if not, are not these spasmodic efforts, which excite and harrass the public mind with hope and anxicty for a few advcnturers through two or three years, rather to be frowned upon than encouraged by true lovers of science and mankind?

Adam and Eve's Wedding.

Did you ever contemplate the poverty of Adam when he took Eve for better or for worse? Only think of it. He hadn't a hat to his head, a coat to his back, a pair of shoes to his feet, nor "nary red cent" in his trowsers' pocket. Eve brought no dowry; she had nothing to bestow save her love and affection, and as he was the only young fellow around, it was he or nobody. Equally as poor as her husband, she came to him without a bonnet or a shawl, a calico gown or even a pair of slippers. She was simplicity itself, being clothed with innocence—and a fig-leaf apron. Moses forgot, in his reminiscence, to give us any account of the wedding trip; but what we can gather in regard to the wardrobes of the day, then baggage would have proved an incumbrance; for a limited amount sufficed, and dressing to please everybody would have been of no account, for there were none but themselves to please. Doubtless their whole outfit of traveling dresses, waterproofs, dusters, lunch baskets and all, he could have carried in the pockets of his trousers. They must have started housekeeping, also, on as small capital as could be imagined. They hadn't, as far as can be gleaned from history, a hair brush, fine-tooth comb, a towel, or soap, no bitters, soothing syrup, clothes wringers, smoothing iron—no nothing.

Adam wasn't afraid to ask his wife to go on an excursion with him through fear of having to go down deep into his trowsers pocket for the wherewithal to buy a suitable outfit, for the reason that he had no pockets in his trowsers; nor was he bothered about his trunk checks, nor did he swear at baggage smashers, or brook the insolence of railroad officials.

There was no good and sufficient reason why they shouldn't have been an amiable couple and had a time generally. They washed their own clothes, doubtless by a dive in the Euphrates, and, there being no clothes-line, their clothes were allowed to dry on their backs; and Adam didn't care a rush whether his shirt bosom was smooth or not, and why should Eve bother her head about it as long as her husband was suited?

WHAT is the nearest thing to a cat looking out of a window? The window.

A Hitherto Unpublished Letter from Artemus Ward.

From the Elmira Gazette.

We have been permitted to publish a letter written by Mr. Charles F. Brown (Artemus Ward) to a young friend of his—a little girl, then of the age of eight, and now the wife of a prominent merchant in a neighboring city. We vouch for its genuineness. It will at once strike the reader as being emphatically characteristic—"true to life:"

SALEM, MASS., June 18, 1864.

MY DEAR AMELIA: I can not tell you how much I miss you.

It seems as though I had lost all my relatives, including my grandmother and the cooking-stove.

Why didn't I put you in a bottle and bring you down here with me? But I am always forgetting something. The other day I went off and forgot my Aunt Sarah, and she's a good deal bigger than you are. Mr. Ramsey is also a forgetful man. He frequently goes off and forgets his washerwoman. Mr. Ramsey is a very fine-looking man. He reminds me of Mr. Green, the Malden murderer. When Mr. Ramsey goes to the Penitentiary, which will be very soon, we must send him doughnuts, magazines and other literary documents. Mr. Ramsey can read print very well.

I like you very much. I should like you just as well if you were twelve years older. I am very singular about some things.

You spoke to me about a boy who is my rival. I should feel very sorry to kill that boy, but he may drive me to it. I am in hopes that he may take himself into a premature tomb; that he may choke himself with a large slice of pudding; but if he does neither, I shall be forced to load him with chains and read all my lectures to him. That will finish him. His boots may remain, but the rest of him will have perished miserably long before I have got through.

You must be a good little girl, and always mind your mother. Never let your excellent mother feel sorry that she is acquainted with you. If it hadn't been for her, you might have been drowned in a soup-plate long ago. And if you hadn't ever had any mother, you might now be in Turkey with the other Turkeys. In fact, my dear Amelia, so conduct yourself that even on dark and rainy days the bright sun may shine wherever you are, and that the stars (which are next to the sun in brightness) may never flash so brilliantly but that you can always look steadily and hopefully toward them. Faithfully, your friend, A. WARD.

Boiling Over With Love.

It was in a West Philadelphia parlor last Sunday evening. They had talked of the weather, coming picnics, where the best ice-cream was to be found, what they expected to do next fourth of July, and then followed a silence. Gently, very gently, his arm stole around her waist. He felt her tremble, and then he commenced pouring words of love into her ear. In fifteen minutes his tale had been unfolded, and then he paused for a reply, but none came, not even a grunt. Uncertainty was consuming him, his hair commenced to, rise and so did his nose, so, clutching her by the arm, he gasped:

"Oh, will you be mine?"

She didn't say yes, but she did spring from his side and that sofa, and go dancing around the room exclaiming: Oh, my arm! Oh, my boil! O-o-o oh! Jerusalem!" And then she keeled over and fell inscnsible on the floor, just as her father, mother, brother and three half-dressed children, and the dog rushed into the room.

"Young man, what is the meaning of this?" sternly demanded the father.

The young man was silent.

"What is it I say?" he thundered.

"I'll bet he catched her by the arm and busted her bile," howled the mother, as the blood on her daughter's dress caught her eye.

He had, but he wont do so any more, and hereafter, even if he is boiling over with love, he wont propose to a girl with a boil.—Alta Calfornia.

History of the Alphabet.

Rev. Isaac Taylor has read a paper before the Victoria Institute, London, on De Rogue's investigations of the history of the alphabet—the oldest achievement of human ingenuity. It passed through three stages—from pictures of things (ideograms) to symbols of words and syllables (phonograms) and lastly into letters. All the alphabets could be traced by means of the Moabite stone to the Egyptian hieroglyphics, and the successive changes were shown to be, in a great measure, owing to the necessities produced by the nature of the writing material, unwillingness to devote much time to the accurate reproduction of original forms, and the requirements of legibility.

THE poet Gray was notoriously fearful of fire, and kept a ladder of ropes in his bed-room. Some mischievious young men in Camridge, knowing this, roused him from below in the middle of a dark night with the cry of fire! the stair-case they said was in flames. Up went the window, and down he came on his rope ladder as fast as he could into a tub of water which they had placed there to receive him. He was put out.

"BUT I pass," said a minister in the West End in discussing one portion of his subject. "Then I make it spades," yelled a man in the gallery who was dreaming of the happy hours away in an imaginary game of euchre.

CONKLING is at home again.

SENATOR O. P. MORTON, of Indiana, suffered from attack of paralysis, last week.

THE Frankfort Yeoman says there is coal oil under that town, but it does not know how much.

THE Indians are as well armed as the United States troops, and know how to use their guns.

THE Georgetown Times accuses half of the Democrats of Scott County of being asleep on election day.

THE reverses of the Russians south of the Balkans is attributed to the inefficiency of the commanders.

THERE is now a proposition to repudiate four hundred thousand dollars of the consolidated bonds in South Carolina.

THE celebration of the battle of Bennington, Vermont, on the 15th, was participated in by about twenty-five thousand persons.

DURING the month of July, one thousand six hundred and forty-seven and one-half barrels of beer were sold in the Covington district.

WEST VIRGINIA is having some trouble about agreeing upon a place for a capital. Charleston stands the best chance for the favor at present.

HON. GEO. R. SNYDER, who has been re-elected to the Legislature from Clark County, will be presented as a candidate for Speaker of the House.

A YOUNG attorney named Leslie was arrested on last Thursday, in Louisville, charged with larceny. The evidence against him is said to be direct.

THE Nashville working men at their meeting, last week, demanded issuance of $10,000,000 greenbacks per month until the distress in the country is relieved.

THE small handful of Indians are giving General Howard all he wants in the way of war. It seems that he can not handle them, but gets handled, and roughly too.

THE latest crop reports in Missouri show that the wheat and oats crop far exceed those of many years. But there has been very little grain shipped and put on the market.

THE coal miners in Pennsylvania have demanded that the 12½ per cent. reduction made in their wages on the 1st of June be restored, which, if not done, they say will result in a strike.

THE candidates for county offices in Montgomery and several other counties in the State are having their names put before the public. They doubtless think the early bird gets the worm.

SHOULD the United States get into trouble with Cuba she would have her hands full. The Indians and Cubans will be as much as Uncle Sam can handle, judging from the success in the late Indian troubles.

IT is reported that an American schooner was fired into by a gunboat, south of Cuba. The report has been referred to the proper United States authorities who are taking steps to have the matter investigated.

THE famine in India still rages, and the suffering among all classes is terrible. The superintendent of relief operations reports that a journey over one of his roads resembled the path of a great battle in the numbers of the dead and dying.

THE campaign in Ohio is warming up. West, the Republican nominee for Governor, opened up at Bellefontaine on the the 16th inst. Mr. West steered clear of Hayes' Southern policy, but dwelt on the labor and capital question quite a length.

A DISPATCH from the United States Minister to Greece to the State Department, asserts that the United States can henceforth control in a great extent the grain market of Europe. This assertion is based on the fact that Russia, our only competitor, is now involved in war, and that the facilities of the United States for shipping grain are much greater than those of Russia, and therefore can put the the grain on shipboard cheaper than that country can.

A COMMISSION has been formed and authorized to wait upon Mr. Sitting Bull, now of Canada, and arrange a treaty of peace under which he can return to the United States and take possession of the Sioux Country. This treaty will be a pass for Mr. Bull to visit his native land again, if nothing more.

THE Democrats in Maine nominated J. H. Williams for Governor. In their platform they declare the counting in of a fraudulent President must not again occur, and that the restoration to common rights of the people of the three Southern States long subjected to military occupation is a just acknowledgement of the wisdom of Democratic priciples.

THE Mexicans, who at first threatened to become antagonized toward the United States on account of the treatment of the cattle thieving expeditions invading the country along the Rio Grande, have, at last, concluded the policy of this government in that respect is just, and that they will give it their approval. It is said that at no time has such perfect order and security been provided on the Mexican border as at present.

THE Rising Sun (Ind.) Recorder of last week says in regard to our late election:

Granville Rouse was elected Representative to the Legislature from Boone County, by a large majority. The Rouse family in Boone and Kenton counties is quite an extensive one, and they are probably related remotely to the Rouses in Switzerland County. Granville Rouse is an intelligent and enterprising farmer, and an influential leader in the Grange movement in Boone County. The Boone County RECORDER says he was born in a wagon. The contest was a very bitter personal and family one, with fights in most of the districts on election day, including Burlington, Florence, Petersburg, Taylorsport, Grant and Carlton.

Friend Waldo is slightly mistaken about our saying Mr. Rouse was born in a wagon. We are not sufficiently familiar with Mr. Rouse's biography to say where he was born.

THE examining trial of Joseph Myrick, Sheriff of Carroll County, and others, for the murder of Carrie Anderson, at Worthville, is now in progress at Carrollton. The testimony which had been given when the court adjourned, on the 17th to meet again on the 22d, was rather severe. The principle evidence was that given by one, Newton Orr, who was arrested as an accomplice. He testified as follows:

That on the 16th of July he was asked by Pettit to come and have some fun; in the conversation Pettit said that the intention was to go to Anderson's house to scare and run them off, and left with that intention about dark, in company with Julius Pettit, on the Worthville pike; on a crossing we were joined by Joseph Myrick, Charles Gardner and James Sullinger, and then rode to a church and dismounted; they advanced toward Anderson's house on foot; Myrick threw a ball of candle-wick, saturated with turpentine, which took fire; a moment later the door of the house was opened. Myrick fired his gun off, apparently in the air, and cried out, "For God's sake, don't shoot any more; there is a woman shot." He heard about four or five gunshots. Sullinger did not fire. Charley Gardner had a gun but did not know if he fired or not. On their return home Charley Gardner left at the crossing to Carrollton; Myrick and Sullinger went on the Ghent road, and slept the balance of the night near Ghent, in Pettit's mill.

All is quiet on the Danube. The Conner men have taken passage on the Boomerang for the head waters of Salt River.

Our apiarist is having bad luck. He bought a queen bee from J. T. Connley, of Union, brought her home and put her to bed, but in doing so he dropped a spark of fire on her quilt, and in a few moments the poor bee was scorched so badly that she died in a few days. Poor thing! Mr. A. has bought another, with which he hopes he will have better luck.

Since the smoke of battle has cleared away, it is possible to send a few hasty jottings and not a single fiery dart. Oh, that such may never occur again in the history of our county!

The past two or three weeks have been occupied in threshing grain, cutting bushes and attending the Institute. There was a small acreage of wheat sown last fall, on account of so many recent failures, yet a better quality and yield could not have been expected; 20 bushels is not far from an average.

A disease called cholera is making sad havoc among the hogs in this part of the county. The symptoms are very different in most cases from those which usually accompany hog cholera. A great many have died, and others are in a very critical condition. Nothing like it has ever been seen.

Grandmother Harrison, formerly a citizen of Plattsburg, but now of Indiana, is spending a few weeks with her grand-daughter, Mrs. Miller.

Miss Mary Gaines has been in a low state of health for some time. Misses Lizzie and Nancy Jarrell are reported to be improving.

The friends of Mr. Orlando Snyder will regret to learn that his failure to attend the Institute was on account of his being sick.

A FRIEND.

Plattsburg.

The election excitement has died away and now we are ready for something else. Certainly we are the most enthusiastic people of any on the globe. The late political contest was said by some to be a forerunner of the conflict between labor and capital. This we hardly believe, from the fact that this country is so large that people are not necessarily bound to be confined to certain territory or cities. It is estimated by political economists that Illinois is capable of sustaining a population of twelve millions of people, and Kentucky about one-half as many, while there are ten or eleven territories, any of them as large as the State of Ohio, that are scarcely settled at all, and as capital has only been oppressive in small countries like England and France, it is not likely it will ever affect the working men of independence of this large and productive America.

There will not be a single passenger from this place to go on the new steamer, Boomerang. The official vote of this place was fifteen and all sold for Rouse. According to the division of the vote made by the Conner men, the crew will be all officers, for they say all who would go as deck hands voted for Rouse, and as none but Conner men need apply it looks very much like degrading them to make roustabouts out of those who think they ought to be officers. But that has nothing to do with our poet, for he will talk. Listen at him:

Hickory, dickory, dock,
Who received the majority vote?
I, says Conner, at the primary election—
I was the people's selection;
I received a majority of sixty-eight,
And I ought to go to the Capitol of the State.

But I, says Rouse, in Convention,
Which was the bone of contention,
I received the nomination;
Although it was only by a fraction,
And as you beat me sixty-eight before,
Now I have beat you three hundred and more.

DON JUAN.

Petersburg.

Mr. J. D. Norris and James Riddell reached home from Hoosier last Saturday with a large invoice of premiums, having about made a clean sweep at a fair at Osgood, Ind., last week. They and their horses are taking a rest and getting ready this week for a raid on the fair at Florence next week. Eight first and two second premiums is no slouch of a report for one fair, and if they are as successful all round as at Osgood, there will be an over-supply of ribbon in this section soon.

Watermelon speculators were to be found on every corner last week, but, owing to the fact that the bottom dropped out of the market about last Friday, there are more retired watermelon merchants on the loafing lists this week than of all the other professions combined.

One of our city grocers has overheard a courtship down in the bucktown region, and it has tickled his fancy with visions of early days to that degree that he has scarcely been able to attend to his business for a week past.

Porter came up all right Saturday evening, wearing his most engaging smile. He denies the report which appeared in this column last week, but our witnesses are too many for him. It will be a long time before he does the like again.

The sangerfest is over, and in some respects was a grand success. The young ladies of the choir acquitted themselves in their usual faultless style, while the gentlemen performed the parts assigned them to the satisfaction of the audience. A great many people from the country were present, especially on the last evening. The audiences were orderly and quiet, but the impecunious members of the Brimstone Brigade were promptly on hand, climbing on surrounding fences and into the very windows of the church itself, booting, yelling, and making night hideous with dog fights, throwing stones, &c., &c., after their usual style.

Speaking of concerts, sangerfests and the like, reminded us that we are to have another one next week on Wednesday night (29th inst.), at the M. E. Church in this town. It is under the supervision of Prof. F. L. Bristow, which has much to do with insuring a first class entertainment. Doors open at 7. p. m.; the trouble will commence at 8 p. m.

Florence.

The truth of the old adage that "love laughs at locksmiths" was again exemplified in this neighborhood last Sunday afternoon in the case of Mr. Jas. Waiter and Miss Hattie Dixon. It seems that Miss Hattie's parents objected to Mr. Waller as a son-in-law, and some six months ago requested him to discontinue his visits. He did so, but the knowing ones predicted there would be a runaway. Last Sunday afternoon, Mr. Wm. Hogan called on Miss Dixon and requested her to take a buggy ride, to which she agreed. Once in the buggy they started for the city, where, by preconcerted arrangement, they met Mr. Waller at the Galt House. The services of a Rev. Mr. Smith were obtained, and they were quietly made flesh of one flesh and bone of one bone.

Last Sunday the colored "brederen" had bush-meeting in Yager's woods. There were several 'bus and hack loads from the city. Four preachers administered to the wants of the poor souls, one of whom was sister Finnegan, a dusky damsel, who weighed about 250 pounds. She is a very forcible speaker. Some of the white boys were laughing at her remarks, when she turned loose on them thusly: "Yes, you can laugh, but when you are in the bottomless pit of hell, and I am flying around the great white throne with my angel wings and white robes of peace, then I will laugh to see the devil turn you fellows over on a spit, and you will want me to give you a drop of water to cool your tongues."

Some of our citizens, becoming envious of the reputation acquired by the Irish rifle-team, met last week and organized a company of sharp-shooters. R. H. Ingram was elected Captain, Jno. W. Carpenter, First Lieutenant; Jerry Carpenter, Second Lieutenant; W. A. Price, Secretary, and Jno. M. Finch, Treasurer, and S. W. Carpenter, Target-bearer. They have concluded to practice with shotguns for the present, and the Captain was instructed to purchase a Bogardus Patent Spring Trap and 200 glass balls for the use of the company. The balls are about the size, and somewhat the shape, of a large goose egg. The trap throws the ball about thirty yards, and is operated from behind a screen and is changeable at the will of the operator, throwing the balls in whatever direction he desires. This causes the shootist to be on the alert, as he can not tell in which direction the ball will be sent. A ball has to be broken before the shot counts. Last Saturday afternoon the club met at Mr. Jno. W. Carpenter's for practice, but, owing to the picnic, the attendance was limited to the officers. Out of three scores of ten shots each

R. H. Ingram	scored 13
W. A. Price	9
J. W. Carpenter	9
Jerry Carpenter	7

J. M. Finch's right eye being off, he declined shooting. Captain Ingram would, undoubtedly, have scored more, but he had an exuberance of flesh in the shape of a pimple, about the size of a button-hole bouquet, on the end of his nose, which he mistook for the sights on his gun. He says he "nose" he would have scored more only for that. Next Saturday afternoon they will have a grand schutzenfest at the same place. The party making the best score will be given a beautiful cup.

Everett Carpenter ran a pitch fork in his foot, the other day, and it left an ungly wound.

The picnic given by the members of the Catholic Church, last Saturday, was a grand success. A large crowd was in attendance, considering that there were seven other picnics in the county that day.

A large delegation from the Florence Lodge of Odd Fellows visited Ludlow Lodge, last Saturday night. They report a splendid time.

Prof. Geo. Bagby was in town, last week, distributing bills for his picnic. Among the names of the scholars on the hills, were those of Black Clarkson and Joe Childress. They were both in town with the Professor, and, being requested by some parties to dance, gave a specimen of their abilities in the terpsichorean line. Black gave a fancy Spanish dance in which he balanced himself and made three complete revolutions on his big toe. Joe danced with the greatest ease and grace imaginable the highland fling.

Dr. B. Fulton, a former resident of this place, but now of Pine Bluffs, Arkansas, dropped in on us last week. He is looking quite natural.

Two noted shoulder hitters, Joe Pugh and Dennis Conway, locked horns last Saturday night, at a dance at Greenwood, but they were separated before much damage was done.

Mr. Frank Bedinger has been appointed depot agent at Greenwood, on the Southern Railroad.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

THE Institute is over. Next.

LUNA is doing her best making the nights beautiful.

NOT much stock is being scoked up for the fair about here.

CIRCUIT Court approacheth. The lawyers are rubbing up their legal lore.

MUSIC teaching is the most remunerative business followed in Burlington.

WE are under obligations to Mr. John P. Scott for Missouri papers of a late date.

THE flux, in a mild form, is rather prevalent in the county at present. No fatal cases as yet.

LAST Saturday was a day noted for picnics. There were no less than six in the county.

A YOUNG lady attending the Institute last week was surprised to find Burlington with more than one street.

THE Rev. J. W. Henley, Universalist, will preach at this place next (fourth) Sunday, morning and afternoon.

WE call the special attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Farmer's College, located at College Hill, Ohio.

DON'T forget to call at the Red Boot, No. 626, Madison St., Covington, and price Boots and Shoes before purchasing elsewhere.

IF you want anything in the shape of Tombstons or Fine Monuments, call on Huschart & Co., Lawenceburg, Indiana.

A YOUNG man who will rush into a dry goods store and ask the proprietor if he has seen his cows, surely has at least one eye on business.

THE Rev. W. S. Bacon will preach at Boone County Church (Universalist) on the first Sunday in September. Basket meeting. All are invited.

DRS. ULBERT and Harryman have removed their dental parlors in Aurora to the rooms immediately over the Postoffice, where they will be glad to see their old patrons.

JONAS CLORE'S wheat crop threshed out 777 bushels this year—nearly half the number of bushels of wheat that has been raised in the county any one year for some time.

WE have in our possession a mnemorandum book which was found in or near town last Saturday. The owner, calling at our office and paying for this notice, can have the book.

THE neighborhood south of Burlington was visited by a hail storm, last Thursday, which damaged the tobacco crop considerably. Some of the crop is counted a total loss.

THE ordinary docket for next term of Circuit Court has been considerably swollen during the past week. The equity docket remains quiet, and but little expunded since the last term of court.

AN apple tree at Jos. Cowen's, upon which are large and well developed apples, has, in the last few days, put forth a new bloom, as though seriously thinking about producing apple crop No. 2 this season.

A SLANDER suit of considerable magnitude has been instituted in the Boone Circuit Court. The amount sued for is $10,000. The probabilities are it will come to trial at the next term of court, unless settled.

WE learn that Mr. Stephenson will commence school in the Morgan Academy the first Monday in next month. He has quite a goodly number of scholars signed and ready to commence with the school.

SOME of the methods introduced by the teachers during the Institute were so befogging that it would take a pretty fair scholar to understand them, yet they say, "this is my method for teaching beginners."

THE Rev. B. F. Bristow had an appointment to preach at this place last Sunday afternoon, and quite a large congregation assembled to hear the sermon, but the reverend gentleman failed to put in his appearance.

IN 1807 Mrs. Susan Tanner was 82 years of age. At that time she was the mother of 15 children, grandmother to 116 children, great-grandmother to 125, and great-great-grandmother to 4 children. She died in 1873.

BASE-BALL made its advent here last Friday. The Drex., of Covington, and the Burlingtons crossed bats. The game was particularly noted for bad playing, the score in eight innings standing 31 to 14 in favor of the Burlington boys.

WEDNESDAY of last week, the County Attorney was called to Union to prosecute Thos. Baker and Frank Bentz for violating the local option law. The trial resulted in Bentz's acquittal, and a fine of $25 and costs being assessed against Baker.

WHILE on the move, the other afternoon, we took in the croquet ground, where we found one Justice of the Peace, two attorneys, one M. D., two merchants, a Sheriff, a retired blacksmith, two Grangers and three brick pressers engineering a game of croquet.

The Institute.

The Boone County Teachers' Institute was in session on the Morgan Academy Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week. The attendance at first was small as to spectators, but it continued to increase till Friday, when there were as many present as the room in which the Institute was held could accommodate.

Nearly all the teachers in the county were enrolled, as were a number from other places, but, as has been the case heretofore, quite a number of the teachers took no further part, they only desiring to hold on to their certificates, which were liable to be revoked if they failed to attend.

The late Institute was much more interesting in some respects than were those of previous years. Among the interesting features was select reading, which was assigned to Mr. Fred Youmans, who rendered it highly entertaining to both teachers and audience. The address by James W. Howe at the opening of the Institute, we hear highly complimented by those who were present.

There were three essays—one by Miss Allie Carson, of Verona; one by Miss Mattie Roberts, of Verona; and one by Miss Mary A. Thompson, of Burlington—which eclipse any productions known in the history of the Boone County Teachers' Institute. The authors of two of the essays kindly allow us to publish them this week. The author of the third we failed to have consulted in regard to the matter, but will gladly give it space in the RECORDER at any time.

Mr. Leslie Early acted in the capacity of critic during the taree days. His criticisms were close, but not severe, and, although Mr. Conner considered it a question as to whether he has any poetry in his soul, the Institute gave him a vote of thanks for his fair and impartial criticisms.

The following is the essay which was read before the Institute by Miss Mattie Roberts:

And the Lord said: Behold a son shall be born who shall be a man of wisdom. His name shall be Morgan, and he shall give peace and encouragement unto the people of Burlington in his days; he shall build a house in his name, and he shall be my son and I will be his father, and I will establish his fame throughout Burlington forever. Then shall the people of Burlington prosper, if they take heed to fulfill the statutes and judgments which the Lord charged Morgan with concerning them. Therefore Morgan said unto them: Be strong and of good courage; dread not nor be dismayed; for behold in thy trouble I have prepared for thee a house, that thou mayest add thereto. Moreover, there are workmen in abundance—all manner of cunning men for every manner of work.

And it came to pass that Horton J., son of Jesse J., son of Jerekiah J., the Fosterite, established a decree to make a solemn proclamation throughout all the land of Boone that they, the teachers thereof, should come up to Morgan Academy three days in the eight months of every year with intellectual offerings. And the command went forth: Be ye not like your fathers and like your brethren, who gave themselves up to desolation as you see; be ye not stiff-necked, making vain excuses; but enter ye into this sanctuary and serve according to your ability, that the fierceness of the Ruler's wrath may turn away from you.

And it came to pass that the teachers declared that before the days of Horton J., the Fosterite, there was not the like known in Burlington. And they offered thanks unto the Lord that such a man had been born unto them. Moreover, he appointed every man to his service. Thomas, the Stephensonite, and Daniel, the Grigsbyite, were to assist in conferring blessings, and command that the tithes should be brought in faithfully. Next to these were the Howeites, the Conneites, the Snyderites, Bonseites and Newtonites, each in their set office, to give to their brethren by courses, as well to the small as to the great, to everyone that entereth into true membership his yearly portion for their service in their respective charges.

And it came to pass that the command went forth that all the herrdless boys, viz., the Youmanite, the Cockranite, the Scottite and the Terrellite, should appear unto the household; but they were abashed.

And Daniel, the Grigsbyite, arose and spake unto them saying: Be brave, my boys, and be of good courage, and let us work valiantly for our Ruler, and whatsoever he commandeth let us do; for great he is and greatly to be feared.

And on the third day it came to pass that James, the Howeite, solicited the ladies whose intellects had been established throughout Boone County to arise; but they trembled and humbly beseeched the Ruler that he would free them, and appointed John T., the Cunigite, to minister unto the throng.

Also there was a man the son of an Earlyite, a man of great cunning, who was to record among the Morgan Academyites. In the year 1875 he began his service by bringing forth that which was good and right and truth; he brings in abundantly, yea, by heaps; this man's offerings divert the Ruler but afford no very great pleasure to the congregation.

And they, the princes and elders, made proclamation throughout Boone County unto all the children of promise that they should gather themselves unto Burlington; and whosoever would not come up there three days, according to counsel, all his substance should be forfeited, and he himself separated from the congregation of those that assembled.

And Foster, the Ruler, said unto those that did transgress: Ye have taken strange doctrines; neither were ye able to stand this work for a day or two; therefore ye must make confession, bring forth your tithes and do my pleasure.

And it came to pass that the children of this tribe considered their burden grievous, and prayed that they might be lightened, and that they might have a little reviving in bondage.

And in the year 1876 Daniel, the Grigsbyite, spake to the chief of the Burlingtonites to appoint their brethren to be the singers, with instruments of music, lifting up their voices with joy.

And when Horton J., the Fosterite, had made an end of literary offerings and peace offerings, he commanded the son of the Earlyite to make a display of his cunningness, for which he blessed the people in the name of the Lord, and dealt to each Morganite a mallet and ball, and appointed a certain Boone County Recorderite to record the deeds thereof to the Boone Countyites.

And behold, the rest of the acts of the Institutuites will hereafter be recorded in the Second Book of Chronicles.

The following is the essay written by Miss Mary A. Thompson:

MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN AS PARTS OF SPEECH.

All men are called nouns. The majority are common, the minority proper nouns, which nouns are generally in the nominative case, being the "agents, actors or doers." A few of them are regarded as independent elements. The common nouns will most frequently be found to be decidedly in the objective case. There is a class of individuals included with the nouns whom we would pronounce pronouns, as they only "stand for or instead of" the noun man.

The first class of women may be denominated verbs. As the verb is the most important word in a sentence, so are these women the most important personages in the drama of life. Surely they seem made "to be, to do or to suffer." May heaven grant us more of this first class of women; may they be better known and more appreciated among us!

The second class of women are adjectives. They belong to or qualify some noun or substantive, the quality of which substantive is seldom known until the adjective is joined thereto. These women are the most popular; they are considered fine modifying elements.

There is a third class whom we must acknowledge are almost nonentities, both in their homes and in society. I suppose we may include them with the pronouns, or regard them as prepositions.

And the little children we may consider as partaking of the nature of interjections and conjunctions, for we can scarcely speak of them without emotion, and they certainly bind together the elder members of the family, even as a conjunction unites the members of a sentence.

MONDAY week, Circuit Court commences.

HOT water with a squeal in it is not uncommon in this burg.

"I DON'T want to subscribe for the RECORDER, Mr. ——— takes it and I borrow it of him." Well, were I you I would borrow my meal and flour of him. It is no use for you to buy, Mr. ——— buys them—borrow.

THE singing at Petersburg, Saturday night, is reported as a grand affair by those of our town who were fortunate enough to be present. Another entertainment off of the same piece will be given there on the evening of the 29th inst., in the Methodist Church.

WE noticed arrangements were being made, one day last week, for the cleansing of the office of our neighbors, two of the followers of Blackstone, and among other things noticed was that the first falling a victim to the cleansing were the two attorneys. They were first removed from the office.

IT matters not whether the mercury is frisking around among the nineties or struggling to keep an elevation equal to zero, the edicts of Hymen must be obeyed. The last four individuals of whom the record in the County Clerk's office has any knowledge of embarking on life's turbulent stream are W. H. Stephens and Martha J. Clore, Jas. L. Kite and Mary McIntyre.

TUESDAY the Twentieth Exhibition of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association opens on the grounds near Florence. The season having been so very favorable, there is no reason why the exhibition of farm products should not be as good or better than any previous year. The price of admission having been reduced to suit the times will do much toward increasing the attendance.

WE are in receipt of a complimentary ticket to the Fifth Industrial Exposition at Louisville, which opens on the 4th of September and continues until the 20th of October. We are informed the coming Exposition will far exceed any of those of former years in variety, attraction and pleasure. The several departments will be especially well arranged and supplied with new and novel inventions.

LAST Thursday night, some person with a felonious intent entered the watermelon patch of Mr. R. B. Acra, and was making diligent search for ripe melons, when Mr. Acra's son John charged upon the forager, discharging his pistol at the intruder twice. The melon snatcher beat a hasty retreat, leaving behind a pair of good shoes and a coat, in which was found a memorandum book. John says if the owner of the abandoned property will come and get it, he will not reveal his name.

Personal Mention.

MR. JNO. E. UTZ, of Moore's Hill, Indiana, called upon us Monday.

MR. JOHN P. SCOTT is ill, Thos. Dempsey is able to be out, and Mr. Winston is much better.

MRS. GREAR, of Aurora, and Major B. M. Platt, of Covington, are guests of Dr. McKenzie.

REV. R. K. GRAVES and lady, of Newport, were visiting friends at this place last Friday and Saturday.

WE neglected to mention in the proper place that Miss Mary Light, of Covington, and Miss Fannie Rice favored the Institute with some very nice music.

WE are informed that the condition of Mr. Joseph C. Hughes, who has been considered dangerously ill for some months past, has considerably improved during the last few weeks.

County Court.

In the County Court, on the 8th inst., W. T. Smith resigned as administrator of Richard Minor, and F. Riddell was appointed in his stead, with Dudley Rouse on bond.

W. B. Underwood was released from the articles of apprenticeship binding to him Charles B. Rouse.

The report of the commissioners in the division of the lands of J. T. Riley was confirmed.

John Kirkpatrick was allowed $10 50 for material and work done in the County Clerk's office.

In the same court, August 15th, James A. Wilson was appointed administrator of Henry Goss.

Z. T. Kelley, J. H. Walton and M. S. Rice were appointed viewers, to view the ground over which an alteration in the Bellevue and Rabbit Hash road is proposed to be run.

Whit Ryle resigned as Constable in the Carlton district.

IN playing croquet in Burlington no one tells. It is not allowed.

SUNDAY was a dark day in Florence. All the negroes in the county assembled there to attend a bush meeting.

LAST week, as Mr. L. H. Dills was on his way to the city, and going down the Willow Run hill, the horse he was driving took fright when passing a load of hay, turned the buggy over, threw Mr. Dills out and ran off, reducing the buggy to a total wreck. Mr. Dills fortunately escaped with a few slight scratches.

THE ball given in the hall at the Morgan Academy on last Friday night was one of which those instrumental in getting it up may well be proud. The crowd in attendance was reasonably large, and the number of ladies, who looked so bewitchingly beautiful, make it the most brilliant affair known to this town. We will not attempt to mention the names of the ladies present, because our eyes were so dazed with the beauty in the ball-room as to render a correct mention of each an impossibility.

A COUPLE of "heart smashers," who were turned loose upon Burlington, Sunday evening, and who were not familiar with the streets, came nigh being classed under the head lost of, "strayed or stolen," Monday morning. Having delivered up their precious charge that evening, they, as they thought, commenced wending their way toward their buggies; but, after traveling some distance, it occurred to them they had missed their way. They finally got on the right track and came out at the right place.

"WHEN the Blossoms Cover Us, Darling," is the name of another of the popular Charlie Baker's new songs, which can be had from any music dealer in the United States, or from the publisher, F. W. Helmick, No. 50 W. Fourth st., Cincinnati, O., by sending 35 cents.

When the blossoms cover us, darling,
With their bloom of white and gold,
And our faces are hid from each other
In the churchyard, so white and so cold,
Of the many dear ones who will never
See our faces or greet us again,
Are there any kind hearts in that day, love,
Who will think of us, care for us then?

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

COVINGTON STOCK YARDS, August 20.

Cattle—Receipts light and prices a little better. Shippers' selling at 5@5¼; extra butchers', 4@4¼; good, 3¼@4; common, 2½@3; veal calves, 4½@5½.

Sheep—Supplies light with a moderate demand from shippers and farmers, the butchers not buying any. Shippers' selling at 4½@5; stockers, 3@4c. Lambs—Supply light, but there is enough lying about left over from last week and week before last to keep them down to last week's prices. Shippers' selling at 4½@4¾; butchers', 3@4c.

Hogs—Receipts were light the last of last week, and were all sold and the market left bare. A good lot of butchers' would have sold this morning at 5½.

W. M. CONNER.

Tribute of Respect.

At a regular meeting of East Bend Grange 591, Boone County, Ky., held on the second Saturday in August, 1877, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Divine Master to take from us our beloved brother and Past Master, Henry Goss, by death, which took place, after a lingering illness, on Thursday, July 26th, 1877,

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Goss our Grange has lost one of its best members, his family a kind and affectionate husband and father, and society a benevolent and faithful member.

Resolved, That while we humbly bow in submission to the overruling Providence, we are sustained by the thought that our loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That this Grange tender its sincere and fraternal sympathy to the friends of the deceased in their bereavement, and commend them to Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That the members of this Grange wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to forward a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased, and also a copy to the Grange Bulletin, Southern Agriculturist and BOONE COUNTY RECORDER for publication, and that they be entered upon the minutes of the Grange.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

The cool weather during the past week made our trade men feel better, and there was more than usual activity.

The stock market continues to look up, and there is a good deal of interest manifested by horse and mule dealers. There is a good demand for stock of all grades, and it is increasing every day, but the offerings are light. There were only about 65 head of horses sold at auction last week, bringing from $35 to $130. There was a good demand for mules, with but few on the market. There is a heavy demand for good medium shipping stock.

The cattle market opened last week with a big supply of inferior cattle, and with a decline of 25 to 50 cents per hundred from last quotations. Shippers' were firm all week at $5@5 75, all others having declined, with a dull market. Best butcher stuff, $3 25@4; fair to good, $2 75@3 25; common, $1 50@2 50. Hogs have been active all week at 4½@5c. Sheep in fair demand at 3½@4½c. for extra, and 2½@3c. for common. Stock ewes in demand at 3½@3¾c. Lambs not so active as sheep, but a fair demand at 3@4c. according to quality. The receipts for the week have been large: Cattle, 1,870; hogs, 3,438; sheep and lambs, 7,475; mules, 300.

The tobacco market was quite active all the week, and the prices remain steady and firm for all grades. The sales for the week were 1,500 hhds.

The grain market remains firm, except wheat, which has weakened a little. We quote red $1 12½, white and amber $1 17½, for choice on arrival. Rye firm at 56c.; there was a fair demand at 45c. for mixed and whits on the track, or 53@54c. delivered in sack. Oats: Demand fair and price steady for new at 26@28c. Barley steady at 90@70c., on arrival.

New hay, loose from the wagon, at 35@40c. per cwt.

Wool remains steady and unchanged in prices.

The poultry market remains steady; old chickens, $2 50 per dozen; young ones, $1@2 25.

There is a steady demand for choice country butter at 15@18c.; common, 10@14c. per pound.

Eggs advanced a little, and are in demand at 8@8½c.

Vegetables have been active. Irish potatoes at $1@1 25 per barrel. Sweet potatoes declined 75c.@$1 25 on the barrel. There were good offerings at $1 50 for red and $2 for yellow per barrel. Tomatoes steady at 25@30c. per bushel. Cabbage advanced 10 to 15 cents on the barrel. There is a fair demand at 50@75c. per barrel. Roasting ears firm at 40@50c. per barrel. Onions have declined to $1 50@2 per barrel.

The fruit market remains steady. Canteloupes bring from 60c. to $1 per barrel; watermelons from 5 to 12 cents, all round, by the load. Apples plentiful at 50c.@$1 25 per barrel. Peaches, $1 25@3 per bushel. Pears, $1 50@4 per barrel. Grapes: market full at 3@8c. per pound.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

BURLINGTON, KY., AUGUST 23.

SIR THOMAS CAT.

How doth the busy Thomas cat
Improve the midnight hour!
Ensconced upon the roof he yawps
With all his feline power.

And now another Thomas cat,
Encouraged by the sound,
Sends up a challenge to his foe,
To meet him on the ground.

And still another—and a fourth,
Convene to scratch and bite,
While fretted mortals toss and moan
Throughout the dismal night.

What boots it though a boot be thrown—
Aye, marry or the jack?
They scamper off, but, in an hour,
Come smiling, yawping back.

Mr. Shaffer's Sheep Raising.

Mr. Shaffer pre-empted 160 acres of land in this county in 1861, and established a sheep rancho. The war followed. He made no appreciable progress in his condition until 1865, when his fortune took a turn. At this time (1865) he owned 3,000 head of sheep, all improved. The original stock of 2,000 head he purchased from A. Toutant Beauregard, brother of the General. Four years after that, he purchased 1,500 ewes and bucks, costing him $50 a head. Mr. Shaffer's income for 1876 may be summed up as follows: Ewes sold, 2,575, at $6,716; bucks and wethers sold, $3,859; wool sold, 82,000 pounds, $16,000; income for 1876, $27,575.

To maintain his establishment and attend to the sheep requires an outlay of nearly $700 per month. From twenty-five to thirty men are constantly employed. The flocks of sheep are divided into 1,200 to each flock, under the care of a pastore, and over every three pastores is a bacerio, or overseer, having that particular three under his especial care. Over all the bacerios is a head man. Two large mule teams are constantly hauling supplies, and in the storehouse of the rancho is a stock sufficient to start an ordinary country store. Of ewes, bucks and lambs he has now 16,000 head, less about 250, valued at about $75,000.

A few years ago, foreseeing that a large tract of land would soon be necessary to maintain his rapidly growing flocks and afford never-failing pasturage, when prices were comparatively low he commenced the purchase of what has since swelled into a princely domain, watered by six or seven different streams, chief among which are the Agua Dulce, San Fernando and Lagarto. This tract now contains 60,000 acres of land. With the fence completed which he has now under way, these acres will not be worth less than 82 each. The tract measures fifteen miles in length and from ten to twelve wide, and is covered by a plentiful supply of timber. Forty miles of fencing will be required to inclose it. Mr. Shaffer's dwelling is situated nearly in the middle, and in addition to a very comfortable dwelling, he has a stone warehouse for the storage of wool, a large stable and a dozen or more outbuildings for servants.

Three or four immense cisterns supply water for the house, and near the sheep pens is a large windmill and tank, drawing a supply from a well eighty-one feet deep, cut through solid rock, and in which the water is thirty-five feet deep.—Nuecces Times.

Change of Food.

It is a well known fact that human beings can not long retain their health and accustomed vigor, if fed on the same kind of food, no matter how excellent it may be. Wheat is the best food known, as it contains all the elements necessary to form any of the tissues in the human body. Still, it must be cooked in various ways in order to be relished any great length of time. Even when this is done, persons tire of it after a short time, unless it is seasoned with condiments of some sort. As a rule, persons will prefer a change to some cheaper article of food, rather than to eat continually that prepared from wheat. On most tables there is not only a variety of food, but nearly every article is flavored with spice or other condiments. There are also other things, like pickles, jellies and sauces, that are alone used as appetizers. Various sorts of drinks are also formed for the same purpose. In short, cookery requires a constant study for various appetites of men. Now, domestic animals do not differ essentially from human beings in the matter of requiring a change of food. When free to seek the things they want to eat, they will select as great a variety as human beings do. As the epicure will sometimes leave green turtle for a red herring, so the cow will run from a blue-grass pasture to get a bit of old hay. Sheep that are in the best of pastures will leave the richest grasses to feed on weeds and brushes. Hogs are veay fond of a change of food, and if nothing but corn is offered them, will devour earth or gnaw the wood of the pens in which they are confined. Farmers who limit their stock to what they consider the best sorts of food commit a very grave error. No sort of food is the best, if its use is continued a great length of time. Cows will tire of hay as men tire of bread made from wheat flour. —Chicago Times.

A DANBURY man describes a church festival for raising money as an operation wherein one-half the church buys berries at fifteen cent a quart and sells them to the other half for a dollar.

Commerce of the World.

France exports wine, brandies, silks, fancy articles, furniture, jewelry, clocks, watches, paper, perfumery and fancy goods generally.

The Death of a Pope.

As soon as the Pope dies, the Cardinal Chamberlain, or Chamerlinge, calls out three times in the presence of several members of the council, addressing him by his proper name, "Art thou dead?" Then answering for the deceased, he exclaims, "He is dead!" and taking the fisherman's ring, as the seal of the Pope is called, breaks it. The bell of the capital is tolled, and the news is dispatched to foreign governments and absent cardinals, which later are invited to the conclave for a new election. While the vacancy continues, the Chamerlinge exercises the supreme authority. The cardinals who have been created by the defunct Pontiff, put on mourning serge robes of a violet color, while such as were created by his predecessors wear green faced with red. The dead body is washed and embalmed, and taken to the Pauline Chapel of the Vatican, where it is arrayed in pontifical habits, after which it is taken to St. Peter's Cathedral, and placed in the Sistine Chapel on a splendid bed of state, surrounded by burning tapers day and night, who pray for the departed. The people meanwhile crowd to kiss his feet. On the ninth day after his death the body is put into a coffin with coronation medals in gold, silver and brass to show that death equals all things. After the funeral ceremonies, the coffin is removed to a church which is said to have been founded by Constantine the Great, and left there until it is deposited in the tomb prepared for it. After the dry funeral rites, all the cardinals who can possibly be present in Rome meet together to go into conclave. Before entering they visit St. Peter's, where the mass of the Holy Spirit is sung and an oration delivered on the election of a Pontiff. Then they return to the Vatican, where the hymn "Veni Creator," is sung, and certain prayers rehearsed and the order for election voted.

Kentucky Editors.

With scarcely an exception, the secular newspapers of Kentucky are under the control of young men. This fact was notably conspicuous in the meeting of the Press Association at Frankfort, June 13th, when a larger number of Kentucky journalists assembled together than met at any one time before. A decided majority of the editors are not over thirty-five, while many of them are aged between twenty-two and thirty. A more promising body of men never convened in the State. There was not a single editor present who did not bear the reputation of possessing a high moral character. There was not a drunkard nor an immodcrate drinker connected with the Association. It can be truly said that the newspapers of no other State in the Union are under the direction of men whose habits of life are more steady or exemplary—a fact that guarantees to the Commonwealth a press, the influence of which can always be relied upon to promote such measures as may be required to elevate the community, and keep our social and political elements free from corruption and vice.—Daily News.

The Man of Business and the Business Man.

The man of business and the business man both have business to do; but the business man is the one who deserves it. The business man thinks, moves, sets and makes himself felt in the world. If a thought comes into his head, it is one of breadth and compass, it does not center on self and its narrow world. It reaches away and embraces others. It has a wide range, and does not stop till it touches and affects for good the interests of all.

Nor are the thoughts of such men immobile. They become acting, living realities in the wide and busy world. The authors of them make of these business thoughts actualities, give them "local habitation and a name," and steamboats are built and ocean is navigated, and distant climes are brought together; an electric telegraph springs into being as by enchantment, and lightning becomes garrulous and voluble, thought out-travels the winged winds; and in a twinkling the bands and shackles of trade are loos-

Such are the workings produced by the business man. He awakens the drowsy and helpless multitudes, puts life and thought, energy and action into them, and makes the world leap joyously along the path of ages. Where its step before was but a single year, now it strides by scores and fifties.

ened.

"Men of thought, men of action,
Clear the way."

And they do clear the way—their thoughts become tangible, moving, demolishing forces, that break down and crush all opposing barriers, opening a pathway of progress, into which the more sluggish and timid portion of humanity may securely travel.

But the man of business is what the name indicates. His business is always on his hands. He does not do it. He does not know how to go to work in the right way. His thoughts are all measured and slow. He weighs self-made doubts and supposed contingencies, and before he moves, the business man gets up and runs away from him, and wins the race.

The man of business won't go ahead, he only eddies around and around—he does not progress—his path is a circle. He does not find himself at night many miles on his journey's way, but like the hour hand of a clock, just where he started. He is not clear and decided in what he does, but often stands hesitating and puzzled. He ventures and falls back; has a stout heart in fancy, but none in fact.

Girls, Confide in Mother.

The moment a girl has a secret from her mother, or has received a letter she dare not let her mother read, or has a friend of whom her mother does not know, she is in danger. A secret is not a good thing for a girl to have. The fewer secrets that lie in the hearts of women at any age, the better. It is almost a test of purity. She who has none of her own is best and happiest.

In girlhood, hide nothing from your mother; do nothing that, if discovered by your father, would make you blush. When you are married, never, never, never conceal anything from your husband. Never allow yourself to write a letter that he may not know all about, or to receive one that you are not willing that he should read. Have no mysteries whatever. Tell those who are about you where you go and what you do. Those who have the right to know, I mean, of course.

A little secretiveness has set many a scandal afloat; and, much as is said about women who tell too much, they are much better off than the women who tell too little. A man may be reticent and lie under no suspicion; not so a woman.

The girl who frankly says to her mother, "I have been here; I met so and so; such and such remarks were made, and this or that was done," will be certain of receiving good advice and sympathy. If all was right, no fault will be found. If the mother knows, out of her greater experience, that something was improper or unsuitable, she will, if she is a good mother, kindly advise against its repetition.

It is when mothers discover that their girls are hiding things from them that they rebuke and scold. Innocent faults are always pardoned by a kind parent.

You may not know, girls, just what is right, just what is wrong yet. You can not be blamed for making little mistakes, but you will never do anything very wrong if from the first you have no secrets from your mother.

The Family.

The family is the educator of the race. Here men and women are made. What they are in the world, that they were in the family as children. The family is the place where the first lessons of law are received, and where the whole character, in view of law, has a direction given to it. The citizen is made in the family, long before the time for voting or activity has come. When Napoleon said, in answer to Madame de Stael's question about France's greatest need, "Mothers!" he asserted the all potent influence of a true life. The family is the greatest means for the development of character. What a world does it present for affections to abide in! Where on all earth besides are sympathis so warm, love so pure and fervent as here? All that gives value or beauty to the human character finds in the family at once an atmosphere in which to expand and develop the elements which shall bring it to the highest perfection.

What a Damsel!

She was young and fair, and a tear glistened in her eye as she laid her curly head upon his shoulder and exclaimed, "Oh, Gawge, I think if I found you did not love me I should die." "My darling," he answered, passing his hand gently round her dimpled chin, "I will always love you. Do you think I would marry you if I did not feel sure of it. In a few days at the altar I shall vow to love you all my life, and I will keep my vow." A lovely kind of beatific happiness played for a moment like sunshine on her lips, and then she whispered, "Oh, Gawge, I like to hear you talk like that; you have been so good to me. You have given me a diamond locket, and a gold watch and chain, and rings that an angel might wear outside her gloves and not be ashamed, and if I thought that one day you'd be sorry you'd given me all these nice things and want them back again, I should break my heart." He held her gently against his manly breast and answered with a quivering voice: "Oh, my own darling, there is nothing on earth that could happen that would make me repent giving you a few tokens of my love, or make me want them back again." She sprung from his arms like a joyous deer; she shook back her sunny curls, and, with a whole poem in her hazel eyes, she exclaimed: "Oh, Gawge, you have taken such a load from my heart. I've come to say I can't marry you after all, because I've seen somebody I like better, and I thought you'd want your presents back again."

BOSTON Transcript: Irascible Old Party—"Conductor, why didn't you wake me up, as I asked you? Here I am, miles beyond my station." Conductor—"I did try but all I could get out of you was, 'All right, Maria, get the children their breakfast, and I'll be down in a minute.'"

GETTING TO THE POINT.

[First Attempt.]
"Miss Belle, I've bought the nicest little cottage—
The snuggest nook, just big enough for two;
But, ere I fit it up, I'd like to ask you
If you—if you—
I mean, if you would paper pink or blue?"

[Second Attempt.]
"I really think I'm getting rather ancient—
Was twenty-eight upon the first of May—
So I've resolved, that is, if you will help me,
To find—to find—
Something to keep my hair from turning gray."

[Third Attempt.]
"What would you say if I—if I should tell you
That there is no one half so dear to me
In all the wide, wide world, or e'en in heaven,
As is—as is—
In these hot days, as is first-class iced tea?"

[Last Attempt.]
"About this oak and vine affair, I'm thinking
I'd really like the vine—no, oak to act,
Provided some sweet girl, or you, for instance,
Would act—would act—"
(She) "The vine?"
(Her Parent) "The what?"
(She) "I'd try."
(He) "In fact?"
(She) "In fact."

Simon Girty—Burned by an Infuriated Mob.

A little piece of history connected with the early settlement of Western Virginia has recently come to light, which is important if true, and seems to be pretty well authenticated. There is scarcely a man, woman or child in West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio who is not familiar with the name of Simon Girty, a notorious white renegade, who, as the leader of roving bands of Indians, committed many depredations upon the frontier settlements a hundred years ago. I have recently seen a letter from Rev. Samuel Brown, a Presbyterian clergyman of Rockbridge County, Virginia, who is not a very old man, in which he gives a history of the death of Girty, which he believes to be perfectly reliable. He says that years after the Indian troubles on the frontier had ceased, there was a gathering of men in the little Levels of Pocahontas County at what was popularly known as a "log rolling" at that day. When a man had a piece of ground to clear, all of his neighbors would come in on a given day and assist to roll the logs together into heaps and burn them. As was customary, plenty of whisky was on hand and a general frolic indulged in, winding up with a dance at night. At the log rolling spoken of above, an old man, and a stranger, appeared upon the scene. After indulging in several drinks of whisky, he became very communicative, and from some things he said, the pioneers very strongly suspected that he was Simon Girty; and one of the party was the son of Mrs. Currence, Tygart's Valley, who had suffered at the hands of Girty in years agone. The young man, although a boy at the time of Girty's raid to his mother's home, avowed that he remembered the features of the renegade, and was satisfied that the stranger then in their midst was the veritable Simon. So he was arrested, and, being arraigned before an extemporized backwoods court, confessed his identity and plead guilty to the charge of being Simon Girty. Whereupon summary judgment was visited upon the renegade by the pioneers, who threw him into the burning heap, where he was consumed. Mr. Brown stated that in his early missionary life among these mountains he learned the story of Girty's death from responsible persons, who professed to be cognizant of the fact, but who kept the matter hushed up for fear that proceedings would be instituted against them in the courts for their unwarrantable execution of the bad man. This revelation is important in determining the fate of a man notorious in border history, as well as a case of cremation taking precedence of Henry Laurens and De Palm.—Correspondence Wheeling (W. Va.) Register.

What He Was Doing.

An exchange says not long since a young merchant who lives up town told his wife that he was compelled, from considerations of expediency, to take a customer from the country to the theater. When his elderly wife made comments on the elaborate nature of his toilet for a rural person of the male sex, he replied:

"Oh, you see everything depends upon impressing that sort of people favorably."

At this moment the merchant's office boy made his appearance.

"Well," said the deceiving husband, "did you see the gentleman I sent you to?"

"Yes, sir," replied the messenger.

"And you told him I had tickets for the theater?"

"Yes, sir; and he said he was much obliged to you, and he would be happy to go with you, and he would wait for you."

"What was he doing?" said the unsuspecting wife.

"He was just fastening the strings of his pull-back," answered the youth.

He found himself a moment afterward on the curbstone, where he listened with a sweet smile to the shrill sounds of a woman's tongue.

A Lion Story.

Some time ago, in Tunis, a Sicilian athlete of Rinaldo's circus excited general admiration by his manly beauty and feats of strength. He was in the habit of overcoming a lion during the performance, which, however, was trained to succumb. The Bey of Tunis, hearing of this, sent him an offer of a thousand ducats if he would kill a lion which he possessed. The proposal was accepted, and on the day appointed the Bey and a large company gathered around the pit where the lion was kept. The beast had been there three days without food, and was furious. The iron door of the pit opened, but, instead of the athlete, a trembling dog was thrown forward, which timidly took refuge in a corner. The lion, who was at a distance, turned in surprise at the humble intruder. His tail ceased to lash his sides, his roars ceased, and he sat, with paws extended, contemplating his victim. Propelling himself forward upon his belly, he finally made a spring. The dog, however, who had watched him with a vigilant eye, sprang in the opposite direction. The lion seemed astonished at missing his prey, but, after rolling over a few times, made another jump, which was also avoided. Pity for the dog induced the Bey to order a cord to be lowered for him, and while the lion was gyrating preparatory to a renewed spring, the dog intelligently seized the cord with his teeth and was drawn up. As he ascended, the lion sprang again, but was too late. At this moment the Sicilian appeared, calm and fearless. He was in a rich circus costume, and carried a heavy mace. He took his position in the same corner previously occupied by the dog.

At first the lion did not perceive him, but, on turning, his eye expressed a vague inquietude. He slowly withdrew a few steps, watching his enemy with a furtive and sidelong glance. The Sicilian, on the contrary, looked straight in his eye and watched every movement. The lion evidently had misgivings, but, impelled by hunger, sprang upon the man with a terrible roar. The Sicilian slipped aside with agility, and, before the paws of the lion touched the ground, a violent blow from the mace upon the head laid him insensible. The mace was raised for the death blow when the Bey interposed. He offered the man another thousand for the life of the beast. It was accepted, and the lion was allowed to recover.

Calling up the Boy.

Calling a boy up in the morning can hardly be classed under the head of "pastimes," especially if the boy is fond of exercise the day before. And it is a little singular that the next hardest thing to getting a boy out of bed is getting him into it. There is rarely a mother who is a success at rousing a boy. All mothers know this is so; so do their boys; and yet the mother seems to go at it in the right way. She opens the stair door and insinuatingly observes, "Johnny." There is no response. "Johnny." Still no response. Then there is a short, sharp "John," followed a moment later by a prolonged and emphatic "John Henry." A grunt from the upper regions signifies that an impression has been made, and the mother is encouraged to add: "You'd better be getting down here to your breakfast, young man, before I come up there and give you something you'll feel." This so startles the young man that he immediately goes to sleep again; and the operation has to be repeated several times. A father knows nothing about this trouble. He merely opens his mouth as a soda bottle ejects its cork, and the "John Henry" that cleaves the stairway goes into the boy like electricity, and pierces the deepest recesses of his very nature. And he pops out of that bed and into his clothes, and down the stairs with a promptness that is commendable. It is rarely a boy allows himself to disregard the paternal summons. About once a year is believed to be as often as is consistent with the rules of health. He saves his father a great many steps by his thoughtfulness.—Danbury News.

THE English Court of Divorce grants a divorce to a man on the ground of his wife's adultery, but does not grant a divorce to a woman on the score of her husband's adultery, unless coupled with cruelty or desertion; but proof of the husband's adultery will procure the wife a decree of judicial separation from him. The court, however, comprehends, under the term "cruelty" the wounding the feelings of a wife. In framing this law, the Legislature, no doubt, had in view the same sentiments which Dr. Johnson enunciated when he said: "Confusion of progeny constitutes the essence of the crime; and, therefore, a woman who breaks her marriage vow is much more criminal than a man who does it. A man, to be sure, is criminal in the eye of God, but he does not do his wife a very material injury if he does not insult her. A wife should study to reclaim her husband by more attention to please him. Sir, a man will not, once in a hundred instances, leave his wife for another, if his wife has not been negligent of pleasing."

How to Write an Agreeable Style.

Dryden found himself, one day after a dinner party, in company with the Duke of Buckingham, Lord Rochester and Lord Dorset. The conversation turned upon the English language, on harmony of numbers and the elegance of style, which merits each of the three lords believed himself to possess in the highest degree. After a good deal of disputing, it was determined to refer the matter to Dryden. The proof was to consist in each writing an article on the first subject that presented itself, and the pieces of paper having been placed under the candlestick, Dryden was to draw them out and determine which was the best. The three lords set to work, and while Rochester and Buckingham were exerting their brains to invent some sparkling epigram or happy turn of thought, Dorset was observed to write a few lines carelessly, and without the least hesitation.

Dryden, having examined the papers, gave his judgment. "Gentlemen," said he to the Duke of Buckingham and Lord Rochester, "your style is excellent, and has pleased me extremely; but I am perfectly delighted with that of Lord Dorset. I leave you to judge. Listen."

Dryden read:

On the first day of next May I will pay to John Dryden, or order, the sum of five hundred pounds sterling, value received.
[Signed] DORSET.
April 15, 1686.

Lord Rochester and the Duke of Buckingham confessed that they could not write like that, and that Lord Dorset's style was the best they had ever heard of.

What Ailed Him.

One of our dry goods clerks called around to see his girl the other evening. She observed that he appeared very restless, and as he had been paying her pretty sharp attention, she sniffed a proposal. She determined to help the young man.

"George, dear," she said, in a sweet voice, "what's the matter with you this evening."

"There ain't anything the matter," remarked George, twisting uneasily in his chair.

"I think there is," she said with great interest.

"Oh, no, there ain't," returned George; "what makes you think so?"

"You appear so restless," she exclaimed; "you act as if there was something on your mind."

"It ain't on my mind," observed George; "it's——" and then he suddenly caught himself and stopped.

"What is it—where is it, dear!" entreated the young Miss; "won't you tell your darling?"

"It's on my back?" blurted George with an effort.

"On your back?" repeated the young Miss in astonishment.

"Yes," said George, desperately; "it's a porous plaster, and it itches so I can't keep still."

The young lady fainted.

Contracting and Expanding.

John Henry was with Julia the other evening, when she observed:

"John, dear, what is all this talk about contracting and expanding the currency, and which do you believe in?"

"Well, my sweet," said John, pulling up his collar, "that depends upon circumstances. In some cases I should advocate contraction of the currency, and in others an expansion of it. It is according to the circumstances—that is, the condition of things."

"But what is the difference between the two, and how do circumstances affect them? That's what I want to know, John."

"Oh, that's easily explained," said John, in a tone of great cheerfulness. "For instance, when we are alone, we both sit on one chair, don't we?"

"Yes."

"Well, that's contraction. But when we hear your pa and ma coming, we get on two chairs, don't we?"

"I should say we did."

"Well my love that's expansion. So you see it's according to circumstances."

"John," said she very softly, burrowing under his ear, "we are contracting now, ain't we?"

"You bet," said John, with increased cheerfulness.—Danbury News.

Assorted Kisses.

A humorous friend of ours used to be particularly enthusiastic on the classic subject of osculation. He declared there were few "sciences" so difficult of acquisition. "People," said he, "will kiss; yet not one in a hundred knows how to extract bliss from lovely lips any more than he knows how to make diamonds from charcoal." He used to relate his experiences of a good-night kiss imprinted on the lips of his inamorata after having escorted her to and from a New England forfeit party, where the poor girl, being the belle of the evening, had been kissed and, as he expressed himself, "slobbered over by all and sundry." He declared that in that one chaste salute he could discriminate "nine distinct and separate flavors," namely: onions, tobacco, peppermint, gin, lager beer, brandy, checkerberry, musk and camphor.—F. H. Brown, in Appleton.

"POOR boy!" said a lady, as she took out her purse to give the little beggar some change. "Yes, I am a poor boy," said the young rascal, squeezing a tear out of his eye, "and have four sick mothers to support." The lady put back her purse, shook her head, and walked sadly away.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

W. L. RIDDELL,
Editor and Proprietor.

BURLINGTON, KY., AUGUST 30.

We will, next week, furnish our readers with a list of the awards made during the Fair.

The fall and winter term of the Kentucky Court of Appeals commences Monday the 10th prox.

Old John Robinson's show is taking in the surplus specie in the eastern part of the State. How lonely.

The Republican leaders can not become entirely reconciled to President Hayes' course regarding the South.

The dog ordinance has been enforced in the city of New York, and as a result the city has received $25,538 revenue.

A French man-of-war passed Aden on the 20th, with fifty of the crew dead and one hundred and thirty sick of cholera.

Senator O. P. Morton, of Indiana, has been for several days in a critical condition. His friends fear he will not recover.

The Louisville Commercial says the next State Senate will be composed of thirty-five Democrats and one Republican.

Panola County, in Mississippi, is in a good condition. It has only $38,000 cash in its Treasury and does not owe one cent.

Stanley Matthews and General Garfield have elevated their fog-horns in Ohio. The campaign may be said to be fairly opened in that State.

The Russians have lost their grip on success in the war with Turkey. A dispatch from London, dated August 25th, says the Turks after a severe engagement at Papaskin, succeeded in turning the Russians' left wing and repulsing them.

The Vicksburg Herald is getting uneasy about labor in that State. It says in a few weeks there will be more labor needed than can be procured. A vast crop of cotton and grain is to be gathered, and the former crop requires a large amount of labor during the winter.

Hon. David Davis, United States Senator from Illinois, is suffering from cancer of the stomach. His condition is very critical and his friends fear he will not be able to take his seat when Congress meets in October.

Gen. Howard, on the 25th, was reported directly on the hostile trail and within one day's march in the rear. The Indians were reported badly demoralized, there not being over 200 fighting men of them. These are about the reports that have been coming for some time, but the Indian war is no nearer a close than it was months since.

Judge Fisher, of Carroll, said in announcing his decision in the examining trial of Joe Myrick and others charged with the murder of Carrie Anderson, that he never could believe that Myrick and the rest of them went to Anderson's with the intention of committing murder.

The Carrollton Democrat, of last Saturday says: "Carrollton has once more assumed a peaceful look, after a week of military occupation and the reign of martial law. The camp at the court-house and the picket posts on High and Court streets have been abandoned and all is quiet along the Ohio."

The notorious John Wesley Hardin, who is said to have committed twenty-seven murders, and, for whose body the Legislature of Texas had offered four thousand dollars reward, was arrested on a train of cars in Georgia on the 24th inst. About twenty shots were fired in making the arrest, and one man was killed. Hardin's last murder in Texas was the killing of the Sheriff of Comanche County.

The colored Republicans, of New Jersey, held a Convention in Princeton on the 22d inst., and after some speechifying they passed a set of resolutions in which they reaffirmed their faith in the principles of the National Republican party, indorsed the recent movement to inaugurate the elevation of labor, indorsed the civil service reform as approved by the Administration, but declared the conciliatory policy of the President an abandonment of the Republican party by which he was elected to the Presidency, and recommended its being condemned.

The Louisville Commercial, in speaking of the arrival of Joseph Myrick, the Sheriff of Carroll County; Chas. Gardner, the Deputy Sheriff; James Sullenger, a Deputy Sheriff of the County; Edward Thompson and Julius Pettit at the Louisville jail, charged with the murder of Carrie Anderson, says:

A number of the relatives of the parties followed them to the city, and those of Julius Pettit appeared anxious that something should be done. He sent for Major Kinney, who was employed in the prosecution of the case, who, with Detective Cave, who had worked with dilligence to ferret out the accessories and bring them to justice, at once proceeded to the jail. He stated to them that he desired to make a statement in regard to the killing of Miss Anderson, when Major Kinney said to him, "if you want to make any statement, you must do so voluntarily. I have no right to make you any promises of discharge, but, this I will say to you, that what you may say to me shall not be used in evidence against you."

Pettit then made a full confession of the tragedy, his statement being a full corroboration of that of Nathan Orr, who turned State's evidence during the first part of the examination, with the additional fact that he gave the names of witnesses who would corroborate every fact set forth in the confession. His statement throws the following light upon the case: Saturday morning before the killing, he and Myrick met at a point between Liberty and Worthville, when it was agreed that they, with others, should proceed to Anderson's and frighten them from the place. Another thing in his confession which clears up a point not before mentioned, is what became of the gun of Myrick, who was seen before daylight on the day of the killing on the road without a gun. He says that Gardner met the parties at the road crossing and there took the gun of Myrick, but what was done with it is not known. Gardner and Pettit took their guns to Pettit's where they were concealed. In this confession is contained the names of parties by whom all the statements in regard to the conspiracy, the movements of the parties, and the raid upon the Anderson house, as well as the flight from there, can be substantiated. The parties having the confession in their possession refuse to give the full details yet. They state that the information furnished them not only fully corroborates the statement of Orr, but through it they will be able to produce such corroborating proof as will place the conviction of the murderers beyond a doubt. The detectives now hold the whole chain of evidence in their own hands, and, thanks to the earnest vigilance exercised in this case by the officers having it in charge, our State will efface the foul blot which these assassins have put upon her if the punishment of the perpetrators can avail for that purpose.

The confession of Pettit, one of the parties committed to answer the charge of murder, has created considerable excitement among the other prisoners and their friends. The parties named by him as witnesses will be summoned to appear before the grand jury of the Circuit Court.

The prisoners were brought here by W. B. Wilson, who has been appointed Sheriff of the county in place of Myrick. The excitement in Carroll County is intense, and the feeling against the prisoners great. Myrick, in conversation with the parties, refused to say anything in regard to the killing. In answer to a question he said he did not blame Detective Cave, of this city, but that he thought hard of Marshal Hawkins, of Carrollton.

The murder for which Myrick & Co. stand committed was so atrocious that the good people of Carroll were scarcely able to control their wrath, and the excitement that has pervaded that county since the accused were arrested has been intense. All classes of laborers gave up their toils and attended the examining trial, which was conducted under guard, as it were. The good name of the State demands that the perpetrators should be severely dealt with, and the law of the land vindicated.

Hon. J. H. Williams, in his letter accepting the Democratic nomination for Governor of Maine, says, in regard to the platform upon which he was nominated: "Considering the second resolution, I nowhere find in it any impeachment of the President's title to the high office which he now occupies, and I have no difficulty in according to it my full concurrence. That title, though stoutly contested, was recognized and became valid by the decision of a tribunal which acted under the authority of a law to which all parties and all States through their Senators and Representatives in Congress had given their deliberate assent. The fraud charged by that resolution referred, as I understand from the language used, to the transactions which took place in the discharge of the functions of the Returning Boards of Louisiana and other States, illegal and fraudulent acts within the competency of these States, respectively, to deal with, but which, in view of the Electoral Commission, might have occurred as alleged, and yet be beyond the range of their jurisdiction to judicially determine. The third resolution confirms my understanding of the scope and interest of the second, as above expressed, containing, as it does, a recognition of the wisdom of the President's Southern policy, which, in turn, is an admission on his part of the soundness of the doctrine of the Democratic party upon that subject. The entire series of resolutions, therefore, has my unqualified approval."

The President has introduced civil service reform in the carriage line, and drives a three hundred dollar pair of horses. His predecessor drove a three thousand dollar team.

The drought in some portions of California has been so disastrous that thousands of sheep have been sold at five cents per head, and yet thousands have perished. Ranchmen have been compelled to guard their scant pastures with loaded guns to keep off strange cattle.

KANSAS LETTER.

Clay Center, Kansas, Aug. 20th, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

We are well aware, Mr. Editor, that you have been pining, lo! these many weeks, for a few lines from our unschooled pen, and we hasten to relieve the suspense that, doubtless, vexes your righteous soul with anguish at the thought of dire possibility, that may have befallen your humb. scrib., in this land of drought and flood, of grasshoppers and horse-thieves, (we have a few of both these latter, but are killing them off pretty fast). Behold, here are we and in remarkable health.

Our District Court opened to-day, Hon. A. S. Wilson on the bench. Shall we give you a peep at the opening exercises? After the usual preliminaries, the first case called bears the same name on each wing—a divorce case, of course. The plaintiff takes the witness stand with a look of confidence in the merits of her case that is really affecting. She is an interesting looking party, to say the least; young, not more than twenty-two; handsome, yes, almost beautiful as, with wavering voice, and eyes suffused, she answered the short pointed queries put by her attorney and the court. She testified that her liege lord is an habitual drunkard, being intoxicated nearly half the time; that he has failed to make proper provisions for her natural necessities, and that upon one occasion kicked her. You should have seen the fierce glitter of indignation that flashed from the stern eyes that beheld her as these words passed her unsteady lips. There was no defense and the decree was soon rendered—divorce from her faithless spouse and her maiden name restored. She passed from the court-room with a look of peace and rest that must have rewarded the stern Judge who pronounced the decree. Next case: Mehlman vs. Mehlman. Whoop! la! another divorce case, another injured lady takes the stand. She is not so prepossessing as the former one, but she tells her tale of woe, is corroborated by other witnesses, and, as in the first case, there being no defense, the court takes but little time to consider, and another pair whom "God had joined together," are "put asunder." Next case: Sn-t-n vs. Sn-t-n; divorce again, upon my soul! This case is more intricate than the others, the defendant putting in "cross-bill," and fighting, not the divorce, no, he is as anxious for that as she is, but the prayer for alimony, that is what hurts, and on that they will fight it out, some time during the week. Such is the first day of a Kansas District (Circuit) Court. There are two other divorce cases on the docket, but they will probably not come to trial till the November term. Yours truly,

A branch of the S. P. G. A. is very much needed here. Last Monday, two men from the city, driving the blind horse formerly the property of W. A. Carpenter, came into town and alighted to slake their thirst, and while at this their horse fell and in about thirty minutes died from sheer exhaustion. Sixty days on bread and water, and $100 fine would learn such brutes that horses have some rights a driver ought to respect.

The horse driven by J. M. Finch and John Bradford to O. W. Huey's sale broke through a bridge on their return trip. The horse's leg was nearly broken, and the drivers think, as the good luck says, if those who do not mend their way will surely be d—d, that the road overseers in that section ought to be feeling a little warm.

The prospects are the attendance at the Fair will be large. Mr. Tucker, the indefatigable Secretary, was up in the Blue Grass regions last week and saw quite a number of owners, who told him they would be on hand with stock. We understand that Mr. Shropshire, of Scott County, has already arrived with his cattle, and among them is a heifer two years old weighing 1,700 pounds.

The Trotting Association is making an effort to get up a trot in October.

The schutzenfest came off last Saturday at Mr. Jno. W. Carpenter's. One of the pilots and the barkeeper on the Boomerang met on their return from Salt River, stepped in and took a hand, and, as will be seen, the barkeeper carried off the honors:

J. F. Blythe	16
Jerry Cartenter	11
J. W. Carpenter	13
R. H. Ingram	7
J. M. Finch	13
Albert Price	11

They also had pigeon shooting. Out of 6 shots J. F. Blythe killed 2, J. W. Carpenter, 1; Jno. M. Finch, 1; R. H. Ingram, 1. After the shooting, the Captain, in a neat speech on behalf of the club, presented J. F. Blythe the premium cup, which was made of tin, and cost 10 cents, and holds one quart. Jerry received it with pleasure, and promised to present it to his son on his 21st birthday. The cup is to be kept in the family by future generations as a souvenir of the great match.

Your Waterloo correspondent wants to know why I have adopted his nom de plume, of "Uno." I hate to tell, but the reason is, I have for several years been trying to get someone to take my name, and, not having succeeded, I did what I thought the next best thing—took someone else's. "Uno" how it is yourself at Waterloo. Uno.

Petersburg.

On Tuesday of last week the Medical Society of Boone County, Kentucky, and Dearborn County, Indiana, met in the hall in this town. The attendance was larger than usual, the day was lovely, and business before the Society lively. One important surgical operation was performed—a 22-pound watermelon was dissected, in which operation the more juvenile members of the Society showed a proficiency of skill in the use of the knife vastly superior to the older heads. Among the prominent gentlemen from a distance was Dr. W. H. Blanton; also, Dr. George Voshell, from the plains of Woolper.

Some time since a man, who is manifestly a zealous Methodist, visited this place and was kindly cared for and entertained during his visit by a certain family who still live here. As an instance of his gratitude for past favors, and of his anxiety for the spiritual welfare of the head of this family, who is not a member of any church (his wife is), he has written a letter quite recently, of which we publish a copy by permission. Of course, the names of the parties are fictitious. The following is an exact copy of the letter, penmanship only excepted:

THE Ashland Review says it has been discovered in the investigation of the records of our State that not a single man or woman in this Commonwealth is, or was, under the present laws, legally married. Now, be this the case, what a splendid opportunity the ladies have for getting out of bad bargains.

WE have on our table a "juvenile" muskmelon, raised in the Bellevue bottoms by Newton Botts. This melon is known to Mr. Botts as the California Muskmelon, and is about twenty inches long, resembling in appearance a huge cucumber. The texture of the meat appears to be finer than that of the common cantaloupe or muskmelon, and, when laid before a person, looks, and is, "trounendjusly toothsome." It ain't there now.

WE are in receipt of a circular from Jas. K. Wandelohr, editor of the Falmouth Independent, announcing that his name will, at the next session of the Legislature, be presented for the position of Assistant Clerk of the Lower House. Wandelohr is about the fourth editor who aspires to that position.

THE click of the stone breaker's hammer on the Bellevue pike is heard in front of our door. THE closest race of which we have any knowledge was one between a dog and a tin pan, one night last week. IT is reported that Dave Carter, of the Shuck gang, has made a confession, in which he implicates all the men mentioned by Shuck, besides giving a sufficient "blow" on the father of the James boy to warrant his arrest. THE Association held last week with the Baptists of the old Dry Creek Church was well attended during the three days. The largest attendance was on Friday, the last day. Several ministers from a distance were present during the meeting, and furnished the congregation with food for the soul in way of able and interesting sermons.

WE desire to express our acknowledgements to the following organizations for favors: To the Southeastern Indiana Agricultural Association for a complimentary ticket to the fair which commences on the grounds at Aurora on the 4th of September, and continues four days. Also, to the President and Board of Directors of the International Exposition Company for an invitation to attend the reception ceremonies of the Governors of the United States, August 20th, in Exhibition Building, Philadelphia.

MRS. JANE KELLY, a widow lady who resides about five miles south of this place, is the mother of eight sons. They are all living, and stand six feet or over in their shoes. These men are highly moral. None of them use tobacco in any shape, or indulge in the use of profane language or intoxicating drinks. They are all Grangers, and in religion believe in the universal salvation of the human family. We venture the assertion there is not another family in the Commonwealth as large, having the same attributes.

WHEN the moon rose last Thursday evening, there were many eager eyes turned toward her, all desirous of observing her as she emerged from the shadow of the world, and once more presented her refulgent face to her admirers. The donting clouds, which ever and anon swept slowly across that portion of the moon which was visible, were very annoying, but nevertheless a tolerably fair view of the latter part of the eclipse was obtained. When first observed peeping over the heavy bank of clouds that lined the eastern horizon, the moon had emerged about one-third from the earth's shadow, or was still about two-thirds eclipsed. From this point up to nearly the close of the eclipse there was no obstruction of consequence, and the spectacle was fully enjoyed.

THE sale of the personal estate of O. W. Huey, on last Thursday, was largely attended. There was a large amount of farming implements, stock and produce sold. Everything was in fine condition, and the bidding lively. Old corn in the crib brought $2 per barrel. Growing corn, to be put in crib, $1 50 per barrel; corn in field, $1 37 per barrel. Horses brought from $50 25 to $113 50. Mules, from $18 to $87. One cow, and calf about two months old, brought $53, one $55 25, one $50, and one cow, $43. Sheep sold well, bringing $5 and upward per head. The demand for cattle was lively. Five two-year-old steers brought $242; 5 heifers, $178; 6 yearlings, $126 50. Fifty nice, fat hogs sold on twenty days' time, to be weighed at the pens, brought $4 84 per hundred.

MRS. JANE HAMPTON, of Napoleon, and Mrs. America Scott, of Burlington, were last week visiting Preston H. Jack, of Indiana. On Friday, the 17th of August, Mrs. Jane Hampton, in company with her sister, brother, sister-in-law, nephews, nieces and old friends, celebrated her 80th birthday at Mr. Thomas Jack's. Mrs. Hampton, Mrs. Scott and Preston H. Jack are all of the family that are living, and are respectively aged 80, 73 and 69 years. At the dinner table that day there were twenty-two ladies with an average age of 48 years and fifteen gentlemen with an average age of 48 years. Of the thirty-seven persons who took dinner with them, but nine were not related to them. This was the first occasion upon which these three persons were ever known to occupy and ride in a buggy with no one else with them. The birthdays of the subject of this notice are as follows: Mrs. Jane Hampton was born August 17, 1797; America Scott, September 12, 1804; P. H. Jack, July 29, 1808. These persons are quite active and spry, and we hope they may each live to celebrate one hundred birthdays.

Miss Carson's Essay.

By the kindness of Miss Allie Carson, we are this week enabled to present our readers the essay read by her during the late session of the Boone County Teachers' Institute:

HUMBUGGERY AS AN ELEMENT OF SUCCESS.

As there is, among our respectful and intelligent audience, some who has not seen, from observation, that the above is justly elicited from the flattering results of the present day, we proceed, in our artless and unostentatious manner, to express a few thoughts on this not wholly unnoticeable subject.

The success which is daily crowning many enterprises that have evidently no intrinsic merits within themselves is most conducive to the belief that the element of humbuggery is a necessary attendant upon the apparently glorious results of almost any undertaking, of whatever nature. Really, there is always to be found in humbuggery something spicy and fresh, which has an irresistible attraction. Without it, life would appear to have lost its rarest jewel, its most appreciative beauty, incidents and employments, their luster lending charm, their progressive interest.

The plain, unvarnished realities of yore seem no longer to attract us. Indeed, at the present day, a thorough coating of whitewash seems indispensable in attracting eye and heart, and insuring that soothing influence so much desired.

The minister humbugs his audience with double-distilled theology, gilded over with the sheen of rhetoric, till we are lapsed into a kind of revery. We think he is an educated man; talented, and of course honest; will certainly say nothing wrong; and, while we repose so much confidence in him, we will not hesitate to refresh ourselves with a most welcome visit to dreamland, to revel in its blisses; while our good pastor, appreciative of our thus perfect trust in him, continues his infusion of opening up before us the paths of peace and holiness. At the close of the sermon, upon reflection, we find that not only the minister has humbugged us, but that we, in our somniferous way, have returned the compliment.

The lawyer humbugs his client with the delusive hope of gaining his case, and often succeeds in humbugging the jury into fallacious and illogical conclusions. If he fails to gain his case, he has only to cover his defect with a string of learned technicalities, and forthwith his client is satisfied.

The physician's life is a splendid opening for humbuggery. It seems that medicine is something about which the people love to be humbugged. It is a fact that frequent disappointments do not blunt their relish for humbuggery in this department. While they exhibit incredulity in the development of science, they accept, with childlike faith, the astounding revelations of patent medicine venders. We often see "a good opening for a doctor" advertised, but the advertisement remains in the paper only a short time till the opening is filled with first-class humbugs.

The teacher has an equally fine field for humbuggery. He can, by some soft and flattering speeches, make the people think he is possessed of a vast amount of knowledge, and then it is easy to lead them to believe there is nothing that he does not know; and when he has once gained their patronage, he endeavors to flatter them with the idea that their children are juvenile prodigies in the way of attainments, and, of course, all parents like to be told that they have sprightly children, even if they know they are the victims of flattery, so the fond parent eagerly swallows his draught of humbuggery. But the teacher is not alone in his game of whitewashing in schools. Young ladies and young gentlemen, without the slightest manifestations of conscientious scruples, will, innocently of course, devise a means of obtaining at least a perfect report without the monotony of study. This can be accomplished in a variety of ways, obvious to all, and thus humbug both teacher and parent—a practice which will certainly, sooner or later, be most heartily regretted.

Quiet, modest virtues, that should stand pre-eminent, seem in this age to be receding. Flash literature, bearing to heart and mind the poison of moral death, and spreading mental asphyxia throughout the land, has, in a degree, usurped the place once occupied by the English classics. This is really the age of puff. It doesn't make a great deal of difference who does the puffing, so it is done. The editor, who is ashamed to speak to a friend in terms of self-praise, can, with a nonchalance truly refreshing, say in print that his publications "are the best on the continent," and his readers accept it as the utterance of an oracle.

We are constantly meeting individuals who, by their flattering lips and deceptive hearts, if we did not know they belonged to the genus Homo, and that our father Adam sinned, might lead us to think they are pure as angels; and, even when we find them to be pharisaical, we still appreciate them for their wealth, or some aristocratic relations.

Can we conceive of anything that is more humbugging at the present day than the fashionable young lady? She is beautiful and accomplished; what constitutes her beauty? Is she like the lily, always arrayed in great splendor and knows not whence it cometh? Ask the mirror before which she daily stands. Peep, if it could speak, it would give an interesting history of her beauty. Truly, she is like the lily, inasmuch as she "toils not, neither does she spin." What are her accomplishments? A smattering idea of some advanced studies, and a little knowledge of music and the arts. She is flattered by her doting parents and silly lover for beauty of form and of face and perfection in general attainments, when they know full well that it all is but a dazzling sheen that will forsake its possessor, and leave her to shine in her own dull light, without the faintest radiance of attraction.

Strange as it may seem, yet true it is, that we have been so long accustomed to shame, so almost necessarily surrounded by them, that we learn, not only to accept them with a feeling of unavoidable resignation, but to appreciate them as substitutes for those admirable principles and that true and moral worth which should, and will, one day, we hope, bless the earth to its utmost bounds, and prove to man that he was created for some nobler purpose than that of deceiving the world with that which is, yet is not.

A FEW days since, a warrant was sworn out by Noah Utz, charging C. L. Crisler, Fielding Crisler, F. W. Grant, Chas. Clore, Churchill Clore, Joel Deer and Everett Grant with violating the fish law by seining in Gunpowder creek. Last Monday morning the warrant was returned before Esquire Gaines, who issued it, and upon the defendants filing an affidavit saying they did not believe they could have a fair trial in a court presided over by Oscar Gaines, the case, under a change of venue, was sent to Judge Foster's court, which convenes on the second Saturday in September. A warrant charging Noah Utz with violating the same law, by taking a fish under a rock, had been served on him, but the case was not tried. This is the first case under the fish law that has found its way into any of the Boone County courts.

Personal Mention.

MRS. HENRIETTA HUEY is quite ill.

MRS. MARY D. PIATT is at present with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. McKenzie.

R. B. JOHNSON, of Holden, Missouri, is visiting Mr. John P. Scott's, at this place.

MISS GUSSIE KIRKPATRICK has been visiting relatives in Covington for the past two weeks.

MRS. W. N. JURY, of Payne's Depot, Scott County, is visiting her sister, Mrs. O. P. Conner, near this place.

MRS. SUSAN JEFFRIES and Mrs. Elizabeth Riddell, of Williamstown, Grant County, are visiting relatives at this place.

MRS. ANNA MCKENZIE is away for a fortnight on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Susan Faulconer, of Keaton County.

MISS MOLLIE and Miss Fronie Campbell, of Liberty Station, Carroll County, are visiting their aunt, Mrs. Lucy Rogers.

MISS MARGARET KELLEY has been dangerously ill for the last few weeks with typhoid fever, but is now convalescent and considered out of danger.

An Accident.

Last Monday quite a sad, as well as fatal, accident happened one of the hands engaged on the Burlington and Bellevue pike. The particulars, as given us, are about as follows: Three men were engaged in taking gravel for the turnpike from a pit near what is known as the Rocky Spring, on Middle Creek. They had made a two or three feet excavation for gravel under the edge of one of those immense conglomerate formations that are numerous in that section, when a large portion of the overhanging stone suddenly, and without any warning, broke off, fell upon one of the laborers, forced him to the ground and mashed his head into a jelly. The weight of stone that fell was sufficient to demolish the wheel of a new wagon, which was backed up against the bank and being loaded. Those who were present say the unfortunate man never moved a muscle after the stone knocked him down.

ONE of the parties, Fielding Crisler, against whom proceedings were instituted for violating the fish law, says he was seining for duck eggs his ducks had deposited in the creek, and because a stray chub got in the seine he was arrested. He claims that his right to gather his duck eggs is "guaranteed by the Declaration of Independence," and if he has not that right, who has? We move that the above be inserted as a special plea for the defendant.

MR. NOAH CRAVEN has lost a fine South-down buck. Any information as to its whereabouts will be thankfully received.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

COVINGTON STOCK YARDS, August 27.

Cattle—The receipts have been light, the past week, with a corresponding demand, making very little life in the trade. Shippers selling at 5@6c; extra butchers', 4@4½c; good butchers', 3½@4c; common butchers', 2@3½c. Milch cows selling at $25@40. Veal calves, 5@5½c.

Sheep—Supply has been light, as has also been the demand, and prices about the same as last week's quotations: Shippers' selling at 4@4½c; stockers, 3@3½c. Lambs—Receipts have not been as large the last week as they have been for the last few weeks, yet the supply is in excess of the demand, and they are selling lower. Shippers' selling at 4@4½c; butchers', 3@3½c.

Hogs—The demand is good for a few butcher's hogs, but not much demand outside of that, and selling at 5@5½c.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

The stock market was quiet last week with heavy receipts and a gradual decline in prices. Best shippers' brought from 5 to 5½c.; fair to good, 4@4½c.; best butchers' stuff, 5@5½c.; fair to good, 2½@3½c; common, 1½@2c.

Hogs firm and all sold at 4½@5c. for extra, and 3½@4c. for common to good.

Good sheep remain firm and unchanged.

The horse and mule market was rather dull last week, there being no shippers on the market, and but few of any kind. There is a heavy and standing demand for all kinds of horses and mules. About fifty head of inferior grade sold at auction brought from $25 to $100.

No change in poultry and produce.

Butter firm at 10@12c.

Eggs in demand at 9@10c.

The grain market dull with a slight decline in wheat. Corn and other grain remain firm at last quotations.

The leaf tobacco market remains firm and unchanged in prices; the market rather quiet. Sales for the week, 1,210 hhds.

Ayer's
Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs,
such as Coughs, Colds,
Whooping Cough,
Bronchitis, Asthma,
and Consumption.
The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvellous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the happiest results that can be desired. In almost every section of country there are persons, publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use. All who have tried it, acknowledge its superiority; and where its virtues are known, no one hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering peculiar to pulmonary affections. CHERRY PECTORAL always affords instant relief, and performs rapid cures of the milder varieties of bronchial disorder, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs.
As a safeguard to children, amid the distressing diseases which beset the Throat and Chest of Childhood, it is invaluable; for, by its timely use, multitudes are rescued and restored to health.
This medicine gains friends at every trial, as the cures it is constantly producing are too remarkable to be forgotten. No family should be without it, and those who have once used it never will.
Eminent Physicians throughout the country prescribe it, and Clergymen often recommend it from their knowledge of its effects.

CONTENTMENT.

I love to see old age content.
As, standing in its autumn day,
The halo of a life well spent
Sheds light and glory on its way.

Old age should rest, not prime or youth;
Old age may rest the past to tell;
When life is all behind in truth,
Contentment then, perchance, is well.

"I am content!" These words are not
The legend that brave men should bear,
And idly stand within their lot,
And fold their arms when skies are fair.

Content? With what? With wrong and rust?
With crime, oppression, greed of place?
When earthly things say "Dust to dust,"
Art thou content to feel no grace,

Of deeds well done to smooth the way,
Or make a path for weary feet
That toil and strive from day to day
To reach where Truth and Mercy meet?

Content to sit and idly float
Upon the current as it wills,
And thoughts of others gibbly quote
As steadfast as the ancient hills?

Content with little that you know,
Nor seek to add a plentier store
Of present knowledge as you go!
Content with old tradition's lore!

No! Not content while all of life
Lies just beyond; within your reach
To make it grand and true and rife
With work, or words of silver speech.

You need not go without your sphere
To find your work, 'tis everywhere;
Whate'er is next your hand, 'tis clear
Is just the burden you should bear.

Where'er a right is to advance,
Where'er a wrong to be redressed,
There is your place; poise well your lance,
Spur to the charge. Leave God the rest.

Then be content with nothing less,
Though high or low your station be,
Than that which measures full success
And says: "Well done! Come up to me."

Hereditary as a Factor in Pauperism and Crime.

Dr. Edward H. Parker recently read a paper of the above title before the Medical Society of the State of New York, at Albany, in which he reviewed the question of hereditary as an element in the production of crime and pauperism. He claimed to do this simply as a physiologist, and with no sentimental, biasing notions. The elements for his line of argument he obtained from the Report of the Prison Association and the Report of the State Board of Charities of New York. He does not deny that anatomical, physiological, mental and pathological peculiarities of parents may be transmitted, but that they will be is not so absolutely certain. Strength, pluck and skill may all be inherited, which, when turned in one direction, makes the skillful mechanic, and when by circumstances diverted from their legitimate channel, produces the expert criminal. He declares the mental characteristics of the two to be much the same, except that the criminal—a burglar, for instance—needs physical strength and reckless audacity, all of which may be inherited by both, but which the former can do without. The qualities that may be be attributed to hereditary do not make the one more a criminal than the other an expert mechanic.

In reply to the question, if there is not a certain base propensity, a lowness of character, which may be transmitted, he replies that physiology knows no such peculiarity in the human animal. He advocates that the cure for unbalanced lives is training, and that the general phenomena of crime is due to surroundings, or to use his own words, to environment. Let the pure and moral mind come in contact with, and become enveloped by, morbid and immoral tendencies, and the result will be immoral. Environment makes generation after generation of thieves, burglars, prostitutes, criminals, etc., and a different environment makes generations of learned persons, mechanics, tradesmen, etc. Observation, he says, teaches that environment determines for the most part how capacity shall be trained and how used.

He denies that the evil tendency to crime is corrected by correcting physiological tendencies, nor has he any confidence in the training of a bare morality. Men can only be restrained from crime by deep, profound religious training—a feeling that goes down into the depths of the soul; which makes it a part of one's self to know that certain things must not be done because they are sins.

Mr. Parker says, as a physiologist, he is unable to see any heredity as a factor in pauperism, with the exception of feeble mind and body, and these are rather indirect factors. The State must be made to change this radically, rather than to lament the impossibility of making physiological changes over which the State can, from the nature of things, have no control.—Scientific American.

PRESIDENT SEELYE is already justifying the wisdom of the authorities of Amherst College in transferring him from the halls of Congress to the Presidency of that institution. A newspaper correspondent writes, "He is accomplishing all that his most sanguine friends expected, and there seems to be no doubt but that his sucess as a college president will be quite equal to that of professor or congressman, in which position he has shown superior ability."

THE young Texan doesn't tell you his sweetheart is as sweet as sugar, but says: "O, she'll do to put in coffee."

How the Young Become Nearsighted.

Dr. Agnew, the well-known oculist, of New York City, expresses the following opinion in regard to the causes of the prevalence of a tendency to nearsightedness among young people: The eye is an organ which is soft, as it were, when the child is born; it is plastic—it is in a condition to be changed in its shape, and its tissues are in a condition to be moved; that is, the tissues which go to make up the organ can be molded in various shapes on pressure. Ordinarily, the child goes on until it reaches the age of eight or ten years, or perhaps a little older, when it is observed that it is obliged to hold the object at which it is looking a little nearer than before. An examination reveals the fact that the child is near-sighted. This condition usually progresses more rapidly between the ages of ten and twenty-six. But we know, by means of the opthalmoscope, by an examination of the body after death, that the near-sighted eye is changed in shape from the spherical to an elliptical, or ovoid, form, and that progressive nearsightedness is always marked by a change in the shape of the eye. As the eye is made of healthy tissue, and it is constantly undergoing waste and repair in use, you readily perceive that the quality of its repair is going to be determined much by the character of the tissue-building quality of the particular child, and by the way in which that child uses its eyes. I have often entered the dwellings of many people and seen their little girls curled up on a sofa, or in a chair, with the head down on the lap, the vessels of the forehead turgid with blood, remaining in that situation for a greater or less time; and often, before a child can read, some object, like a doll with its wealth of intricate clothing, or some other plaything, the child holding the object near its eyes—using her accommodation and focalizing her eyes—and all the time waste and repair is going on; because there can be no use of the eye without alterations of tissue, and the child will go blind because the proper nourishment of the eye is interfered with, and the tissue can not be reproduced or nourished as it should be; and the pressure of the muscles upon the eyeball, and the difficult act of the child in focalizing, mean that the tissue of the soft and pliable eye is undergoing alteration, which will lead to a lamentable form of the disease. Then the child goes into the school, and is there put into forms and classes, and oftentimes is made to do work on slates and copy-books which, perhaps, might be better done on the blackboard, and thus the eye is strained until the mischief is perceived in its effects.

Laborers and Labor.

The habit of striking laborers of destroying property or crippling machinery when their demands are denied is as illogical an exhibition as can be conceived. What is property? What is machinery? Workingmen tell us they are the product of labor—and they tell us the truth. They are not only the product of labor, but they are a form of labor—the expression and embodiment of a human force whose possessors may be dead. For enraged laborers to burn a depot, sack a factory, or wreck a steam engine is an atrocious act, even when viewed from their own standpoint. It is labor mutilating itself; it is a parent devouring its offspring. It would be as logical for a band of striking workingmen to chop off their right arms in their rage as to smash an engine or burn a mill, for the engine and the mill are the product of the right arms of other workingmen. We are told that because labor has produced all wealth, it has a right to destroy it. This is an untruth. Has a man a right to destroy his children because he begat them? Has he a right to throw his wages into the fire, instead of buying food for his family, because he earned them? The fact that labor is the producer of all wealth, does not make any particular body of laborers, nor even all the laboring population on the earth at one time, the rightful owners of all wealth, by any law, or by any rule of justice that ought to be law. Nine-tenths the wealth on the earth at this day is the product of men who are now dead; the other tenth, probably, is the product of men who are now living. Even admitting that these still living workingmen have a right to destroy that proportion of the aggregate wealth which they have produced—and for producing which they have been fully paid—how can this give them authority to destroy the nine times greater amount of wealth produced by past generations of laboring men? Labor existed before capital—muscles before money. It is the laboring man who becomes a capitalist, and he does it by the simple process of saving a portion of his earnings. The shiftless laborer is no more a laborer because he spends all his wages and has nothing left; and the thrifty laborer is no less a laborer because he saves a portion of his; yet, according to the logic of strikers, the former is entitled to be honored as a workingman, and the latter to be hated as a capitalist.—St. Louis Republican.

"WHAT gender is sugar?" asked a teacher of the grammar class. "What kind of sugar?" asked a boy. "What kind?" repeated the teacher. "What has that to do with it?" "Why, if it's maple, it's feminine," said the boy. "Why feminine gender?" asked the teacher, with a puzzled face. "Because you can't tell its age," promptly replied the boy.

A Fly's Toilet.

The toilet of the fly is as carefully attended to as that of the most frivolous of human insects. With a contempt for the looking-glass—an article which he reserves for the most ignoble uses—he brushes himself up and wabbles his little round head, chuck full of vanity, wherever he happens to be. Sometimes, after a long day of dissipation and flirting, with his six small legs and little round body all soiled with syrup and butter and cream, he passes out of the dining-room and winds his way to the clean white cord along which the morning-glories climb, and in this retired spot, heedless of the crafty spider that is practicing gymnastics a few feet above him, he proceeds to purify and sweeten himself for the refreshing repose and soft dreams of the balmy summer night, so necessary to one who is expected to be early at breakfast. It is a wonderful toilet. Resting himself on his front and middle legs, he throws his hind legs rapidly over his body, binding down his frail wings for an instant with the pressure, then raking them over with a backward motion, which he repeats till they are bright and clear. Then he pushes the two legs along his body under the wings, giving that queer structure a thorough currying, every now and then throwing the legs out and rubbing them together to remove what he has collected from his corporeal surface. Next he goes to work upon his van. Resting on his hind legs and middle legs, he raises his fore legs and begins a vigorous scraping of his head and shoulders, using his proboscis every little while to push the accumulation from his limbs. At times he is so energetic that it seems as if he were trying to pull his head off, but no fly ever committed suicide. Some of his motions very much resemble those of a pussy in her toilet. It is plain, even to the naked eye, that he does his work thoroughly, for when he has finished he looks like a new fly, so clean and neat has he made himself in a few minutes. The white cord is defiled, but Floppy is himself again, and he and bids the morning-glories a very good evening.—Courier-Journal.

A Curiosity in the Heart of a Tree.

The Marshall (Mich.) Statesman describes what was found in the heart of a tall maple tree, five feet in diameter at the stump, and recently cut down at Grand Traverse, 45 feet from the butt where the tree measured little less than three feet in diameter. In the very center of the trunk, surrounded by about a foot of sound wood, was a squirrel's nest. Fine grass, bits of cedar bark and beechnuts filled the cavity almost full. The slightest touch reduced the contents to dust, and further search revealed the little occupants of the nest, coiled snugly under the covering, and—turned to wood. There they lay almost perfect in form, smothered to death. They had become a part of the tree itself. They had not starved to death, because their store of nuts was not exhausted when they died. The only explanation that seems reasonable is that they entered the tree in the fall, through a small aperture, which then grew too small to use as an exit. In time the wood grew completely about them, sealing the dead bodies hermetically, and preserving them. The moisture of the tree may have penetrated the bodies, and through lack of atmospheric air, assimilated the animal matter with the vegetable until the solidification of the mass was affected. It will be observed that the vegetable substances remained distinct. The meats of the nuts were dried, and crumbled to dust when touched. The color of the animals remained brown, but the hair had disappeared.

The Future of Kentucky.

The American Manufacturer says: "Pittsburg has 73 glass factories, 33 iron rolling mills, 8 steel rolling mills, 7 white lead factories, and 29 oil refineries, and the coal mines tributaries to this market number 158." Pretty soon, however, we shall expect to see a very general "weeding out." Nature has marked out Kentucky as the proper seat for iron manufacture, and Nature can not be disobeyed much longer. The opening up of the Green River and Three Forks iron districts in this State will give such an impetus to this business as will not only astonish the natives, but no doubt cause the Pittsburg manufacturers to look about for a re-location of the iron business of the United States, or at least for a point for the supply of Southern markets. Those furnace men and ironmasters who have the wisdom and foresight to cover the facts, and will come here first and start the wheel agoing, of course will reap the fruits of the harvest. For it is plain that the extremely low price at which iron can be made here will affect its prices in other markets, and then when we add the superior quality of Kentucky ores for certain purposes, as already demonstrated; the superior quality of Kentucky coals, timber, stone, sands; the cheapness of living, the favorable climate, and the increasing facilities for distribution—all of these can not fail to work persuasively and convincingly, not to prove that we are a prophet, but to prove that, in all the elements which combine to make a State or a nation great, Kentucky stands unsurpassed, indeed, almost unrivaled, on the habitable globe.

Does It Mean You?

A man who prided himself on his morality, and expected to be saved by it, was constantly saying: "I am doing pretty well on the whole. I sometimes get mad and swear, but then I am perfectly honest. I work on Sunday when I am particular busy, but I give a good deal to the poor, and I never was drunk in my life." This man hired a canny Scotchman to build a fence around his pasture lot. He gave him very particular directions. In the evening when the Scotchman came from work, the man said: "Well, Jack, is the fence built, and is it tight and strong?" "I can not just say it is all tight and strong," Jack replied, 'but it's a good average fence, anyhow. If some parts are a little weak, other parts are extra strong. I don't know but I have left a little gap here and there, yard or so—but then I made up for it by doubling the number of rails on each side of the gap. I dare say that the cattle will find it a good fence on the whole, and will like it, though I canna just say it is perfect in every part." "What!" cried the man, not seeing the point, "do you tell me that you build a fence around my lot with weak places and gaps in it? Why, you might as well have built no fence at all! If there is one opening, or a place where an opening can be made, the cattle will be sure to find it, and will go through. Don't you know, man, that a fence must be perfect, or it is worthless?" "I used to think so" said the Scotchman, "but I hear you talk so much about averaging matters with Lord, it seems to me that we might try it with the cattle. If an average fence will not do for them, I am afraid an average character will not do in the great day of judgment."

WHY is a young lady who has just left boarding-school like a Building Committee? Because she is ready to receive proposals.

THE LAND OF FLOWERS.

BY JULIA M. CLEEK.

I have dreamed of a home in the sunny South,
In that tropical clime far away,
Where the mocking-bird carols its sweetest
In the orange tree all day. [notes

Where the sea breeze fans the fevered brow,
And flowers perpetually bloom;
Where the beauties of Nature enchant the eye
Dispelling the soul's dark gloom.

Where the sunlight glimmers through the sil-
That adorns the forest tree, [very moss
And they gather the shells on the beach at eve,
Cast up by the waves of the sea.

Where the sun goes down on old ocean grand,
Presenting a scene sublime,
That thrills the soul of Nature's child
That visits that genial clime.

But e'en in that land of perennial bloom
Lurks Death—humanity's foe—
And the brightest hopes that inspire the heart
By his hand are oft laid low.

And the souls of many ascend to their God,
To dwell in Elysian bowers,
Who have sought life's rarest treasure, health,
In Florida, the Land of Flowers.

CABOOSE NUMBER FOUR.

Larry Hallan closed the windows of his caboose when the first drops of rain fell, and entered the depot for the purpose of getting a bite before going up. He was a young man of six and twenty, a thorough railroader, and a favorite with his superiors. It was rumored that he would soon leave the road to take unto himself a wife, and one who was high over him had said, when he heard the report:

"That's the way it has been going with us. When a man can't be spared, he gets married and bids us farewell for a humdrum life. Wish we could break up Hallan's foolish match; we can't spare the boy."

But Larry kept his own counsels concerning his future actions, and smiled when the words of the bachelor road master reached his ears.

"It's going to rain," said the restaurateur to Larry, as he cracked the shells of two hard boiled eggs on the counter.

"Big drops are coming down now," replied the caboose conductor. "We will have a lonely run of it. Mansfield is not going up to-night I guess."

Mansfield was a commercial drummer whom Larry often carried up the road to Pemberton.

"Haven't seen him about yet. Don't think he is in the place."

Larry ate a moment in silence and then spoke again.

"Any news?"

"Nothing in particular, only that Dirck Waterman has been put into jail here. They talked so strongly about lynching him over in Xenia that the authorities, fearing for his life, were obliged to remove him. They lodged him in jail here one day last week, and he is as docile as a kitten. I guess he'll get a long term, but, as for hanging, that's out of the question; a bad man seldom gets his just dues nowadays. No reflection on Judge Meeker, Larry."

"Of course not, Charles," replied Larry. "Justice seems to sleep. But she will awake before long; then look out. But our jail is not over strong, I understand."

"That's so, but it will hold Dirck Waterman. He is afraid to trust himself at large in a country where his face and crime are so well known, and I assure you, Larry, that he is content to remain in jail."

Larry Hallan finished his late lunch and took the cigar that the restaurateur handed over the counter with his compliments.

Then, with an interchange of good nights, the men separated.

On the track just without the station stood the train destined for Pemberton, a town of importance thirty-six miles up the road. The "make-up" comprised six freight cars, not heavily loaded, and was the lightest train that Larry had ever been called to run.

"We've got a feather train to-night," the engineer said to him with a smile. "We could run into Pemberton before the passenger ran out, but I suppose we'll have to switch as usual at Peterson's."

"Certainly," returned Larry. "We have waited on that old switch in the rain before to-night. Mebbe it will clear off."

"Not in twenty minutes," grumbled Kyle, the engineer, and a moment later the great iron wheels began to revolve.

Larry sat down in the caboose and freshened the fire; then he folded his arms and leaned back against the side of the car.

The speed of the train was gradually increasing, and he could see the lights in many windows, when the door opened, and a man, dripping wet, and with a ferocious look, walked in.

The young freight conductor started, and a pallor crept over his face when he looked into the blood-shot eyes of the man who might prove one of the wickedest passengers a conductor ever carried. The wet garments worn by the man heightened his ill appearance, and his cleanly shaven face could not conceal the shadow of a once black beard.

Larry thought he might recognize his passenger if the beard had remained, and he began to conjecture whom he might be.

"Bad night," the man said, throwing himself upon a cushion opposite Larry.

The voice startled the conductor and betrayed his visitor.

The former now knew that he sat face to face with Dirck Waterman, the man whose diabolical crime had shocked the State. Waterman, a short time prior to his arrest, had been discharged from the service of a well known line of railway. Exasperated with his deserved treatment, he deliberately obstructed the track, one mad October night, and hurled a train down a steep embankment into a rocky gorge. Many persons were killed outright by the catastrophe, others maimed for life, and the revenge of one man satiated.

He was apprehended by the Sheriff and sent to jail, there to wait his trial. The people of Xenia determined to take the law into their own hands. They attacked the jail, but the Sheriff and his deputies baffled them by conveying the prisoner by a secret post to Piqua, a town in an adjoining county.

The voice of Larry Hallan's unexpected passenger told him that he was Dirck Waterman, who had, without doubt, lately escaped from the county jail.

"It is, indeed, a bad night," answered Larry. "Where are you going?"

"To Pemberton. You run very slowly."

"We are in no hurry; we switch at Peterson's for the down passenger."

"Couldn't you get to Pemberton before she moved out?"

"Don't know; never tried it."

"Well, we'll try it to-night," said Waterman quickly, and the next instant Larry was in his grasp.

The young conductor struggled manfully, but without avail. The murderer's strength was too great for him, and he soon found himself helpless on the floor of the caboose, and bound with ropes which he had purchased for use in the car but the day before.

"I'm going to take you through like lightning," said Dirck Waterman, looking down upon his victim with triumph. "I've got friends in Pemberton, you see, and they'll be uncommon glad to look into my phiz again. I'm sure you can't move, and if I didn't know you were going to marry Anne Clarke some day, may I be accursed if I wouldn't treat you to a bullet. They gave me this in Piqua—my friends did," and he thrust his shining revolver into Larry's face as he spoke. "Oh! you see a fellow's got to be uncommon bad to lose all his friends."

The young conductor said nothing, but looked up into the devilish face of the man who stood over him.

"I'm going forward to hurry Tom up," said Waterman, and with a mock bow of departure the villain left the caboose, closing the door after him.

The silence that seemed to fall about Larry was dreadful. He did not hear the rumble of the cars, nor the patter of the rain on the roof and against the windows. The silence of death seemed to hang over him, and he waited for the pistol shot that should slay Tom Kyle at his post. He knew that the villain was a thorough engineer, and believed that he would not hesitate to slay Tom and take his place on the engine.

Of course he could not see the cunning man creeping over the sticks of wood on the tender, nor catch the gleam of the revolver in his hand.

Tom Kyle was at his post, and his fireman dozed on his accustomed seat. The rain had slacked up a little, and the engineer of the train had opened the door.

Suddenly he heard a voice that seemed to come from the tender.

"Faster!—Don't switch at Peterson's!"

Tom Kyle turned in an instant and saw the face that gleamed at him from above the wood. And at the same time he saw the revolver that covered his heart.

"I want you to obey me," said Dirck Waterman; "I am a dangerous man, and will do dangerous things. We must get to Pemberton before the passenger train starts out. You can do it, Tom Kyle. Now to work at once. I can see the guage from here. If you don't obey me, I'll drop you in your tracks and feed the boiler with your carcass. Now, let us go faster!"

Tom Kyle was pale when he turned from the desperate man. He doubted his ability to run into Pemberton before the 10 o'clock passenger departed. Already they had traversed a good part of the run, and the switch was not far off. But the engineer knew the man who was dealing with him, and he thought of his young wife, far down the road. He thought, too, of Larry, and wondered if Waterman had killed him in caboose No. 4.

The speed of the train visibly increased, until it seemed to fly like an arrow over the dark road.

"Faster!" yelled Dirck Waterman, and Tom Kyle clenched his teeth and threw more power into the limbs of the iron monster. His fireman, appalled at the speed of the train, crouched in one corner of the little engine room, powerless to feed the furnace and weak as a child.

On, on, at the rate of a mile a minute, till the lights of Pemberton became visible. As the engine rounded a curve which had hidden the city from sight, a dark form dropped from a car lightly upon the tender.

Dirck Waterman did not see it, so intently was he watching the engineer, still covered by his revolver. The man—for man the object was—crept forward, and the light of the stars fell upon an iron rod that glistened in his hands.

He stopped a few feet behind the rascal and raised his novel weapon—the poker belonging to the caboose stove. The next instant it descended with crushing force upon Waterman's unprotected head, and he fell forward with a smothered groan and lay at Tom Kyle's feet.

"Slack! slack!" cried the victor, springing from the tender. "Slack, for heaven's sake! The passenger is moving out! Don't you hear her?"

The engineer did not need the commands, for his hands were already on the lever, and when the train stood still, quivering like a leaf, twenty feet did not lie between her and the down train loaded with passengers.

Dirck Waterman was found to be quite dead, and the people said that he had met the fate he richly merited. I am sure that none who knew his crimes mourned his loss.

Larry Hallan had managed to free his hands by severing the cords by means of a nail in the floor of the caboose, and his knife had completed his liberty. I am sure that the speed of the train at the moment of Waterman's death is the fastest on record, and Larry was wont to declare that the wheels did not seem to touch the rails.

Shortly after the adventure he left caboose No. 4, wedded his sweetheart, and returned to the road promoted to the conductorship of a magnificent passenger train. To this day he often tells his wife how near she came losing him on the wild night of Dirck Waterman's escape from jail.

Fear.

There is no more common accusation made against a youth than that of being afraid.

It is a statement very easily made, and only disproved with very great difficulty, and for this reason: Most men are cowardly upon some points, as in fact most men have their ways and moments of courage.

No doubt that there a few exceptional persons born who appear to be free from all sense of fear. But it is quite open to fair inquiry as to whether it may not rather be that persons supposed to exist completely courageous have never shown cowardice simply because they have not been attacked on their weak sides.

Nelson and Wellington are names which suggest the highest degree of bravery, yet it is perfectly well known that Nelson was incapable of asserting himself and his will in the presence of Lady Hamilton, while Wellington was never at his ease in the hunting field.

This proposition may in no way unfairly be advanced, that all men and women are, at certain times and after certain ways, courageous.

Equally it may fairly be declared that there are times and certain conditions when even the bravest man or woman will show the white feather.

In village life it frequently happens that the strongest and most daring lad within the parish boundaries is most afraid of the village churchyard after dark. On the other hand, a boy quite incapable of stopping a horse or rescuing a drowning baby may be far less superstitious, and far more courageous in the presence of death, than many heroes.

Much apparent courage, commonly and very properly called Dutch, is simply that bravery which is the mere result of sheer cowardly desperation.

We have written so far to urge upon our readers the necessity of not condemning those who appear to be cowards. In all probability, some day they will prove that, after their own way, they are as courageous as any one of us.

THE author of the old song, "Listen to the Mocking-bird," which has been sung and whistled and played and strummed and drummed and banged and clattered all over the world, with all possible variations, was not "Alice Hawthorne," as the title page announced; but Mr. Septimus Winner, of Philadelphia, who took his mother's name as a nom de plume. Another of Mr. Winner's songs was the subject of an amusing criticism in a Philadelphia paper. Miss Caroline Richings gave it there one evening when she was singing in English opera, and the critic spoke of it as the "gem of Mendelssohn's finest compositions."

A young lady had coquetted until the victim was competely exhausted. He rose to go away. She whispered, as she accompanied him to the door. "I shall be at home next Sunday evening." "So shall I," he replied.

HOW TO KISS.

Cream and peaches once a week,
Kiss your girl on the right hand cheek;
Apples green and apples dried,
Kiss her on the other side.
—Ashland Review.

That evinces wretched taste—
Take your girl about the waist;
Lift her to her pink toe-tips,
And plant it squarely on her lips.
—Frankfort Yeoman.

Now, we think it better still,
Clasp your girl about the waist,
Stoop and kiss her at your will,
With her head upon your breast.
—Covington Ticket.

Seize the maiden in your arms,
Blushing with her tempting charms;
And it would, we think, be snugger,
Oft to kiss and tightly hug her.
—Paris Citizen.

Take your girl in a warm embrace;
Heart to heart and face to face;
Eye to eye and nose to nose,
Flipity-flop and the way it goes.
—Flemingsburg Democrat.

Still we think that you will say,
Better to kiss in the good old way;
From her mouth sweet rapture sip,
Heart to heart and lip to lip.
—Burlington Recorder.

Fritz's Troubles.

Fritz has had more trouble with his neighbors. This time he determined to appeal to the majesty of the law, and accordingly consulted a legal gentleman.

"How var does tings?" said he, "ven a veller's got a garden, und der odder veller's got some pigs' eat 'em up. Don't you got some law for dot?"

"Some one's pigs have been destroying your garden?" asked the lawyer.

"Straw in my garden? Nien, it was vegetables."

"And the pigs committed depredation on them?"

"Ish dot so?" asked Fritz in astonishment.

"And you want to sue for damages?" continued the lawyer.

"Yaas. Gott for tamages, und der gabbages, und der lettuges."

"Did you notify him to keep his pigs up?"

"Yaas, I did notify him."

"And what did he say?"

"He nodify me to go haal, und vipe mine shin off down mine vest."

"And he refused to comply with your just demand?"

"Hey?"

"He allowed his pigs to run at large?"

"Yaas. Some vas large and some vas leedle vellares, but dey vas root mine garden as der sefen dimes itch."

"Well, you want to sue him?"

"Yaas, I vont to sue him to make von blank fence up sixdeen feet his house all aroundt, vot de tam pigs don't get ofer."

The lawyer informed him he could not compel him to build such a fence, and Fritz left in a rage, exclaiming:

"Next summer time I raise my pigs, too, you bet. I raise fidin pigs by tam! Vipe off your vest down."

The Penalty for a Kiss.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 28.—There is a paragraph in the naval orders of yesterday to the following effect: "Midshipman Clarence A. Corbin is detached from the Ossipee, South Pacific station, and ordered to proceed home and report arrival." Shortly after the ball given on board the Hartford, at Norfolk, to the Grand Duke Alexis during his visit here last winter, a paragraph appeared in the society papers stating that on the occasion of the ball a scene was occasioned by a young naval officer reminding his partner in the dance, who has since married, that upon a similar occasion, in one of the ports of the Mediterranean, he had kissed her, the kiss being a forfeit in the game of "walking around the capstan." The young man was reported to the Admiral, who in turn reported him to the Secretary of the Navy, with the recommendation that he be sent to the South Pacific as a punishment. The recommendation was adopted, and Midshipman Corbin was immediately sent to the Ossipee, South Pacific station, where he has since remained.

Shakespeare and Queen Elizabeth.

There is a tradition that Shakespeare played the part of a king with a peculiar grace and majesty. One day, when the Queen was in the theater, Shakespeare mimicked royalty so well that Elizabeth, who was always ready to have a little fun, whispered to her ladies that she would try if she could not turn this pretended monarch into an awkward fellow enough at a moment's warning. Accordingly at a critical point in the scene, the Queen (who was sitting just over the stage, which was then held to be the place of honor) let her handkerchief drop at the feet of Shakespeare. Her mischievous Majesty expected to see the actor start and redden and lose his cue. Instead of that, he finished his speech with all his usual power, and without seeming to notice the handkerchief. Then, stooping and picking it up, he gave it back to the Queen with a bow, in which there was an indescribable mixture of dignity and homage, saying, as he did so, these words to his train of stage courtiers:

"But, ere we get to horse and ride away,
Let us pick up our sister's handkerchief."

BRIGHAM YOUNG started on a journey through the dark valley, last Wednesday.

THE Owen News wants it understood that the Shuck gang belongs to Henry and not to Owen County.

PROFESSOR HALL, of the Naval Observatory at Washington, has discovered that Mars has two satellites or moons. This discovery was made on the night of the 16th ult.

It is said that among Brigham Young's numerous wives there is not one who could be ranked as a really handsome woman. They embrace all the varieties between blonde and brunette.

THE Worker, a daily paper published at Louisville, by Blanton Duncan, and in the interest of the working men, has made its appearance in our office. The Worker is flush with the latest news.

THE New York Herald says there never was a better time for smashing rings and machines. Good Governments and honest officers are the prime necessities of the hour. Let the old hacks on both sides be sent to the rear.

YESTERDAY was the day the Smith family in New Jersey were to enjoy a family re-union. Three thousand Smiths were expected to dine together and represent one hundred and thirty-seven years of John Henry's New Jersey descendants.

THE emigration of mechanics from this country to England is not very great. The American Consul at Liverpool desires that the working men of this country should be warned against going there unless they have secured employment in advance.

THE indictments against Smith N. Hawes, late Treasurer of the city of Covington, charging him with embezzlement, have been dismissed, and Hawes given six months to return to Canada. The court ruled that under the extradition treaty he could only be tried upon the charges under which he was extradited, hence his being discharged. The city has only the consolation of knowing she will get rid of Hawes. He has returned to Canada.

THERE are some apprehensions that the forces of Sitting Bull and Chief Joseph will consolidate and renew, with vigor, the Indian war along the frontier. It is the opinion of the War Department that these two Chiefs have been in communication by means of runners, all the time. Serious concern is felt for all the settlers along the frontier. The Government has but about four regiments scattered over an area of four hundred thousand square miles.

THE General Statutes of the State positively forbid cock-fighting, and lay down plainly the penalty for betting on a cock-fight, or furnishing chickens for these fights, and we presume there is a similar law in the State of Indiana, from the fact that there are persons in Aurora who visit this side of the river and engage in fighting chickens. Whether they do this for profit or amusement it matters not, it is a violation of the law, and the next grand jury should look into the matter.

THE State Savings Institution in Chicago, was closed on the 29th of August. The recent bank trouble in St. Louis caused a heavy run on the Savings Banks of Chicago, and after two days constant drawing on them they were compelled to take advantage of the thirty day's rule, which requires depositors shall give thirty day's notice of their intention to draw out. But this did not furnish the relief anticipated and the institution was forced to succumb to its impending fate and shut up shop.

ONE of the members of the Virginia Legislature, at the last session of that body, got a law passed to compel every barkeeper to purchase an instrument to record every drink sold, and on every drink thus registered the landlord was to pay a tax. The dealers, learning that the register had been rejected in the Patent Office, bought up the patent that formed the basis of the rejection, and engaged lawyers to bring suit against the manufacturer of the other register, and an order has been issued restraining the issue of the register until the question as to a preliminary injunction can be argued.

THE Frankfort correspondent to the Cincinnati Enquirer, in foreshadowing the next General Assembly of this State and its labor, says: "The next Kentucky Legislature will be the ablest body of men that has convened at the Capital for many years. The people throughout the State have selected their very best men to represent them, and whatever that body in their deliberations do, will, no doubt, be acceptable to the people of the State. The Senate is composed of thirty-eight members, thirty-seven of whom are Democrats. The House of Representatives is composed of one hundred members, of which eighty are Democrats, while the Republicans, Independents and Workingmen will only have twenty members. The Legislature will be called upon to elect a United States Senator to succeed Hon. Thomas C. McCreery, whose term expires the 4th of March, 1878, a Public Printer, a State Librarian and a Keeper of the Kentucky Penitentiary. The candidates mentioned for United States Senator are Gov. James B. McCreary, Judge William Lindsay, Chief-Justice of the Court of Appeals; Hon. Isaac Caldwell, of Louisville; Hon. John Young Brown, of Henderson; Hon. Willis B. Machen, of Eddyville; Hon. P. H. Leslie, of Glasgow; Hon. John W. Stephenson, of Covington; General John S. Williams, of Mt. Sterling, and Hon. Thomas C. McCreery, of Owensboro, will probably be a candidate to succeed himself." For Public Printer, Col. S. I. Major is the only candidate mentioned. The race for State Librarian is expected to be a lively one, it being between two ladies, Mrs. Cornelia Bush and Mrs. Virginia Hanson. There are three candidates mentioned for Keeper of the Penitentiary. J. W. South, the present keeper; H. B. Lyon and D. M. Cooper. There is a small army of offices of minor importance to be filled, and for each office there is a host of candidates. The country is flooded with circulars setting forth the claims of the aspirants, and quite an interesting session may be looked for this winter.

THE amount of building now in progress in the large cities of the country is considerably in excess of many years. This sudden and unexpected impetus to the building trade is accredited to the tumble taken by the prices of real estate in those cities. A large number of the speculators in real estate, as well as the real owners, have, by the closeness of the times, been compelled to sell at very low prices, in fact in many instances at almost ruinous rates. The builders have been taking advantage of the market, invested in lots and commenced erecting buildings for themselves. The cheapness of material also assists in the activity among the builders, and thus the large cities are being supplied with additional tenements, and consequently the renters will be the recipients of partial benefits in the cheaper rents.

THE Colorado beetle is now attracting special attention on the European Continent. This little pest, after having become acquainted with America, concluded to pattern after our great men, and take in Europe. His bugship made his first appearance across the water in a field near Cologne, in Germany. The Government, to give him a warm reception, had the field saturated with coal oil and burned over. A model of one of the bugs was made, and manufacturers are now engaged turning out ten thousand per day. These artificial bugs are distributed among the inhabitants so they may know what the bugs are like, and destroy them whenever found. They will soon become so familiar with the beetle as not to need his photograph to assist in identifying him.

THE Iowa Democratic State Convention met on the 29th of August, nominated a candidate for Governor and adopted a platform declaring in favor of a tariff for revenue only, the retention of a greenback currency, and against any further contraction. They congratulate the country on the acceptance by the present Administration of the constitutional and pacific policy of self local Government in the Southern States. The Chairman made a speech in the course of which he declared Tilden must be vindicated by a re-nomination in 1880.

ON the 29th of August, a portion of Iowa was visited by a destructive rain and wind storm. Bridges were swept away, fields of corn inundated, stock killed and fences carried off by the raging streams.

ANOTHER of the Shuck gang incarcerated at New Castle, Henry County, has concluded to talk and tell what he knows about the long catalogue of crimes committed by the gang since its organization. In the main, Shuck's confession is corroborated, and enough brought to light to justify the hanging of the entire gang. It looks strange that such atrocious crimes could be committed in the very midst of civilization, and the perpetrators go undetected for as long a period as the Shuck gang did. But they are now in the clutches of the law, and society demands that the good name of the State should be vindicated by a speedy administration of the punishment such desperadoes deserve.

LATER.

The Goodrich brothers, Robert, Samuel and James, and James Simmons, members of the Shuck gang, were taken from the jail in Newcastle, Henry County, at 1 o'clock Tuesday morning and hung. The mob numbered about fifty men, and they overpowered the jailer and took the prisoners.

MRS. MARY DAVIS went to Utah, got a divorce, married again and now she pineth in the Kentucky Penitentiary. These Utah divorces are not "giniwine."

STATE NEWS.

—Counterfeit quarters are numerous in Maysville.

—Grapes are selling at six cents per pound in Nelson County.

—Thieves and burglars are getting in their work at a lively rate around Midway.

—Nine hundred heads of families, colored, are about to leave Lexington for Kansas.

—Two desperadoes were killed in Richmond, the other day, and a third seriously wounded.

—A genuine case of Asiatic cholera resulting in death was reported at Sharpsburg last week.

—All the Shuck gang have been held over to appear before Judge McManama at his next Henry term.

—The World's Fair Association has donated $400 of their surplus funds to the Home of the Friendless, in Lexington.

—Maysville Republican: Whatever else may be said of Lewis County, her peach, apple and damson crop are immense this season.

—The hog cholera has been quite fatal on Licking River. A great many hogs have died with it, and some farmers have none left for meat.

—Sam Gaines says there is no conflict between labor and capital in the office of the New Era, as there is an absence of the party of the second part.

—The squirrels are becoming so numerous in some of the mountain counties that the farmers are compelled to turn their attention to killing them in order to save their corn.

—Richmond Register: P. F. Adams has sold from his peach orchard this season eight hundred dollars' worth of peaches. He expects to realize from his crop at least two thousand dollars.

—Paris Citizen: We are informed by Mr. W. W. Gill, an extensive grocer in this city, that the shipment of plums by him alone from this point during the present season exceeds the amount shipped during the last ten years.

—Mayfield Monitor: We understand that Mr. A. J. Watts, one of the best farmers in this county, was so unfortunate as to lose his entire crop of tobacco by the hail-storm of last week, his whole field being torn to pieces by the hail-stones.

—One firm at Mayfield has shipped to Cincinnati in the last thirty days 32,000 bushels of wheat, which was over 1,000 bushels per day. If every county in the State does that much for Cincinnati, she will soon rival Chicago as a grain market.

—The Cynthiana News, speaking of the new bank at that place, says: "Subscriptions to the capital stock, closed Monday evening. One thousand shares having been subscribed, and is principally owned by our best farmers and stock men. We understand the bank will be ready for business very soon.

—The New York World says that a Mrs. Millar, of New Jersey, has instituted suit for over one hundred thousand acres of land in Virginia and Kentucky, eighty-two thousand of which lie in Fayette County, the city of Lexington being built on part of it. The land was bought by Mrs. Millar's grandfather in 1787, and he received patents for it from the Governor of Virginia.

—Lexington Press, 30th: The intense heat of Tuesday continued through a part of yesterday. At 11 o'clock the thermometer in front of Dr. Wilson's drug store, Cheap-side, indicated 112°, while one inside the store indicated 92°. The continued heat and drouth has parched and dried all of the blue grass portion within several miles of the city. In Bourbon it is reported that the grass is so dry that there is danger from fire.

—A Frankfort correspondent of the Courier-Journal reviews the Senatorial race, and says the candidates are slipping along with about equal chances—neither one as much as a neck ahead. Each of the contestants will make an issue with him on that point, and will want to know where he received his information. It is impossible to ascertain the condition of this race without consulting the candidates themselves. The members of the General Assembly are inclined to reticence on the subject.—Frankfort Yeoman.

—The Nelson Record offers the following sure cure for rheumatism: Steep bearfoot root in warm water, allow it to cool, and drink freely. If a cure is not effected in several days take some of the root and some lard, and allow them to simmer on a slow fire. When cooked sufficiently let cool, and use as a liniment. Hold a piece of the root in the teeth, and it cures toothache. Bearfoot is a weed with a large leaf shaped like a bear's foot; grows to a height of three feet, and has a yellow bloom, with a black spot in the center.

Ayer's
Sarsaparilla

For Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Eruptions and Eruptive diseases of the skin, Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Blotches, Tumors, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa, arising from internal ulceration, and Uterine disease, Syphilitic and Mercurial diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, General Debility, and for Purifying the Blood.

This Sarsaparilla is a combination of vegetable alteratives—Stillingia, Mandrake, Yellow Dock—with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and is the most efficacious medicine yet known for the diseases it is intended to cure.

Its ingredients are so skilfully combined, that the full alterative effect of each is assured, and while it is so mild as to be harmless even to children, it is still so effectual as to purge out from the system those impurities and corruptions which develop into loathsome disease.

The reputation it enjoys is derived from its cures, and the confidence which prominent physicians all over the country repose in it, prove their experience of its usefulness.

Certificates attesting its virtues have accumulated, and are constantly being received, and as many of these cases are publicly known, they furnish convincing evidence of the superiority of this Sarsaparilla over every other alterative medicine. So generally is its superiority to any other medicine known, that we need do no more than to assure the public that the best qualities it has ever possessed are strictly maintained.

FLORENCE FAIR.

A Large Attendance and Fine Exhibition—Full List of Premiums.

The twentieth annual fair of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association we do not hesitate in pronouncing a success, and the evidence thus far is to the effect that the prophecy of those who predicted the fair could not stand without the Trotting Association was a false prophecy. Some apprehended a small attendance last week, but the Board, in reducing the charge at the gates and giving a first and second premium, did just the things necessary to increase both the attendance and the exhibition. The crowd Tuesday was in excess of that on the corresponding day last year, and by comparing the number of entries with those made on the first day last year, it will be seen that the exhibition in the ring was much larger. The following is the list of premiums awarded the Special Premiums.

The special premium, a $65 saddle given by Adam Grossman, of Covington, for the best and most graceful gentleman rider, was awarded J. C. Graves, of Jessamine County.

Wednesday was "saddle horse" day. This is generally one of the best days of the fair, and this year it kept its place. Quite a number of Kentucky's fine bloods were shown, and the contest in many of the rings was close, and a decision hard to render. James Graves, of Jessamine County, was on hand with a number of fine animals, which carried off a considerable amount of the blue ribbon awarded saddle animals. The following are the premiums given the THIRD DAY.

Thursday was cattle day. The attendance "cattle day" is generally small, but this year the receipts at the gate were $30 in excess of those of the corresponding day last year. The exhibition of stock was considered by many who have attended the fair regularly for several years to surpass any previous show. Lewis Aylor was the most successful exhibitor, and the premiums taken by his stock were awarded in rings where it required fine blood and careful breeding to excel. Besides the cattle show on Thursday, there were two rings of harness animals exhibited. Samuel Moreland's beautiful team of gray mares took the premium in the harness ring, while J. Mitts' team was awarded the second premium, $10. There were four entries. There were two beautiful and valuable pairs of horses shown in the horse ring. C. L. Talbott's team repeated what they have often done this season—carried off the premium—which in this instance was $20. B. Senlour took the second premium, $10.

This was also the day upon which the stockholders elected Directors for the ensuing year. There was not a change made in the Board, as will be seen by the following list: George M. Bedinger was elected President; Vice-President, William Cochran; Treasurer, Fielding Dickey; Recording Secretary, E. A. Tucker; Directors—John Barton, Absalom Conner, W. A. Carpenter, Henry Riggs, Woodford Carpenter, Daniel S. Root and George W. Terrill.

Stock water gave out at an early hour Thursday, and the management, being equal to all emergencies, soon supplied the indispensable article by having teams hired and put to hauling. Had everyone present been as voracious that day as a certain Representative-elect, the viands on the ground would also have fallen far short of the demand. This gentleman, at last accounts, had eaten forty dinners that day, and had pledged to eat five more.

The following were the awards:

Breeding Cattle.

Best bull under one year, 4 entries, G. W. Ransone, first premium, $6; B. F. Norman, second premium, $4. One and under two, 5 entries, A. C. Shropshire, first, $10; same, second, $5. Two and under three, 3 entries, A. C. Shropshire, first, $14; William Points, second, $8. Three and under four, 2 entries, William Points, first, $15; James McDaniel, second, $7. Four years and over, 2 entries, B. F. Norman, first, $20; Lewis Aylor, second, $10.

Best cow four years old and over, 9 entries, Lewis Aylor, first premium, $20; same, second, $10. Three and under four, 4 entries, George E. Rouse, first, $15; same second, $7. Two and under three, 3 entries, J. M. McDaniel, first, $14; Lewis Aylor, second, $6. One and under two, 7 entries, A. C. Shropshire, first, $10; B. F. Norman, second, $5. Cow under one, 3 entries, George E. Rouse, first, $6; B. F. Norman, second, $4. Milch cow, 8 entries, V. Shinkle, first, $6; B. F. Norman, second, $4.

Alderneys and Devons.

Best Alderney bull, 6 entries, C. Scott, first premium, $10; James Riggs, second, $5. Alderney cow, 7 entries, V. Shinkle, first, $10; same, second, $5. Devon cow, 5 entries, M. W. Graves, first, $6; Lucy Buckner, second, $4.

Graves, $2. Ewe lamb, M. W. Graves, $4. Ewe one and under two, J. T. Richeson, $5. Two years and over, 5 entries, W. C. Harris, $6; J. T. Richeson, $4. Three fat sheep, 3 entries, W. C. Harris, $8; M. W. Graves, $4.

FOURTH DAY.

Friday the attendance was uncommonly large, and the order preserved, with a single exception, good. About the time the crowd was dispersing, a difficulty occurred, in which Charles Westbay and Charles White were the principals. White fired two shots at Westbay, but, fortunately for both parties, neither shot took effect. For a few minutes after the shooting there was considerable excitement, but nothing further resulted. White was taken into custody, and gave bond for his appearance at Criminal Court. As to the origin of the disturbance, we have no knowledge except hearsay.

The programme for the day's exhibition not being sufficient to require the entire time, a riding match was made up. Eight young men wishing to compete for the prize, each put in one dollar, making a premium of four dollars to be awarded the best rider, the remaining four going to the Association. Two young ladies, Miss Nannie Winston and a Miss Nichols, were selected judges, and, after some half hour's riding, Willis Arnold was given the blue tie and Robert Clore the red. The decision seemed to give universal satisfaction.

FIFTH DAY.

Saturday there was a falling off in the attendance, probably on account of the threatening weather in the morning, but still a large crowd was on hand. About the only amusing incident of the day was the appearance of a crazy man in the ring. He was mounted, and his exploits, though amusing, were rendered brief by a policeman's taking charge of him and showing him the outside of the amphitheater. The programme for the day was not very extensive, but the closely contested rings stretched it to nearly the entire length of the day.

The Covington and Lexington turnpike premium, $60, for best horse for all uses, regardless of age or sex, was taken by Riddell & Norris. There were 5 entries.

In the contest for the special premium, $20 in gold or silver, for horsemanship by lady and gentleman, there were four entries. Miss Lizzie Nichols and her father, J. T. Nichols, of Paris, were the successful couple. After the string was tied, Miss Nichols started around the ring, when from her friends came a shower of bouquets, which fell about the ring almost as thick as hail. The high strung animal which she rode then took fright and became unmanageable, running toward the gate at a breakneck speed. She attempted to rein him in, when he gave a sudden turn and threw her to the ground near the side of the amphitheater. This created an intense confusion, and it was some moments before the crowd could be quieted and satisfied that the lady was not fearfully mangled. She was carried to the judges' stand, where she remained till sufficiently recovered to be taken from the ring; there being no serious injury. How she escaped without injury is a mystery. It is to be hoped that a repetition of the scene in the ring Saturday may never again occur. This is the second or third accident of the kind known in the history of the Florence Fair.

Among those attending the fair last week were Judge Lindsay, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals, and now a candidate for United States Senator, and Mr. Bush, Representative-elect, who, in achieving a Democratic victory by his late election in Lexington, is said to have turned that city wrong side out politically. Mr. Bush is one of the numerous candidates for speaker of the next House.

In conclusion, we desire to return thanks to Mr. E. A. Tucker, the indefatigable Secretary, for favors during the week. He is just the right man in the right place, and the longer he is kept there, the better for the Association.

G. H. LOEBKER has just received the largest and best selected stock of fall and winter boots and shoes ever seen in Covington, which he is now selling at great bargains at 36 Pike street, Covington, Ky.

MR. ISAAC MCMULLEN, the "king threshers," says he has threshed about 9,000 bushels of wheat this season. He does not consider the grain as perfect as it was last year.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Rabbit Hash.

Bro. Bristow preached his farewell sermon last Sunday. On account of preaching at the Universalist Church the attendance was rather slim.

Messrs. Rankin and Zen Stephens have returned from Frankfort. They left their mother up there. She will return in a few weeks.

Mr. Joseph L. Hawkins, of Frankfort, Ky., is visiting relatives and friends in this neighborhood.

Miss Ella Hewitt is quite low with fever.

Mr. Thomas Duncan has sold his place in Rabbit Hash to Mr. Ben Bell, of Evansville, Ind. We will be sorry when Mr. D. leaves as he is a good neighbor and a gentleman in every respect.

Dame Rumor says we are going to have a wedding in a short time.

The farmers of East Bend are enforcing the stock law which is causing a great deal of hard feeling between neighbors.

Some of the boys think the fair was hard on Dr. Pocketbook. Is that all? We think not.

The Grange Store was robbed of about $25, last Saturday, by some one crawling in at the window, while Walter Ryle was at dinner.

HARD UP.

Petersburg.

Well, the Florence Fair, with its pleasant surprises, in the way of premiums conferred, heads punched, drinks paid for and consumed, &c., &c.; and its gloomy disappointments in reverse of the above programme, is over once more, and we have a deep sigh of joyful relief, that neither we nor our nearest friend (our pocketbook) is a wreck of broken bones and dislocated stamps. No, we stayed at home and set the other boys (who didn't stay) a good example. "Twas ever thus!" I won't do so any more; the boys just paid no attention at all, and the example did no good. Never mind, this is the week for the glorious Aurora Fair, and then—well, refer to the 5th chapter of Jonah and you will see what to expect.

Mr. John Benson, who formerly commanded the "barber-ous" business of this Petersburg Commonwealth, has recently had it unequally divided by Judge M. V. Cave, with the big end of the money bag decidedly in the Judge's favor. Yielding to the depressing influence of the above named circumstances, Mr. B. has deemed it expedient to emigrate; has sold his entire concern for the snug sum of less than a thousand dollars to L. A. Loder and son (Jim), and has decided to emigrate to Wright's Corner; being a corner some where in the plains of Hoosier, not laid down on the maps. The tonsorial art will still be practiced at the old stand; as in the language of the Judge, the senior partner does the holding and the junior partner the shaving. Both take the money.

We chalk another concert off our list of remarkable events, as one of the things that has ceased to be. The concert is gone. The house was well filled with an orderly and attentive audience, and then with the customary greenness of the managers, the windows and doors were thrown open to the country. It won't take long for this neighborhood to learn to wait a bit, keep their money and enjoy a free show from the outside.

Tribute of Respect.

Died—August 5th, MRS. Nora Walton, wife of J. H. Walton, Past Master Point Pleasant Grange No. 421.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst the dear earth to a better and fairer world above, our worthy sister, Nora Walton, therefore be it

Resolved, That by her death this Grange has lost a good and worthy member, the church an exemplary Christian, the community in which she lived a kind neighbor, the bereaved husband a devoted wife, and her little children a loving mother.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the family of the departed in this, its sad bereavement, and that while we deplore the loss of our worthy sister, we submit with reverence to the fiat of an all-wise God who doth all things well, feeling assured that our temporal loss is her eternal gain.

Resolved, That we drape our hall and wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That we inscribe a copy of these resolutions upon a memorial page in the record book of this Grange, transmit a copy to the husband of the deceased, also to the Cincinnati Grange Bulletin, and Boone County RECORDER for publication.

"Dearest thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

"Yet again we hope to meet the,
When the day of life is fled;
Then in Heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed."

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Our business men were actively engaged, last week, preparing for the fall trade. They show a determination to do a big business this fall at all hazards, and the prospects for good times are better than we have had for years. Business has been steady all week, and prices firm with but little change.

The leaf tobacco market remains firm and unchanged in prices.

Butter, 16@15c. for good to choice.

Eggs active at 10@11c. per dozen.

Irish potatoes, $1@1 25 per brl. Sweet potatoes have declined to 75c@$1 per barrel for red, and $1 25@1 50 for yellow.

The fruit market remains firm and unchanged.

F. M. F. FARMERS and others desiring special information or particulars in regard to the markets, will receive prompt and reliable replies by addressing our correspondent, F. M. F., care of Room 20, Courier-Journal building, Louisville, Ky.

A FINE BUCGY !

COUNTY RECORDER.

..., KY., SEPTEMBER 6.

...ARMER FEELS THEM ALL.

[The following beautiful poem by CHARLES G. LELAND is full of instruction, and should be read and committed to memory by every farmer in the land. The man who, from year to year, produces the staff of life, and enables the mechanic and professional man to live, should almost adore the beautiful fields that he owns and tills. When we reflect that with one loaf of bread we can purchase the largest estate in the world, if we are given complete control over the owner for even one week, how much value the farmer should place on his beautiful acres, and how carefully should his sons shun the temptation and dissipation of city life.]

My lord rides through his palace gate,
My lady sweeps along in state;
The sage thinks long on many a thing,
And the maiden muses on marrying;
The minstrel harpeth merrily,
The sailor plows the foaming sea;
The huntsman kills the good red deer,
And the soldier wars without e'en a fear;
But fall to each whate'er befall,
The farmer—he must feed them all.

Smith hammereth cherry-red the sword,
Priest preacheth pure the Holy Word;
Dame Alice worketh 'broidery well,
Clerk Richard tales of love can tell;
The tap-wife sells her foaming beer,
Dan Fisher fisheth in the mere;
And courtiers ruffle, strut and shine,
While pages bring the gascon wine;
But fall to each whate'er befall,
The farmer—he must feed them all.

Man builds his castles fair and high
Wherever river runneth by;
Great cities rise in every land,
Great churches show the builder's hand;
Great arches, monuments and towers,
Fair palaces and pleasing bowers;
Great work is done, be't here or there,
And well man worketh everywhere;
But work or rest, whate'er befall,
The farmer—he must feed them all.

Kentucky Cattle.

A correspondent of the Edinburg Scotsman has been making a tour of our cattle-raising districts. In his letters he makes this probably very just criticism on the apathy of American farmers in regard to the improvement of their cattle:

It might have been thought that where so many shorthorns have been bred for so many years, as has been the case in Kentucky, almost every animal would by this time have the stamp of the fashionable shorthorn upon it; but the fact is, and facts must come out—I may refer more fully to it afterward—shorthorn breeding in America has been so conducted that the country generally has derived but very little benefit from it, in comparison to what it ought to have done. Fewer steers are fed in Kentucky now than there were several years ago, owing mainly to the increased attention bestowed on shorthorns and horses; but still upwards of 30,000 beef steers leave the Blue Grass region every year, averaging in weight alive about 1,500 or 1,600 pounds. Of these probably not more than one-third show shorthorn blood, while on y about one-tenth would rank among the average Scotch crosses of the same age, and three experienced Kentucky farmers, who accompanied me, asserted that they could not find more than 30,000 three-year-old steers in the State that would equal or surpass these.

The demand in Kentucky, as all over America, for improved shorthorn bulls is growing steadily, and greatly increased attention is likely to be bestowed on the rearing of cattle of good quality. Farmers are beginning to realize better than ever the advantages to be derived from the raising of the best possible class of cattle, and they know that it is by using shorthorn bulls, and in that way only, that they can convert their inferior herds into animals of good quality. Kentucky farmers do not think that the cost of beef production will increase very largely for, at any rate, ten or fifteen years, but they think that by that time there will be ten improved steers for every one at the present day. They think the exportation trade will bring about great improvement in the general cattle stock of the country, by creating a reliable and profitable outlet for the better quality of beef.

Curious Facts About Food.

There is an old saying that what is one's meat may be another's poison, and how often we are reminded of this as we see the likes and dislikes of people for the same articles of food, and learn the reasons therefore. Strawberries, that are so delicious to almost everybody, are poison to many. A prominent member of the bar told us that one strawberry would poison him to such an extent that it would require weeks for him get over it. An elderly lady of our acquaintance will almost faint away at the sight of a cheese, and wherever she goes this article is banished from the table. Shell-fish are pernicious to many—poisonous and offensive. We have read, in a late medical journal, a number of instances of those antipathics confirming our own observation. Some persons cannot eat a lobster salad without its having a very curious effect upon their complection. A lady indulged at supper-time in a salad of this kind, and upon her return to the ball room her face and neck immediately became covered with spots, obliging her to retire. A medical friend tells us that eating veal gives a lady of his acquaintance the nettlerash, and that orange peel has produced great nervous excitement. Figs, again, give rise in some people to a sensation like the tickling movement of ants upon the palate.

Falling in Love.

There is nothing—no moral or intellectual phenomena—more strange than falling in love. What it is, whence it originates, how brought about—these things are among the hidden mysteries of our nature.

A girl has reached the age of 18, a young man that of 21. They have lived at home, traveled a little, pursued their studies, attended parties, and been a good deal in the society of other young people; yet they never took a very deep interest in anything particular; neither of them ever cared very much for any other person.

They meet, and lo! of a sudden all is changed. Each sees the other in a different light from what any other was ever seen in; the whole world seems changed; life itself is changed; their whole being is changed, to be like what it was again never more.

Love is often as sudden as this, but not always. Sometimes it is of very slow growth. Persons have known each other for years, and been in each other's society, and been intimate all this time, but never thinking of a tie stronger than friendship, when some incident or event—a temporary parting, or the intervention between them of a third person, friend or stranger—reveals to them, for the first time, the great truth that they are mutually in love. Yet this love, springing up gradually and imperceptibly, is no less mysterious and unfathomable than that which is sudden and at first sight. It is not mere friendship grown strong; it is a more absorbing, more violent, more uncontrollable sentiment.

Love lives to labor; it lives to give itself away. There is no such thing as indolent love. Look within your heart and see if this is not true. If you love anyone truly and deeply, the cry of your heart is to spend and be spent in your loved one's service. Love would die if it could not benefit. Its keenest suffering is met when it finds itself unable to assist. What man could see the woman he loves lack anything, and be unable to give it to her, and not suffer? Why, love makes one a slave! It toils night and day, refusing all wages and all reward save the smile of the one unto whom it is bound, in whose services it finds its delight, at whose feet alone it discovers its heaven. There is no danger that language can be too strong, or too fervently used, to portray the service of love. By candle and couch, by sick bed and coffin, in hut and palace, the ministries of love are being wrought. The eyes of all behold them; the hearts of all are moved at the spectacle.

Whether a person can fall in love more than once is a mooted question. Some people appear to fall in love many times. It is not unusual to see widowers, who have been very devoted husbands, marry again, and seem to love the second wife just as well as the first.

An Awkward Predicament.

We have heard the history of a man who was for many hours watched by a bear, without his being able to remove from the spot where he was sitting; here is a more terrible one of a man and a lion. A man returning from a visit to his friend's at Bethany, South Africa, took a circuitous course in hopes to kill an antelope to carry home to his family. Seeing no game when he reached the spot, he laid his gun down on a low, shelving rock, and went down to a pool to drink, after which he returned to the rock, smoked his pipe, and fell asleep. In a short time the heat reflected from the rock awoke him, and he saw a large lion crouching before him, with his eyes glaring in his face, and within little more than a yard from his feet. He sat motionless for some time, till he had recovered his presence of mind then eyeing his gun, he moved his hand slowly towards it. The lion, seeing this, raised his head and gave a tremendouous roar. He made another, and another, and another attempt, but the gun being far beyond his reach, he gave it up, as the lion seemed well aware of his object, and was enraged whenever he attempted to move his hand. The rock on which he sat became so hot that he could hardly bear his naked feet to touch it, and he kept moving them, alternately placing them one above the other. The day passed, and the night also, but the lion never moved from the spot. The sun again rose, and soon rendered his feet beyond feeling. At noon the lion rose and walked to the water, only a few yards distant, but looked behind as he walked, lest the man should move; and seeing him stretch out his hand to take his gun, turned in a rage and seemed about to spring upon him. The animal went to the water, drank, and returning, lay down again at the edge of the rock. Another night passed; the man in describing said he knew not whether he slept, but, if he did, in must have been with his eyes open, as he always saw the lion before him. Next day the animal went again to the water, and while there he listened to some noise apparently from an opposite quarter and disappeared in the bushes. The man made another effort and siezed his gun, but his ankles were without power and he could not walk. He crept down to the water, gun in hand, expecting the return of the lion, which, however, never came back. The unfortunate man remained a cripple ever after.

SOME hygienic writer says: "Let your children eat all the salt they want." Bless you; it isn't salt they want—it's sugar.

Keely's New Motor.

The Directors of the Keely Motor Company met the other evening to witness Keely's experiment with a new machine, which weighs more than twenty tons. It has cost $60,000, having been two years in process of erection, and was twice reconstructed with other metal, because the two first choices of the inventor proved not strong enough restrain the energy of his vapor. The machine is made of wrought-iron and cast-steel. It consists of spheres, basins, standing tubes, and small reservoirs, with a wilderness of connecting-rods, valves, and tiny copper tubes. A globe of cast-steel, four feet in diameter on the outside, holds only twenty gallons. The center cavity is in a shell of nine inches thickness. The perpendicular tubes that reach from floor to ceiling, at the other end of the machine, have a central chamber of three inches diameter, the surrounding metal being three inches thick, and outside of it, one above the other, are huge rings of wrought iron shrunk up the pipe. The copper tubes appear to be one-fourth and one half inch in diameter, but the aperture in their center is not large enough to admit a pinhead. The machine is now complete. Mr. Keely is giving exhibitions of its force, registering pressure to the square inch, and is testing its strength before he applies the power to large engines. First, he began to register pressure upon the gauge, which will register a pressure of 11,500 pounds to the square inch. He made nine tests, and with five-twentieths suspension of water column and ten pounds of air, produced 11,000 pounds pressure to the inch, and had to shut off the pressure because the gauge would not stand more. The condensing apparatus into which the vapor is discharged is a cylinder that holds three gallons of water, and so strongly bolted and barred that it looks as if made for the discharge of a twenty-inch projectile. Its detail is to reduce the vapor, the force which has just been used, to water, for use over and over again in the working of the machine. The Times representative had an opportunity to breathe the mysterious vapor while the wonderful pressure was upon the tubes. It was discharged into his hands, his eyes, and his mouth. It was perfectly cold.

Within a month, when he has made all his experiments with his now completed machine, Mr. Keely will endeavor to show the extent of its power. In his concluding talk with the Times representative, Mr. Keely said: "This is a new substance, a new force, altogether unknown to science. I don't pretend to be the inventor; I discovered it by accident. I could work this machine up to 10,000-horse power if the metal would hold. I shall certainly work it upon a 200-horse power engine soon. The little machine you saw in the office up stairs (it is nine feet long, two feet wide and three feet high in its highest part) is the most powerful machine ever constructed. It was built by us for Mr. Willard Bordentown, who was drowned a few days ago. It was a quart machine—that is to say, it used only a quart of water. With the condenser that I have now nearly complete, I will make that quart of water produce 1,000-horse-power motion of sufficient duration to run a steamship across the ocean."—Philadelphia Times.

Insurance Laws.

The general Insurance laws of this State provide that no companies organized under the laws of other States or foreign companies be authorized to do insurance business in Kentucky until they have received the certificate of the Insurance Commissioner that they have fully complied with the requirements of such laws. They further provide that no person shall represent as an agent any such company until such certificate has been issued to the company by the Insurance Commissioner, and the agent duly authorized by license of the Auditor to transact business for the company. A penalty of five hundred dollars is prescribed by this law against any person who solicits business without license or authority from the Auditor. "The term agent or agents," under the law, "includes an acknowledged agent or surveyor, or any person or persons who shall, in any manner, directly or indirectly, aid in the transaction of insurance business of companies not incorporated by the laws of this State."

Some licensed general agents, in their eagerness to produce business, have appointed what are called "solicitors," "underwriters," "surveyors," &c., who solicit applications for insurance, and forward them to their general agents, who issue and send policies direct to the applicant. Such persons, acting without license from the Auditor, come strictly within the provisions of this law, and are liable to the penalty of $500 for each application so taken. The prosecution of such cases is in the hands of the county or Commonwealth's attorney. Persons who desire insurance, and make applications and accept policies through such channels, are liable to be deceived and defrauded, as under a decision of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky (see 9th Bush., page 590) contracts in violation of the insurance laws cannot be enforced.

THE UNFINISHED LETTER.

NEAR DEADWOOD.

"DEAR JENNY:
"We reached here this morning,
Tom Baker, Ned Leonard and I;
So you see that, in spite of your warning,
The end of our journey is nigh.

"The redskins—'tis scarce worth a mention,
Don't worry about me, I pray—
Have shown us no little attention—
Confound them!—along on our way.

"Poor Ned's got a ball in the shoulder—
Another one just grazed my side—
But shaw! e're we're half a day older
We'll be at the end of our ride.

"We've camped here for breakfast. Tom's splitting
Some kindling wood off in the pines,
And astride a dead cedar I'm sitting
To hastily pen you these lines.

"A courier from Deadwood—we met him
Just now with a mail for the States,
(Ah, Jenny, I'll never forget him)
Has just most obligingly waits.

"He says, too, the miners are earning
Ten dollars a day, every man.
Hallos! here comes Tom; he's returning,
And running as fast as he can.

"It's nothing, I guess; he is only
At one of his practical ——" Bang!
And short, through that solitude lonely
The crack of Sioux rifle rings sang.

And as the dire volley came blended
With echo from canon and pass,
The letter to Jenny was ended—
It's writer lay dead on the grass.

Mesmerizing a Snake.

Mr. Sam Gentry, living over the line in the adjacent county of Stewart, has in his possession a purse made of the tanned skin of a rattlesnake, which he caught and killed under the following extraordinary circumstances: In going along a path in a wheat field, he came across the snake lying at full length before him, manifesting no disposition to retreat or attack, and apparently waiting for something to turn up. Mr. Gentry, who is a practical mesmerist, concluded to try his powers upon the dangerous reptile before him, reasoning that if a snake can magnetize a bird, why can not a man, endowed with greater mesmeric power, put a snake under the power of his will? Taking his position at the side of his dangerous but quiet subject, he made quick undulatory passes with both hands from the head to the tail, and in a few moments had the satisfaction of seeing the snake completely within his power—charmed, mesmerized, magnetized, whichever it may be properly called. Placing one of his hands in front of his subject, it immediately crawled on his right arm, then over his neck to the left, Gentry in the meantime continuing the mesmeric passes. He then carried the rattlesnake home on his arm, when, under his direction, one of his sons opened its mouth and unfolded its fangs, the snake quietly submitting to the novel operation. After fully satisfying himself and a number of his neighbors who were present and witnessed the affair of the truth of his theory, he cast the snake to the ground, killed it, stripped off the skin, tanned it and made himself a purse, which he has ever since carried about his person.—Trigg County (Ky.) Democrat.

IN a hotel of the Quartier Latin, Paris, a lovesick student ten years ago blew his brains out. The following year a medical student who failed to pass an examination did the same. The landlord, in alarm, declared that no one should sleep in the room again, and made it a storing place for furniture. One morning a waiter in the house, being accused of a trifling theft, mounted to the room and hanged himself. This led the landlord to relinquish the building. His successor was unfortunate, and he soon sold out, and it fell into the hands of a druggist. The new tenant heard the story of the fatal chamber with indifference, but upon his wife it made a great impression. She shunned it to the extent of passing much of her time in the chamber most distant from it. The druggist finally found that this chosen sanctuary of refuge was the room of his head clerk. In a fit of jealousy he swallowed poison and mounted to the fatal chamber to die. This last suicide excited the neighborhood, and the owner of the hotel was requested to wall the door of the room. He only laughed. The neighborhood was very angry, but its ire was appeased on the announcement that the building was to be demolished, in order to make way for a continuation of the Faubourg St. Germain. The proprietor demanded a quarter of a million francs from the city, but the assessor only awarded him ninety thousand. The proprietor fell sick with disappointment, and during convalescence, he desired to take a last look at his property, which was to fall on the following day. When the workmen arrived to begin the work of demolition the fatal chamber had a new tenant. The proprietor's body was found hanging there.

A florist was showing an Irishman over his establishment the other day. "Now," said he, "we'll just look for a moment at the germinating house." "The German ating-house, is it?" replied the other. "Troth, and I'm glad; for it's mighty hungry I am. But isn't there some Irish dhrinkin' saloon just as handy?"

Curiosities.

A plate of butter from the cream of a joke.

The original brush used in painting the signs of the times.

A bucket of water from "All's well?"

Soap with which a man was washed overboard.

The strap which is used to sharpen the waiter's edge.

The pencil with which Brittanna ruled the waves.

A portion of the yeast used in raising the wind.

A dime from the moon when she gave change for the last quarter.

The saucer belonging to the cup of sorrow.

A fence made of a railing of the scolding wife.

The hammer which broke up the meeting.

A buckle to fasten a laughing-stock.

Eggs from a nest of thieves.

Hinges and locks from the trunk of an elephant.

A sketch from a politician's views.

We have not the heart to refuse a hearing to the spunky young lady who writes: "Those editors who are decrying the 'pull-back' skirt, and looking to bring ridicule on the fair sex, would do well to look at home and mend their own foolishness. They should stop coloring their whiskers, and padding their shoulders, wearing box-toed shoes, and eating cloves for the toothache(?). Let them 'pull back' on some of their short-comings first, before they read the ladies fearful lectures on what is evidently a good one."

"A soft answer turneth away wrath," yes; a man caught by his wife dealing soft answers to a pretty widow next door says he can show scars to prove that the proverb didn't work in this case.

Writing to the Newspapers.

Never write with pen or ink. It is altogether too plain, and doesn't hold the mind of the editors and printers close enough to their work.

If you are compelled to use ink, never use that vulgarity known as the blotting pad. If you drop a blot of ink on the paper, lick it off. The intelligent compositor loves nothing so dearly as to read through the smear this will make across twenty or thirty words. We have seen him hang over such a piece of copy half an hour, swearing like a pirate all the time, he felt that good.

Don't try to write too plainly. It is a sign of plebeian origin and public school breeding. Poor writing is an indication of genius. It's about the only indication of genius that many men possess. Sprawl your articles with your eyes shut, and make every word as illegible as you can. We get the same price for it from the rag-man as though it were covered with copper-plate sentences.

Avoid all painstaking with proper names. We know the name of every man, woman and child in the United States, and the merest hint of the name is sufficient. It is a great mistake that proper names should be written plainly.

Always write on both sides of the paper, and, when you have filled both sides of every page, trail a line up and down every margin and back to the top of the first page, closing your article by writing the signature just above the date. How we do love to get hold of articles written in this style! And how we would like to get hold of the man who sends them! Just for ten minutes! Alone! In the woods, with a cannon in our hip pocket!—Burlington Hawkeye.

It Was He.

A man forty years old, and as long as a rail, went into one of the banks recently to get the cash for a thin ten-dollar check, drawn by a party living in Nankin Township.

"You will have to be identified," said the cashier, as he looked at the check.

"I'm the man," was the reply.

"But I don't know that you are."

"But I do."

"You must bring some one here who knows you."

"Don't I know myself?" exclaimed the check tender.

"But I must know you. You may be Tom Jones for all I know."

"You must be a consarned fool to think I think I'm some one else," growled the man in response.

"You must be identified," observed the cashier.

"That's my name, I tell ye, and this is me, and if this bank gets me riled I'll kick the hull crowd of ye over behind the railing."

The cashier wouldn't pay, and the man couldn't find any one who knew him, and at noon he was waiting "for that feller that sassed him to come out."—Helena Herald.

ONE of the most formidable men in the slaoons of Cheyenne and Deadwood is the Black Hills "bull-whacker." He is a man able to drive and an eight-mule team, cook a meal of victuals, or stampede a flock of "Injuns." But his strong fort is shaking for the drinks in the Deadwood saloons. There he goes as soon as he receives his pay for a wagon load of freight, and remains till the last cent is gone. At night, on the prairie, he camps out, sleeping under his wagon, from which he emerges in the early morning, with tangled locks, as happy as a king. Deadwood is three hundred miles, by stage from Fort Laramie and Custer City, from Cheyenne. The course is due north and the time ten days. Sometimes the stage makes two hundred miles in six days.

"DEAR Wife: Send me a pocket-handkerchief. JOHN." She went to the drawer to get the desired article, and while looking for it she came across the following note dated two week after the wedding: "Sanlight of My Soul: You will have to send me a handkerchief. Your bewitching eyes so turned my head this morning that I forgot to take one with me, for which I shall kiss the sweet face of my own a thousand times when I come home. In two hours and twenty minutes it will be 12 o'clock, and then I can come to my beautiful rose. I long to fly to you. Yours tenderly, JOHN." She sighed, gave the boy the handkerchief, and sighed again.—Danbury News.

AN epitaph on a tombstone in Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn, N. Y., reads:

"Beneath this stone my wife and I,
Back to back together lie,
More blest than when in life's short space,
We lied like others, face to face.
Now free from trouble, free from fear,
If she should scold, I could not hear,
When the last, last trump the air shall fill,
If she gets up, then I'll lie still.

THE wheat crop of the United States for this year, it is estimated, will aggregate 325,000,000 bushels against 260,000 last year. Of this year's crop it is estimated that not less than 100,000,000 bushels will be sent abroad.

Probs.

1. And it came to pass when the people were given over to contraction and all manner of queasiness, that great storms arose and desolated the coasts, and the trees of the forest were cast down.

2. And the people said: Have we not been scourged by fire and sword, by grasshoppers and by politicians? Whence cometh the measure of our afflictions?

3. And one said, "Pin-barks and prise candy;" and another, "Politics and bad whisky."

4. One said, "We have no prophet," another said, "The wind bloweth where it listeth;" for so it is written.

5. And there was one Tice, called Probs, of whom there were many gags and much written in wisdom.

6. Taking counsel of the storms and the varying winds, he prophesied from time to time much that was good. But the people hearkened not, because of the gags.

7. And it came to pass that there was an upheaval of the great Mexican Sea; and terror rode upon the winds; and the waters rose upon the shores, and many were lost.

8. And the people marveled much, because that Probs had said there would be cyclones; and they who reviled him said, "Who is he that hath spoken these things?" But they hardened their hearts against him.

9. For they said: This man taketh not counsel by the light of other days, and it is not good that new doctrines should obtain with the young.

10. Behold! He starteth for a journey on Friday; he catcheth the fish—not in the dark phase of the moon; he soweth the seed at St. Valentine's, and stirreth not the soap-pot left-handed!

11. Of what avail are the stars, since our mothers saw those which concerned us cast to earth when we were yet unborn?

12. Besides, said they, have we not Joshua, the son of Billings, unto us? He speaketh in plain words, and by him is understanding made easy.

13. At one time he saith to the Georgian: Seek ye the gopher in his abiding place; and at another time to the Kansan: Take heed of the grasshopper with destruction on his wings.

14. He counseleth the husbandman that in the night time he keep watch for the coming of the day; and to the good wife suggesteth hot water when the bed-bug shall arrive.

15. And Probs was sad because of the foolish sayings of the people; but at mention of Joshua, the son of Billings, he smole a smile of lengthiness.

16. And he spake unto them, saying: Doth Joshua give command unto the sun as him of old? I answer for you, that he taketh counsel of heavenly things and cheereth the heart rather with words of much quaintness.

17. So likewise would I cheer you, taking counsel of things that ye know not.

18. Give ear, and the desert shall blossom as the rose, and commerce shall whiten the seas.

19. Ye shall not bind up the sweet influences of Pleiades nor loosen the bands of Orion! Of the cycles of Jupiter ye may know as little as an Indian of the problems of Euclid! Read ye the newspapers and be passing wise. Selah!

Professor Tice's Guesses for September.

1st and 2d, threatening and heavy storms; 3d to 5th, generally fair; 5th to 8th, clouding and threatening, with rain in places; 8th to 10th, generally fair; 10th to 14th, clouding and threatening, with very heavy rains and severe storms in places; 14th to 16th, generally fair; 17th to 19th, clouding and threatening, with very heavy rains and perhaps severe storms in places; 20th to 22d, generally fair; 22d to 25th, clouding and threatening, with hard rains and severe storms in places; 25th to 28th, clear and cool; 29th to 30th, cloudy and threatening, with local rains. The warmer periods will be about the 1st, 12th, 18th, 24th and 30th. Cooler periods will occur about the 4th, 9th, 15th and 25th. Possibly a tropical cyclone many appear on the South Atlantic or Gulf coast, either about the 11th, 17th, or 23d; in that case cool weather will prevail over the west and and north until the cyclone has passed off.

"BOY," said a gentleman to the hostler of a hotel as he alighted from his phaeton, "extricate that quadruped from the vehicle, stabulate him, donate him an adequate supply of nutricous aliment, and when the aurora of morning shall again illuminate the oriental horizon, I will award thee a pecuniary compensation for thine amicable hospitality." The boy ran in the house and told his master that a dutchman wanted to see him.

"ANNA, dear, if I should attempt to spell Cupid, why could I not get beyond the first syllable?" Anna gave it up, whereupon William said: "Because, when I come to c u, of course I can not go further." Anna said she thought that was the nicest conundrum she ever heard.

"A baby," says a recent French writer, "is an angel whose wings decrease as its legs increase."

A FARM hand is paid for harvesting, in cetral Italy, seven cents a day, and considers himself a lucky man to find employment at that rate.

A BALTIMORE belle, just from Vassar College, when told by the waiter that they had no gooseberries, exclaimed: "What has happened to the goose?"

THE idea of teaching every girl to thump a piano and every boy to be book-keeper, will make potatoes worth $4 dollars per bushel in twenty years.

A POPULAR clergyman recently gave a lecture on "fools." The tickets were inscribed "Lecture on Fools. Admit one." There was a large audience.

AN exchange says, "an Albany man who used to live on ten cents a day died wealthy." He may have died wealthy, but we will bet money he didn't die fat.

OHIO has more men in public office and more in her Penitentiary than any other State in the Union. The former are past numbering, the latter count over 1,700.

SPEAKING of the sentiment, "She who rocks the cradle rules the world," an American paper says: "In this section she is generally a colored girl, and we don't believe a word of it."

THE Woman's Rights Society of Paris has been dissolved by order of MacMahon's Government, and ordered to cease holding meetings. The Government considered it a nest of radicalism.

"YES," said she, "a dish of ice-cream relaxes the muscles of my heart, but two dishes—oh, two dishes, makes me feel as though I could love on and on forever." So he ordered the waiter to bring on another dish, and counted not on the cost.

"I WISH I might die," sighed a middle-aged maiden, as she hung like a lamp-bolster out of the third-story front window on a Sunday afternoon, and espied a man whom she had once coquettishly rejected placidly propelling an eighteen-dollar baby-cart.

FASHION journals report that broad gauge garters of the style worn in the time of James I. are coming into vogue. "Madam," said a gentleman to a lady who accidentally dropped one while passing out of a Broadway store, "you're losing your dog collar."

ACCORDING to the most recent statistics, the inhabitants on the earth number 1,423,917,000, or 28 persons to ever square mile of surface. London is the most densely packed spot of poulation, containing 3,489,428 souls, more than some continental kingdoms.

AT the close of the first centennial of the United States there were 25,717,907 hogs in the whole country, 15,863,100 were in or en route for Cincinnati, and the rest chiefly between St. Louis and Chicago. This less is than two-thirds of a hog to each citizen.

A FRENCHMAN having heard the phrase: "I've got other fish to fry," very readily learned its application. One evening, after escorting a young lady home, and being invited to walk in, thought of the above expression, and excused himself by saying, "I must go cook some fish."

SNIPKINS refused to get his wife a new hat, and soon after his little girl came in and said: "Mamma, won't you buy me a monkey to play with when you go down town?" "No, darling—wait till you are older, and then marry one, like I did," replied the brief stricken wife, her tears bursting forth afresh.

A SERVANT girl of sixteen, living with a Brooklyn family, was caught in the act of cutting up a silk dress. An examination showed that she had cut up two carpets, seven hats, two coats, six dresses and two beds, and broken in half 1,500 cigars. She was on good terms with the family, and is supposed to have a mania, a theory the police authorities are investigating.

THE Cincinnati Commercial says the trouble in the California election was the rings that sprung into existence under Grant. The Democrats "grant" that.

THE Convention of Governors at Philadelphia, last week, was a failure. There were but few who saw proper to attend, in fact not enough to constitute a quorum.

THE hanging of the Shuck gang in Henry County, last week, will, undoubtedly, strike terror to the hearts of the remaining members of the gang, if there be any.

A NUMBER of American capitalists are contemplating a new Atlantic cable to run from France to some point near New York. The capital stock is to be $15,000,000.

IT is the opinion, rendered in a late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case taken up from Georgia, that a State or city may levy taxes on forcign corporations doing business therein.

THE fine crops throughout the length and breadth of the land are forebodings of a revival of trade and better times, which have been anxiously looked for during the years of stagnant business.

ON the 20th of June the slaves in Mozambique were emancipated by the Queen of Madagascar. The United States Consul, at Tamatava, has sent to the Department of State at Washington a draft of the Queen's edict.

RETURNS from the California election show that the Democrats will have a majority of thirty-eight on joint ballot. The returns from Nevada County change two Senators and three Assemblymen from the Republicans to the Democrats.

IT is reported that Sitting Bull, one of Uncle Sam's erring wards, has returned to the United States. Doubtless he returned to replenish his supplies of blankets and powder and ball for the approaching winter. Uncle Sam might give the prodigal one fatted calf.

IT is said that among the true bills found by the Charleston, South Carolina, grand jury, one was against Hiram Kimpton for bribing six Senators, he having used thirty thousand dollars for that purpose. This bribe was in consideration of the passage of the Validating act in 1872.

FRANK LESLIE, the news paper publisher, filed an assignment in the office of the County Clerk in New York on the 8th inst. The Sun says the liabilities amount to $420,000; his assets are composed of numerous publications. His embarrassment is attributed to too extensive investments in real estate.

A LARGE number of the prominent citizens of Cincinnati have invited President Hayes to visit that city while en route West. His private Secretary informs them that the President expects to reach there on the night of the 15th, but at too late an hour for any public demonstration. The 16th, which is Sunday, he expects to spend in that city.

THE grand jury at Columbia, South Carolina, has been diligently engaged investigating the cause of so much of the funds in the State's Treasury being appropriated for other than State purposes. It is thought there will be but little trouble in convicting about one hundred and fifty persons who have been appropriating money belonging to the State.

THE political canvass in Ohio is now assuming an interesting phase. The number of tickets in the field will likely bring out a large vote in October, and both the Republicans and Democrats fear their strength will be lessened by the parties which stand no possible chance for success. Each party will make strong efforts to hold their votes in the ranks and gain the election.

ON the 8th, General Grant was presented the freedom of Wick in Scotland. The General said:

"During the eight years of my Presidency it was my hope, which I am glad to say was realized, that all differences between the two nations should be healed in a manner honorable to both. In my desire for that result, it was my aim to do what was right, irrespective of any other consideration whatever. During all the negotiations I felt the importance of maintaining friendly relations between the great English speaking peoples, which I believe essential to the maintenance of peace and principle throughout the world."

THE bankrupt law is receiving considerable attention in the business circles. This law is becoming unpopular among business men, it rendering business unsettled and uncertain. It has been greatly abused, and, in many instances, those taking advantage of it do so simply because it affords a cloak concealing fraud, and this being so often the case it has become a serious obstacle to industry and its repeal a necessity.

BOSS TWEED has been testifying before the Alderman's Committee in New York. His testimony alarms the politicians who were in office during the reign of the Tammany Ring. They are astonished at Tweed's willingness to tell the names of persons who were associated with him in the Board of Supervisors, and fear when he commences narrating the operations of the Board he will tell things that will criminate them.

IT is reported that two thousand firms and citizens in San Francisco have signed a petition requesting the Board of Supervisors in that city to appoint a committee to wait upon the six Chinese companies that control Chinese emigration, and the steamship companies who bring Chinese to this country, and request them to cease from further importation of celestials till the United States and the Chinese Government have come to some understanding on the subject.

THE New York Sun in descanting on the acts of the late mob in Henry County, says:

There will be little sympathy for the four men whose dead bodies were found swinging from the Newcastle bridge last Tuesday morning. Although two of them are said to have protested their innocence to the last, there is no reasonable doubt that all four had dipped their hands in blood. They were members of one of the worst gangs of brigands that ever robbed and murdered in the Kentucky mountains. But these men, blood-stained criminals as they were, were entitled to a fair trial in a court of law, and the masked vigilants who dragged them from their cells at the dead hour of night, denying them even the time to pray, and put them to death, are themselves murderers—in the eye of the law, as well as in the sight of Heaven.

AFTER full consideration, it has been determined by the President that the public interests will be better served by the appointment of new officers for the three leading positions in the New York Custom-house. At the extra Cabinet meeting, September 6th, the only matter considered was the New York Custom-house appointments. It was concluded to make changes in all principal Custom-house officers, including collectors and surveyors, such changes to be made at the convening of Congress.

THE Committee of Arrangements are making extensive preparations in Louisville for the reception of President Hayes' and party, who are to arrive there via. of the O. & M. Road, at 11 a. m. on the 17th of this month. The Presidential party, as far as known, will consist of President Hayes, Mrs. Hayes, Webb Hayes, Secretary Evarts and his two daughters, Postmaster-General Key and wife and daughter, Secretary Thomson and wife, Secretary McCreary and wife, and probably Secretary Schurz.

THE management of the Connecticut State Prison is certainly very poor. A few days since some of the convicts made an attempt to escape, and, upon an examination being made, it was discovered that one of the prisoners possessed a skeleton key which would unlock all the cell doors except two; that two loaded revolvers belonging to the prisoners were secreted in the attic; that in one of the cellars were a bottle of rum and a box of matches, and that a convict had seven dollars concealed about his person.

A CORRESPONDENT from White Sulphur Springs to the New York Herald says: "The most gratifying announcement to be made in connection with the present extraordinary gathering is that there has been very little, if any, political discussion. Among the company are several very distinguished Democrats and a few leading Republicans, but they have consistently refrained from talking politics. The only political corceau that transpired is a rumored bargain, which can be traced to no very responsible source, that is to give the Speakership to Sam Randall and that the Democrats are resolved to support the caucus nominee, whoever he may be. The Randall bargain is something of a curiosity, and as it is related to me looks very much like a job with Tom Scott and the Southern members conjointly. Sam, it is said, is to get the Speaker's chair on the condition that he will appoint such a Committee on Internal improvements as will report in favor of the Texas Pacific subsidy. It is stated that Mr. Randall is personally opposed to the granting of any subsidy to that project, but that he has agreed to the above as a compromise, in order to obtain possession of the much coveted position as Speaker. It is added to this the statement that President Hayes' policy meets with general approbation. All the political news of the Springs is told."

STATE NEWS.

—Robinson's circus netted $1,367½ in the little town of London, Laurel County.

—The Flemingsburg Rambler thinks the corn crop "all over the country will be light."

—Daviess County produced fourteen million seven hundred and three thousand one hundred and fifty pounds of tobacco in 1876.

—The corn crop of Magoffin has been seriously injured by the drought, and the farmers are selling off their hogs, both large and small.

—The Frankfort Yeoman says the prisoners in the Penitentiary sing very well at the Sunday afternoon services. To hear them is to enjoy a real musical treat.

—Hopkinsville New Era: The tobacco and corn crops of this section are unusually promising. The yield of the former will probably be the largest realized since the war.

—The farmers in McLain County are jubilant over fine crops, corn, sorghum and tobacco. The latter, unsurpassed in quantity and prospects, indicates a large percentage of fine quality.

—The citizens of Magoffin County ask our Representatives in Congress to give them some relief from the onerous exactions of the Internal Revenue laws, in relation to the distillation of whisky.

—Winchester Chronicle: Roger Blackwelll sold part of his corn, between thirty-five and forty acres, in the field, at $1 60 cents per barrel. Good judges estimate it at from 18 to 20 barrels per acre.

—Mr. Powell informs us that he passed through portions of Fayette and Scott last week, and he was told by the best farmers in the sections he visited that not more than half an average crop of corn would be raised there. The drought has been very severe, and grass and all kinds of vegetation are very seriously injured, and old corn is selling very readily at $1 25 per barrel.—Mount Sterling Sentinel.

—Reports from Pendleton, Robertson, Bracken and other neighboring counties leave no doubt but that the tobacco crop this year will be distressingly short, owing principally to the recent dry weather.—Cynthiana News.

—Hickman Courier: A fine grazer boar belonging to Mr. R. T. Tyler, of this county, got on a spree Sunday last, killed one fine horse outright, and severely wounded several others, tearing out the entrails in a fearful manner.

—The best temperance argument we have ever heard comes from the Mayfield Monitor: "Six hundred million dollars are annually spent in the United States for drink. How many delinquent newspaper subscriptions does this same contain? It is heartless to spend in the maddening cup what you owe the printer. He may be thirsty himself."

—A peculiar individual called at our intellectual works on Tuesday morning. "See here," he remarked, "President Hayes will be in Louisville soon, you understand. Now, look here, I am a citzien of the United States, own twelve acres of the free soil of America, and a mule that can kick all the doors off a barn quicker than the Rothschilds can pay a debt of fourteen cents. You're listening, are you? Very well, then. I want you to say in your paper that I indorse his policy. I'll encourage the old man. Just inform him through the columns of your valuable sheet that Seremiah Baggs is with him. Don't you forget it. Sherman is a fraud—that consumption act is an outrageous audacity. Hayes' pacificatory policy suits me. Key gets down into my affections also. Key-rect! Give me half a column, will you—I've got watermelons out on my place, and you can expect one through the post-office.—Franklin Patriot.

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 5 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

County Court.

At a special term of the County Court, held August 15, L. H. Dills, Commissioner appointed to make deeds in the division of John T. Riley's land, presented the deeds, which were approved and ordered recorded.

L. H. Dills presented an account amounting to $56 for record books; same was allowed.

On the 22d, Thos. Carr, a minor over the age of 14, chose Johanna Carr as his guardian. Thos. Carr's heirs filed a petition for a division of the land.

At the regular term, held September 3d, the viewers appointed to view a proposed alteration in the Bellevue and Rising Sun road, filed their report, which was ordered to lie over one month.

Joseph C. Hensley presented his commission, and was qualified as Justice of the Peace in Petersburg District, with Henry Snyder on bond.

Wm. Watts applied for permission to erect a gate across the road leading from Bullittsburg Church to Sand Hill. John Stephens and John Cropper were appointed viewers to view said road and report at next term of court.

T. W. Finch was allowed $39 93, account against the Poor-house.

The Commissioners' report in the division of Thos. Carr's land was approved and ordered recorded.

Mary A. Sebree was appointed administratrix of the estate of Howard Sebree, with W. T. Snyder on bond.

Geo. W. Sleet was appointed administrator of the estate of W. M. Roberts. John T. Johnson, Berry Powers and Jackson Bass were appointed appraisers.

James J. Hudson was appointed Supervisor of Roads in the third district in Walton.

Harriet A. Miller was appointed guardian of George A., Harriet, and Marin L. Miller, Jessie J. Howlett on bond.

The Commissioners appointed at a previous term to establish the lines of the Taylorsport voting precinct filed their report, which was ordered to lie over till next regular term.

Michael Clore, Albert Corbin and Thos. H. Kennedy were appointed to view the ground over which a proposed change in the Bellevue road is to run.

John Ransom, Robert McManama and Moses S. Rice were appointed to view the route over which it is proposed to establish a road leading from the Big Bone road at the mouth of a branch, running up to James Vest's, thence to the Gallatin County line.

At a special term of the court, held September 5th, Harriet L. Huey, a minor over the age of 14 years, chose John S. Huey as her guardian. The guardian gave bond, with J. O. Huey, J. M. Conner and B. K. Sleet as surety.

Adam Finch was appointed Deputy Sheriff for Geo. W. Sleet.

Aurora Fair.

On last Friday we attended the Aurora Fair, and were surprised to find such an immense crowd of persons and fine exhibition of stock. The attendance that day was uncommonly large, and all through the crowd could be recognized the faces of "Corn-crackers." In fact, it appeared that one-fourth of the persons there were from Kentucky.

The stock shown in the ring during the day was of a much better quality than that shown in the same rings a few years since. This is an evidence that the stock growers in that section are taking more pride in the rearing of fine animals. Among the stock shown Friday we noticed cattle from Kentucky belonging to J. M. McDaniel, of Warsaw, and J. C. Junkins, of Petersburg; horses belonging to J. A. Riddell, of Hebron; Joe Laile, of Bullittsville; R. T. German, of Florence; and James A. Duncan, of Burlington.

The most attractive feature of the Fair (except the good looking ladies) is the Floral Hall, in which is exhibited fruit, flowers, paintings and needlework. In this hall the articles are kept on exhibition during the Fair, and command the attention of every person who attends.

The present Board labored hard to make a success of their Fair this year, and, so far as we have been able to learn, they succeeded. There is no reason why this Fair should not be one of the best in this section, and the probabilities are it will henceforth gain popularity and favor. We tender our thanks to the members of the Board for the many favors shown us during our visit.

NOTES.

We noticed one young man from "Kaintuck" playing the role of both patron and waiter in one of the dining-rooms. He was determined his handsome partner should be waited upon, judging from the numerous raids he made upon the cooking department.

Foster's court last Saturday in answer to said charge. The testimony and law were submitted to the court who withheld his decision, and at the last accounts was still hanging. The Judge can not determine whether or not the creeks can be termed waters of the State.

PHIL WATSON, colored, alias Sleet, the negro who killed his wife in Covington last week, by splitting her head open with a hatchet, was captured last Saturday night, by Hugh Ingram, tollgate-keeper on the Lexington pike near Walton. The negro was taken back to Covington and turned over to the custody of the officers there.

WHEN the County Court, in obedience to the order of the Circuit Court, reported at the last term its action in the bounty fund case, the counsel for the bank men filed exceptions to the report, and asked for a peremptory attachment against the County Court. The Court took no further steps than to continue the case on the exceptions filed.

THE Directors of the North Kentucky Agricultural Association can congratulate themselves upon the success of their late Fair. We are informed that the members of the Board donated their services, and that the Secretary and Treasurer each donated a large portion of the allowance the Fair made them for their services, which put near $100 ahead of the expenses.

WERE it not generally known by the human family that editors keep a little hatchet lying before them, we would not tell the public that on our table is a muskmelon measuring 25 inches in length and 13 inches in circumference. THE usual drunk following pay-day on the Bellevue pike came off Tuesday. The hands received their money on Monday, and early Tuesday morning were in town laying in a stock of the extract of corn. It took them but a short time to reach the fighting notch, and two of them, who had been suddenly changed from shovelers to pugilists, opened the ball in the center of the pike, where the broken stone had been spread but a few days. After two or three rounds, the fighting became general, and the crowd of about twenty were knocking promiscuously. Men and hats were punched in every direction; but no one was badly hurt. One man came out of the melee minus a shirt, and his back cut in several places by the sharp corners of the stones with which he came in contact when down. In the afternoon the fighting became more desporate; bruised heads, black eyes and mashed noses were made numerous, and sticking-plaster and needle and thread were brought into requisition. All together, it was a disgraceful affair. No arrests.

Tribute of Respect.

The following resolutions were adopted by Speedwell Grange No 487:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Grand Master of the Universe, in His infinite wisdom, to remove from among us our worthy brother, Oscar Crisler, who was summoned to the Great Master above on the 17th day of July, 1877, therefore be it

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to the divine will, trusting in God that He will give us faith in Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved wife and children, reminding them that their loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to the Cincinnati Grange Bulletin and a copy to the Boone County RECORDER for publication.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for thirty days.

Covington Live Stock Market.

[Specially Reported for the Recorder.]

COVINGTON STOCK YARDS, September 10.

Cattle—Receipts for the past week were large, with a corresponding demand. 54 car loads came in Sunday. Shippers are selling at 4½@5¼c; extra butchers, 4@4½c; good butchers, 3½@4c; common butchers, 2½@3½c. Milch cows in better demand and are selling from $20 to $50, the latter price being paid only for a few extra good ones. Veal calves command some better price—best quality bringing 6¾c. per lb.

Sheep—Supply moderate with a light demand, except for stockers, for which the demand is greater than the receipts. Shippers' we quote at 4@4½c; butchers not buying enough to make quotations.—Stockers' selling at 3½@4c. Lambs—Receipts have fallen off a little, and there being a little better demand from the local buyers, prices have advanced a little, and are selling the extra lambs at 4½@4¾c; good at 3½@4c; common at 2½@3½c.

Hogs—Receipts have been quite light for the past two weeks, and the local buyers have been the only buyers, and the receipts have about supplied their wants, and there is not much change in the prices. Good hogs are selling at 5¼@5½c; a few stock hogs have been sold the past week at 4½c.

Louisville Trade Gossip.

Special Correspondence of the Recorder.

Business was better in all branches of trade last week than it has been before for several months, and our business men are in good spirits, and talk of the speedy return of good times. They say they have had all the business they could attend to. Although the Exposition has been open only one week, we can already feel the effects of it in the increase of trade.

The produce market has been very active all week, and the prices a shade higher.

The cattle market has been active, with an advance of 25 to 50 cents on the hundred. The best shippers' brought 4½@5½c; extra butchers', 4@4½c; common to good, 2@3½c.

Hogs were firm and active at 4½@5¼c. for the best, and 4@4½c. for common. All that were offered were sold, and a little scarce at that.

The sheep and lamb market was active and a shade higher. The best old sheep sold for 3½@4½c; stock sheep, 3@3½c; extra lambs, 4@4½c; common, 2½@3½c.

The horse and mule market continues to increase. There were a few more horses than usual on the market last week, but not enough to supply the demand by one-half. There were 90 or 100 head sold at auction at good prices, ranging from $10 to $125. There is a heavy and increasing demand for horses and mules. There was a full demand for all kinds of stock last week, and the offerings fair.

The receipts for the week were: Cattle, 875; hogs, 2,500; sheep and lambs, 9,000; mules, 300.

The leaf tobacco market was firm and active, with well sustained prices; the sales for the week were about 1,200 hhds.

Choice country butter brought 12½@20c. Fresh eggs per dozen, 11@12½c.

The poultry market was looking up a little. Chickens, $2@2 75 per dozen; ducks, $2@2 25 per dozen.

Young squirrels bring $1 50 per dozen.

There was no notable change in the prices of vegetables. The fruit market was active, with an advance of 25 to 50 cents on all kinds. Watermelons plenty and cheap. F. M. F.

Kentucky's Excellence as a State.

BURLINGTON, KY., Sept. 10, 1877.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

From my first travels of observation over this, my adopted State, I have ever held to the opinion that it excels all other portions of the globe in its adaptation to and production of vegetable and animal life, its climate, soil and mineral resources having the advantage over any other portion of the globe of the same extent of territory. This conclusion has not been hastily formed, but from actual observation, after having traveled over a large portion of country, and also from general information derived from other sources.

I had occasion a few weeks ago, to pass over the Short Line Railroad from Newport to Anchorage, passing through the counties of Kenton, Boone, Gallatin, Carroll, Oldham and Jefferson. While little has been said or sung of this portion of the State, yet its beauty and attractions to me were equal to the famous Blue-grass regions of Fayette, Bourbon, &c. The scenery is fine, variegated with hills and valleys, all laden with luxuriant crops for life and future. The Eagle, Kentucky River, Peewee Valley, and on to Louisville, can not be excelled in beauty, richness of soil and grandeur of improvements in any country.

Arriving at Anchorage some half hour ahead of time for the train, I took occasion, with a pleasant party, to visit and take a look at the Lunatic Asylum, some twenty minutes ride from the depot. I was perfectly astonished to find the buildings and grounds surrounding them so perfectly splendid and spacious, all of modern structure and style, surpassing anything of the kind I had ever seen before, and withal presenting a heavenlike appearance. One of our party exclaimed, while looking on its attractions so beautiful to the eye, that she would almost consent to be a lunatic herself to live in such a sweet looking place. It is well worth a trip of many miles to behold the sublime grandeur and contemplate the benevolent object of its dedication. If man, in his earthly nature, can so provide for the unfortunate as but for a day, what may not God, in His heavenly nature, provide for His children as for eternity?

On [illegible] return I stopped two days with my old [illegible] John O. Campbell, formerly of Burl[illegible], now of Liberty Station, who dis[illegible]d things in the way of living and [illegible]omfort, and who, from his hospit[illegible]ality and [illegible]ecial manner, makes one feel so [illegible]perfect at home. I would gladly have re[illegible]ained a few days to enjoy the benefits of [illegible]the mi[illegible] waters, equal to, if not superior to, the [illegible]ous Blue Lick, and the society [illegible]surroun[illegible] this delightful rural retreat. Of [illegible]es of attraction on this interesting line of railroad, this point stands first, from its delightful and healthful sulphur water; pure streams abounding with fish to delight those fond of angling; field and forest abounding with game for the sportsman with dog and gun. Ere long this will be a great place of resort for those seeking health and recreation from our heated and crowded cities during the summer. It is so accessable, being just two hours' ride from Cincinnati and Louisville. Try it next summer.

F. SMITH.

LETTER FROM MISSOURI.

HOLDEN, JOHNSON CO., MO.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Probably in the whole State of Missouri there is not a town in a more flourishing condition than Holden, Johnson County. It has recovered entirely from the reaction of the exit of the division, and is now having a sound, healthy growth, which is truly surprising when we take into consideration that every where else they are complaining of a terrible stagnation in business and hard times generally. I can not see why Holden is not destined to be the leading small town of the State. You may hunt the State over and you can not find a better class of business men. That, with good schools, all denominations of religious societies well represented, certainly should induce emigrants to make a visit to this point, if they are in search of a home in a flourishing, law abiding locality, where every inducement is offered for education, prosperity and civilization. I give below the amount of wheat, stock, &c., shipped in 1876, which will be far exceeded the present year:

	No. of cars.		No. of cars.
Corn	801	Broom corn	13
Wheat	127	Cattle	279
Rye	6	Hogs	225
Oats	6	Sheep	9
Castor beans	2	Mules and horses	3
Flax seed	1
Flour	3	Total No. cars,	1,471

The shipments from January 1st, 1877, till July 1st, 1877, are more than they were during the whole of 1876.

It will give your readers some idea of the productions of our soil to relate some of the products of the "grasshopper season. Many of our farmers put in their corn four times, the "hoppers" destroying it as fast as it grew. Consequently it was as late as July when some of the corn was planted, some being undisturbed from 22d of June. The July corn was a little soft, but that planted in the latter part of June was the finest corn I ever saw. The Bank of Holden offered $25 for the 12 best ears of corn, and a finer display of corn was never seen. I saw a pumpkin weighing 107 pounds, and a turnip weighing 16 pounds. All this was in the "grasshopper" season. MICAWBER.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Craw Valley.

The wind and hail storm a few weeks since damaged the crops to a considerable extent. Some of the tobacco patches are wrecks.

Fruit is scarce. There are very few plums and no apples on some orchards.

The last picnic at this place was a success. There was an abundance of provision on the ground and a large crowd to be fed.

The trustee of district No. 6, after an effort to make up a school has given up in dispare.

Hogs to feed for the fall market are scarce. Joe Riddell is the only man we can hear calling hogs these mornings and he calls like he is suffering from a severe cold or little faith in the market.

Your Waterloo correspondent will please N. B.: When the divisor of 72 was multiplied by 2, the quotient was 9; if 72 is divided by some number which gives 9 for a quotient, that number must be 1-9 of 72 which is 8; if the divisor of 8 after being multiplied by 2 before it was so multiplied it must have been ¼ of 8 which is 4.

Petersburg.

The Aurora Fair is over; it was a success; we have had our revenge over that chapter in Jonah. How strange it is that people will not read the the Bible, unless they are duped into it by some such reference as the one referred to above.

The school contract for this district for the ensuing year, five months, has been let by the Trustee to two young ladies, Misses Sallie Snyder and Mary Bradley. The boys are wearing their broadest grins, have thrown away the now superfluous shingles they were wont to wear under their coats, and are happy. We pity the young ladies, for the Brimstone Brigade will attend the school in a body.

Our old friend, Chas. Schramm, is wearing one beautiful black eye, though how he got it is a dark and bloody mystery to all but himself. However, as this is the season for fairs, black eyes, chewed ears and such ornamentations, he can congratulate himself that he is in the latest fashion.

The annual Conference of the M. E. Church South, of Ky., was held at Winchester, this year. Rev. Alexander Redd is sent to the Burlington circuit. He has preached at Williamstown for the past two years.

The German Lutherans congregated by steamboat and otherwise at Florence, Ind., last Sunday, to dedicate a new church building recently erected in that town. The Minnie took about two hundred people and ten or twenty kegs of beer. Fights were few, the slugging and other jollifications were extensive.

We are all standing trembling with suspense in view of the opening of Criminal Court next Monday; and it is amusing to see the terrified expression on our average law-breaker's face, while with tremulous voice he recites his "Now I lay me," whenever our formidable Sheriff, or one of his deputies, rides into town.

PUBLIC SALE!

Being engaged in business in the city, it has become necessary for me to dispose of some of the stock and implements on my farm, and I will therefore sell at public sale, at my residence near the Florence X-Roads, at 2 p. m., Saturday, September 29th, 1877, 3 Milch Cows, 15 Shoats, 3 Sows, 2 Horses, 2 Mules, 1 First Class Sulky Hay Rake, 1 Spring Wagon and Harness, 1 Road Wagon and Harness, 1 Hay Bed, 10 Ewe Lambs and a lot of Stock Ewes. Terms—All sums under $10 cash—$10 and over, a credit of 3 months will be given, the purchaser to give bond with approved security.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

BOONE CIRCUIT COURT, KENTUCKY.

Thomas A. Johnson, Plaintiff, against B. S. Johnson, Samuel T. Johnson, &c., Defendants. } Notice of Sale in equity

By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the September Term thereof, 1877, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on THURSDAY, the 4th day of October, 1877, at 1 o'clock P. M. or thereabout, proceed to offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on a credit of four and nine months, equal installments, at Mrs. King's hotel, in the town of Walton, the property mentioned in the judgment, to wit:

A small tract of land lying on the waters of Mud Lick Creek, Boone County, Ky., adjoining the lands of B. S. and S. B. Arnold, the Johnson mill tract, Mrs. Caroline Souther, Mrs. Mary Conner and others, containing 57 acres 2 roods and 13 poles.

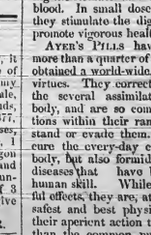
The purchaser will be required to give bond, with approved security, for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms.

Bonds payable to the undersigned.

J. W. DUNCAN,
51-2t Master Commissioner B. C. C.

For Rent.

I will offer publicly for rent, at the Court-house door in the town of Burlington, on SATURDAY, September 22, at 1 o'clock P. M., 1877, the Hotel Property in Belleview, Boone Co., Ky. (known as the property owned by John Rogers, dec'd). Said property will be rented until September 20, 1878. The person renting will be required to execute bond, with good security, payable in monthly installments. J. W. DUNCAN,
Master Commissioner B. C. C.
September 13, 1877. 51-2t



Notice to Delinquent Tax-Payers OF BOONE COUNTY.

Once more I insist on the delinquent taxpayers coming forward and paying their taxes. I have borrowed the money and paid your taxes, AND THIS MONEY MUST BE PAID, and if you fail to settle your taxes by the first day of October, 1877, the responsibility and cost will be yours, for I will levy on and sell property for taxes after that date. I have no desire to put any one to trouble and cost, but this money must be paid, and if you force me to the necessity of levy and sale, the responsibility will rest with you. H. J. Foster and Adam Finch are authorized to receive and receipt for taxes.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Family Physic, and for curing Costiveness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Foul Stomach, Breath, Headache, Erysipelas, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, for Purifying the Blood,

Are the most effective and congenial purgative ever discovered. They are mild, but effectual in their operation, moving the bowels surely and without pain. Although gentle in their operation, they are still the most thorough and searching cathartic medicine that can be employed: cleansing the stomach and bowels, and even the blood. In small doses of one pill a day, they stimulate the digestive organs and promote vigorous health.

AYER'S PILLS have been known for more than a quarter of a century, and have obtained a world-wide reputation for their virtues. They correct diseased action in the several assimilative organs of the body, and are so composed that obstructions within their range can rarely withstand or evade them. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of everybody, but also formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are, at the same time, the safest and best physic for children. By their aperient action they gripe much less than the common purgatives, and never give pain when the bowels are not inflamed. They reach the vital fountains of the blood, and strengthen the system by freeing it from the elements of weakness.

Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates, containing neither calomel nor any deleterious drug, these Pills may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar-coating preserves them ever fresh, and makes them pleasant to take; while being purely vegetable, no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

CUPID SCHOOLED.

When she was as gay as a linnet,
And I was as fresh as a lark,
Never a day but some minute
We met betwixt dawning and dark.

"Katie, and when shall we marry?"
"Marry?" she said with a sigh—
"That's cake and ribbons on Monday
And sorrow ere Saturday's by.

"You are as lean as a lizzard,
And I am as poor as a mouse;
Nothing per annum paid quarterly
Hardly finds rent for a house.

"Love and a crust in a cottage,
Capital! just for a pair;
What if the hut should grow populous,
How would the populace fare?

"Oh, aye! the uncle you reckon on,
Gouty, and rich, and unwed—
Dick, they wait ill, says the adage, who Wait for the shoes of the dead.

"Ah! if I loved you I'd risk it!
That's what you're thinking, I guess—
Why, I would risk it to-morrow,
Dick, if I cared for you less!"

The Supply of Wheat and the Demand.

Australia has much less surplus wheat than in 1875 crop. Her new crop will be harvested in December or January next, but promises a small surplus for export. It is now estimated that California will have no more than 100,000 tons of surplus wheat for export from the crop just harvested, against 600,000 from the crop of 1876. The report of the Russian crops have been so far generally favorable. The ports of Southwestern Europe, including the Black and Azov seas and the Danuban ports, have usually sent to to Northwestern Europe about 75,000,000 bushels of all kinds of grain. Some of the Russian produce may come out via the ports of the Baltic, but the railways will be required for the transportation of troops and war supplies, and it is probable that only a small portion of the usual 75,000,000 bushels of grain can come to Northwestern Europe via the ports of the Baltic.

The crop of wheat in the United Kingdom promises to be under an average. Great Britain has usually imported from Russia about twenty or twenty-two million bushels of wheat, and other countries of Northwestern Europe rather more than twenty-five million bushels, as the average exports of wheat from Russia for ten years have been about forty-nine million bushels. The French wheat crops in the South is poor, and more than the average imports of wheat in that country will probably be required. Holland and Belgium usually import from ten to twelve million bushels of wheat, and the United Kingdom has, for the last five years, imported of foreign wheat and flour from eighty million to one hundred and four million bushels. It is probable Holland, Belgium, France, Great Britain, Switzerland, Italy and Germany will require to import from one hundred and forty to one hundred and fifty million bushels of foreign wheat to supplement their own crops. All the countries outside of Russia and Turkey have never exported so large an amount of wheat. Will the total requirement of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Italy and Germany be fully an average quantity, and can America, including California and Oregon, Northern Russia, Germany, Algeria, Spain, Egypt, Turkey, Chili, Australia and British India have a sufficient surplus to export one hundred and forty to one hundred and fifty million bushels of wheat? With Russia left out, these countries have never exported in the aggregate in any year so large an amount of wheat; and, with a small crop in California, in Algeria no surplus, poor crop prospects in Australia, a small surplus from Spain, a famine in British India, what are the probable capabilities of these countries to supply a surplus of one hundred and fifty million bushels of wheat for export? The war may suddenly terminate by peace; but with peace Southeastern Europe could not probably recover from the effect of the war so as to make the usual average export.

A MILAN journal, giving its readers some account of the Molly Maguires, of America, narrates their origin as follows: "A half century ago an old woman in Ireland named Molly Maguire attained great skill in mining for potatoes in her neighbor's fields; but they combined and banished her under death penalty to America, where she gave birth to the present leaders of the Molly Maguires' Society, who have been so successful in coal mining and butchering our countrymen deluded into those regions in their search after fortune."

THERE was a queer accident at Bangor, Me., a few days since. A little boy walked between two buildings which are at first nine inches apart, and gradually come together, until he was wedged in and couldn't move. His 12-year-old sister tried to get him from an up-stairs window, but slipped and was also caught between the buildings when she had reached him. A large crowd gathered, and the children were only released after a hole three feet square had been cut through one of the buildings.

A CURIOUS case is before an East India court. A juggler in performance of the tricks gave a gun to a by-stander and told him to shoot. The gun was a dead load, and now the point is whether the by-stander can be held guilty or not.

An English Village of Nail Makers.

It is always dingy and depressing in these villages, which in a manufacturing sense, "feed" the Black Country towns. Sulphurous fumes taint the air and impart to it strange flavors, that may be tasted on the lips as the salt of the sea may be tasted miles distant from the coast line. The roads, which in dry weather resemble nothing so much as caked boot blacking, yield puddles and rivulets of ink when it rains—which hereabout it does with charitable frequency. There is "grit" everywhere.

The operatives, with a few exceptions, are women and children. Nor are these daughters of Vulcan mere make-believe workers. They are matrons—the mothers of the boys and girls that swarm about the hearth and forge (the youngest disporting with clinkers for playthings among the warm ashes)—and women old enough to be grandmothers, with hair stunted and gray. Young women, too; unmarried lasses, with colored handkerchiefs bound round their heads to keep their cherished tresses from smoke and singeing, and with another kerchief in lieu of a bodice, bare armed to the muscular shoulder; and one and all cheerfully "hard at it," tugging the bellows, attending the forge fire, or facing each other at the anvil, hammer in hand and with the glowing metal between. Some of these sooty Amazons, by a curious mechanical contrivance, work with two hammers at one and the same time; the one, the heavier, being set going by means of a treadle, and the lighter implement in the hand. They are making nails of all sizes, from the smallest brad to the 6-inch, bolt-headed "spike."

It is terribly hard work, and very badly paid. For instance, for making what are called "No. 6 Clasp," which weigh 200 to the pound, the pay is twopence a pound—shilling for six pounds—and if found to be as much as an ounce over weight, the work is "tailed," as it is called, to the extent of a penny in a shilling. A woman must work twelve or fourteen hours a day at the forge to earn about $1 75 a week, and not one in a hundred earns as much as $2 25 by her own unaided labor. But the inducement is that a child old enough to crack cherry stones with a hammer can assist at nail making, and "every little helps toward the mickle." Mere babies can earn fifty cents a week, and where there are six or eight children of various ages, the total earnings amount to something considerable. The houses are built for the purpose. To each one is attached a "stall" or "hearth," the separate rent of which is fourpence a week, a mite of a place, occupied chiefly with the hearth and bellows, and affording so little elbow room for the half dozen workers within that it appears a marvel that they are not scared all over the exposed part of their bodies by the flying sparks and red-hot chips. They are what are called free workers, being paid according to results.

Nails of every shape and form appear to be an article of commerce for which the demand seldom slackens, and it is impossible to produce too many of them. The merchant of whom the nailer buys his rod—the more or less substantial wire from which the goods are manufactured—is always willing to receive nails at the fixed price; and, in the case of industrious families, once a week may be seen the edifying spectacle of father and mother and a troop of youngsters, ranging in age from five to fifteen, walking in Indian file, and each the bearer of a load of rod iron, thin and thick, to be made up during the ensuing week.—Ironmonger.

Apples Every Other Year.

One year ago the country was flooded by an immense apple crop. They were not worth the cost of picking and housing in many places. Farmers having large orchards were tempted to give up raising apples as a farm crop, because when they are plenty the price is so low that there is little profit from the crop, and when the price is high there are no apples. Why it is so we shall not attempt to explain, but it seems to be a fact that apple trees bear about all their fruit in even years. In a few orchards in New England the trees bear in odd years, and in some of the extreme Western States the habit of bearing only in even years does not seem to be as yet fully established. The tendency, however, seems to be all that way. Now we wish every farmer and every farmer's son would make the experiment of picking off all the fruit from at least one apple tree this year, as soon as the fruit is as large as acorns; and from another tree pick off the larger portion at the same stage; and note the results. Whether the bearing years can be changed by this course, we are unable to say with certainty. It has been often claimed that the change might be made in this way. At any rate, the object is well worth working for. The trees should be manured and the ground cultivated to stimulate growth and the formation of fruit buds, as the crop of fruit is always determined the year previous.—Fruit Recorder.

"PULL out Bill!" shrieked an engineer's son to one of his playmates, a brakeman's boy, who was in imminent danger of getting smashed by his mother who was coming after him. "Git on the main line and give her steam! Here comes the switch-engine!" But before the juvenile could get in motion, she had him by the ear, and he was laid up with the hot box.

Our Women are Growing Plump.

Europeans generally concede that our American women are handsome, though they say they are so fragile that they early lose their freshness, and with it much of their beauty. They particularly remark the tendency of our women to grow thin with years, while we remark the tendency of their women to the accumulation of flesh as soon as they have passed their youth, and often even before that period. While we must allow that our women are, for the most part, lacking in roundness, there are few of us, we imagine, who would not infinitely prefer the new world slenderness to the old world stoutness. A medium between the two might be the standard of the becoming, and this medium we seem to be approaching, slowly perhaps, but steadily. The opinion of the thinness of the feminine part of the nation is based rather on what has been than on what is. The majority of our women are still too lean for beauty, but they are far less lean than they were twenty-five or even fifteen years ago.

American women take vastly better care of themselves than formerly. They have more acquaintance with hygienic laws, and hold them in far higher esteem. The days when they exposed themselves to dampness and wintry cold in thin slippers and silk stockings; when they abstained from flannels next the skin; when they pinched their waists to semi-suffocation; when they sacrificed comfort and health to what they conceived to be their appearances—those foolish and unhappy days have gone forever—have barely been known to the rising generation. Our women now have no mawkish and morbid notions as to themselves; they no longer think that to be unhealthy is to be attractive; that invalidism and interestingness are synonymous; that pale faces and compressed lungs are tokens of beauty. They dress seasonably; they wear thick boots and warm clothing in bad and cold weather; they allow themselves to breathe freely, and they find their looks improved, not injured by the wholesome change. There are exceptions, many of them, doubtless, but the rule is as we have described, and the exceptions are constantly diminishing. It may be safely said that all sensible women are becoming, if they have not yet become, converts to nature, and that they heed her behests, recognizing the great principle that what is not natural can not be beautiful.

Little more than a quarter of a century ago, young American women were ashamed to show a hearty appetite in public. They were infected with the Byronic philosophy; they wanted to be spiritual (as if all true spirituality did not rest on sound physical conditions) and to look elegantly wretched. Many of them had half their wish; they looked wretched, but not elegant. They were charged with drinking vinegar, eating slate pencils, and committing other monstrous absurdities. They may have been unjustly accused, but their theories warrant the accusation. All such nonsense belongs to the past. American women to-day eat as much as they want, and more wholesome food than they once ate; they walk more, court the open air, cultivate their bodies as well as their minds, believe in perfect digestion, unbroken sleep, the glow and glory of unblemished health. No wonder their proportions are fuller, their cheeks more blooming, their eyes brighter, their steps more elastic. The growth of the country and their common sense are serving them generously.

The scrawny, sallow, peaked woman, if she be educated and fairly placed, will ere long cease to be the type of the middle-aged American woman. With the steady growth of the republic, the increased ease of circumstances, and their complete health, American women will be comelier and rounder now than they have been. External and internal conditions assure this. They are not likely to become gross, as so many of their European sisters are; the character of the country, its institutions and its atmosphere, with their own temperament, will preserve them from that.—Harper's Bazar.

Your Local Paper.

You might nearly as well forget your churches, your academies and school houses, as to forget your local paper. It speaks to ten times the audience that your local minister does. It is read eagerly each day and week from beginning to end. It reaches you all, and, as it has a lower spirit and less wisdom than a sermon, it has a thousand times better chance at you. Lying as it does, on every table in almost every house, you owe to yourselves to liberally add to its support, and exact from it as heightened a character as you do from an educator in your midst. It is in no sense beneath notice and care—unless you yourself are beneath notice and care—for it is your representative. Indeed, in its character, it is the sublimation of the importance, interest and welfare of all. It is the aggregate of your own consequence, and you can not ignore it without miserably depreciating yourself.—New York Times.

A PROSELYTING negro Baptist recently approached a benighted Methodist brother in this way: "You've read the Bible, I s'pose?" "Yes." "Well, you've read in it of one John the Baptist, hasn't you?" "Yes." "Well, you never saw nothing about no John the Methodist, did you?" "No." "Well, den you see, dere's Baptist in de Bible, but dere ain't no Methedists, and de Bible's on my side."

How to be Handsome.

Most people like to be handsome. Nobody denies the greater power which any person may have who has a good face, and who attracts you by his good looks, even before a word has been spoken. And we see all sorts of devices in men and women to improve their good looks—paints and washes, and all kinds of cosmetics, including a plentiful annointing with dirty hair-oil.

Now, not everyone can have good features. They are as God made them; but almost anyone can look well, especially with good health. It is hard to give rules in a very short space, but in brief these will do:

Keep clean—wash freely and universally with cool water. All the skin wants is leave to act freely, and it will take care of itself. It's thousands of air-holes must not be plugged up.

Eat regularly and simply. The stomach can no more work all the time, night and day, than a horse; it must have regular work and regular rest.

Good teeth are a help to good looks. Brush them with a soft brush, especially at night. Go to bed with the teeth clean. Of course, to have white teeth, it is needful to let tobacco alone. Every woman knows that. And any powder or wash for the teeth should be very simple. Acids may whiten the teeth, but they take off the enamel or injure them.

Sleep in a cool room, in pure air. No one can have clean skin who breathes foul air. But, more than all, in order to look well, wake up the mind and soul. When the mind is awake, the dull, sleepy look passes away from the eyes. I do not know that the brain expands, but it seems to. Think, read—not trashy novels, but books that have something in them. Talk with people who know something; hear lectures and learn by them.

It is wisdom to choose your friends early, because life is short.

WIDDER GREEN'S LAST WORDS.

"I'm going to die," says the Widder Green,
"I'm going to quit this sinful scene;
It ain't no place for me to stay
In such a world as 'tis to-day.
Such works and ways is too much for me,
Nobody can let nobody be.
The girls is flounced from top to toe,
And that's the hull o' what they know.
The men is mad on bonds an' stocks,
Swearin' an' shootin' an' pickin' locks,
I'm real afraid I'll be hanged myself
If I ain't laid on my final shelf.
There ain't a creatur but knows to-day
I never was a lunatic any way.
But since crazy folks all go free
I'm dreadful afraid they'll hang up me!
There's another thing that's pesky hard;
I can't go in a neighbor's yard
To say, 'How be you?' or borrow a pin,
But what the paper'll have it in.
'We're pleased to say the Widder Green
Took dinner on Tuesday with Mrs. Keene,'
Or, 'Our worthy friend Mrs. Green's gone
Down to Barkhamsted to see her son.'
Great Jerusalem! what a stir
Without a-sinin' some feller's fur?
There ain't no privacy, so to say,
No more than if this was Judgment Day.
And as for meetin'—I want to swear
Every time I put my head in there;
Why, even 'Old Hundred's' spiled and done
Like everything else under the sun;
It used to be solemn and slow,
'Praise to the Lord from men below,'
Now it goes like a galloping steer,
Higgle-diddle, diddle! there and here.
No respect to the Lord above
No more'n if he was hand and glove
With all the creatures he ever made,
And all the jigs that ever was played.
Preachin', too—but here I'm dumb—
But I tell you what! I'd like it some
If good old Parson Nathan Strong
Out o' his grave would come along,
An' give us a stirrin' taste of fire—
Judgment and justice is my desire.
'Taint all love and sickish sweet
That makes this world or t'other complete
But law! I'm old! I'd better be dead
When the world's a-turnin' over my head,
Spirits talkin' like tarnal fools,
Bibles kicked out o' deestrict schools,
Crazy creatures a murderin' round—
Honest folks better be under the ground.
So fare ye well! this sinfully scene
No more'll be pestered by Widder Green."

Revision of the English Bible.

It is more than two centuries and a half since the Authorized Version of the Scriptures was given to the world. During this period, attempts at revision or a new translation have often been made by individuals or denominations, but never by a body of men selected for the purpose, who represented different branches of the Protestant Church, and were varied enough in origin and character to avoid local or sectarian influences. The work now in progress on both sides of the water professes to be of this kind, and for this reason has fair prospects of success.

But there are many who ask why the effort should be made, at the serious risk of disturbing people's confidence in the Word of God. One answer may be found in the mere length of time since King James' companies finished their work. In that long period, Biblical literature has advanced equally with all other branches of knowledge. Indeed, the whole science of Biblical criticism has been constructed within two centuries, and it has made such progress that nearly all the materials which are thought to be anywhere in existence have been put to use. Very many questions, on which either ignorance or doubt formerly rested, have been settled by the concurrent judgment of men competent to form an opinion. And now, that we are so much better able than the most learned men in 1611 to say what is and what is not the Word of God, it seems right that plain people should have the benefit of this knowledge. Indeed, this alone would be a sufficient reason for revision.

But there are others. The Authorized Version, although doubtless the best that was ever made in any language, ancient or modern, is still far from perfect. Since it was made, the laws of the Greek and Hebrew languages have been subjected to incessant investigation, and it surely is not presumptuous to say that many points in etymology and syntax are better understood now than they were even by the giants of the post-Elizabethan period. It is impossible that the labor of so many scholars should be fruitless. Besides, the rules of the Jacobean translators hampered them. Their distribution into a number of companies prevented an exact conformity of usage in rendering the same words and phrases, even when variation was not sought nor desired. Moreover, the inevitable progress of the language has marred their work. Words and phrases have become obsolete or have changed their meaning, so that the unlearned either attach no meaning to them or understand them wrongly.

The great security of the present enterprise, and the only hope of its success, lies in the fact that it is not an attempt at a new translation, but a revision. A fresh version of the Scriptures, in whole or in part, by a good scholar, is always an acceptable and useful thing to students, for it is in various ways instructive and suggestive. But not so if it be intended to supplant the common version, for that has too many excellencies, and is too dear to the hearts of all English-speaking people, ever to give way to any product of modern scholarship, be its claims what they may. But, as our present Bible is itself the result of successive revisions by various hands, the roots in some cases running back as far as Wicklyffe, so it has been supposed that a fresh revision, prosecuted in the same line as those that went before, might remove some of the defects without impairing any of the excellencies of what, by common consent, is considered the chief of the English classics.

The work in hand, then, is to be considered strictly in accordance with its profession as a revision. Needless changes are carefully avoided. Many passages which would surely be rendered otherwise were the work an original one, are left just as they stand, because they have been consecrated by the usage of centuries, and the gain secured by minute accuracy would not compensate for the shock to old and sacred associations. And when changes are made, it is after the manner and in the spirit of the old translators. The new word, whenever it is possible, is taken from the vocabulary of King James' day. Care, too, is used to preserve the rhythm which makes the common version so eminent a model of English, and so fair a representative of the majesty and grace of the original. It would be too much to claim that this effort will prove to have been in all cases successful, but that it is honestly and earnestly made admits of no doubt. The notations of chapter and verse will be retained in the margin for convenience of reference, but the awkward dislocations produced by severing what belongs together, and by printing the whole as a series of minute paragraphs, will be avoided. So italic letters will be more sparingly used, because the words to be supplied, wherever they are necessarily implied in the original, will be printed as an integral part of the text.

It is hoped, therefore, to make the book more readable, intelligible and attractive, without losing any of the simplicity, strength and dignity which belong to its present form. In a few cases fidelity to truth may require some changes which will offend the ear of certain readers, but upon the whole it is believed that the great majority of those who use the volume will not be disturbed, but rather helped, by the revision. For all purposes of doctrinal discussion, of private study or public edification, the new form will be as useful as the old, if not more so. Certainly the labors of mere English students will be facilitated by the fact that, as far as possible, the same English word is used to represent the same original word wherever it occurs.

The catholic character of the undertaking is shown by the fact that Englishmen and Americans, Churchmen and Dissenters, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists and Baptists all take part in it, and in two instances even scholars belonging to Unitarian connections. Whatever infirmities may attach to the completed work, it is certain that none of them will be due to sectarian partialities, or to the fancied interests of any one body of men.

The work was begun in the year 1870 by a committee appointed by the Convocation of Canterbury. This committee associated with itself a number of the leading scholars of the various communions in the United Kingdom. These divided themselves into two companies, one for the Old Testament, the other for the new, which meet for four days every month at the Deanery of Westminster. The expenses of printing, &c., are defrayed by the Syndics of the University Press, who are to have the copyright of the work when completed. In 1872 American co-operation was suggested, and two companies of revisers were called together, who since that time have been diligently at work, meeting for two, sometimes three, days in each working month at rooms in the Bible House, New York. Their expenses are met by the voluntary contributions of persons interested in the subject. A full and interesting account of the origin and character of the whole work is given in a pamphlet by the Rev. Dr. Schaff, the President of the American Revision Committee, published by the Harpers (third edition, 1877). The limit of time assigned for the completion of the enterprise was ten years, and it is hoped that a longer time will not be required. The New Testament has already been gone over, and a second revision is now in progress. Of the Old Testament, the English revisers have finished the Pentateuch, Psalms, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and several of the historical books. The work, therefore, is going forward, not perhaps with all the speed that is desirable, but yet with a fidelity, care and thoroughness which can hardly be exceeded.

The following list of the American revisers does not include the lamented Drs. H. B. Hackett and Taylor Lewis, who have gone to their rest; nor Drs. T. J. Conant, C. E. Stowe and C. V. A. Van Dyck, Beirut, who are hindered, the two former by ill health and the last by his remoteness, from taking an active part in the work that is done.

The general officers of the American Committee are Dr. Philip Schaff, President, and Dr. Geo. E. Day, Secretary.

Publication of Law.

The following, from the Vanceburg Courier, is sound talk:

That our State is sorely in need of a law requiring the publication of Sheriffs' and Master Commissioners' Sales, notices of partition, Statements of Insurance Companies, Banks, etc., Exhibits of Receipts and Expenditures and of corporate bodies, Administrators' Guardians' Notices and Settlements, Corporate Elections, etc., is evident from the most casual observation.

Many times valuable property is sold at a sacrifice, and interested parties made to bear heavy losses because the property to be sold had not been properly advertised. Debtors imposed upon and creditors suffer loss because of a want of knowledge of the fact that firms have been dissolved.

Master Commissioners' sales are not well attended because people did not learn that the sale would take place. Insurance Companies and banking institutions are "broke" with their hands full of the people's money, because they are not compelled to exhibit to the world a periodical statement of their financial resources. Railroad and turnpike officials steal the taxes paid by the people and give no account of their expenditures, unless they see proper to do so. Administrators and Guardians embezzle the funds of their wards, and public opinion holds them in esteem as gentlemen of first class, because of no information having been given to the contrary. Cliques keep the offices in corporate bodies, the share holders dare not make them afraid or ashamed, because there is no law requiring their status to be examined. States whose legislation is lauded by the masses, and whose people are well posted, have passed laws compelling "bosses" to exhibit the resources of their several concerns to the public. The "star of our Union," where enterprise, thrift and progress bespeaks a prosperous and happy people, have presented through their public journals the internal machinery of every department of their Governments and their corporate institutions. Let the press of Kentucky educate the people to fight for their interests, instead of listening to the crack of the whip of some political tricksters, whose ambition to serve the people and be patriotic grows out of a sordid desire to equal in filthy lucre the most avaricious wretch. Let statesmen be sent to the Capitol and blackguards to the devil, or some other convenient seaport, and soon Kentucky will mount to the plane of her sisters in this Republic; instead of hordes of ignoramuses trying to sell their franchises, we will have a population of intelligent voters who can not be deluded and ground to powder by the heel of party despots. Give us pure minded patriots whom the wealth of England might not corrupt and the reform the people desire will come unasked. Let the journalists of the State act in concert, and inform the candidates for office that, unless they intend to legislate for the interest of the people, they will not give them their support. The vast assemblage of editors which congregated at Frankfort might have done their country better service, if they had only thought of it, than rendering it necessary to revictual the Capitol. We hope that our patriotic contemporaries will not "sit down" on this matter, but crack their whips in the interest of meritorious reform in the laws of the State.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

W. L. RIDDELL,
Editor and Proprietor.

BURLINGTON, KY., SEPTEMBER 20.

With this impression closes the second volume of the RECORDER, and we desire to thank our patrons for their favors during the past twelve months. During the two years which the paper has been published, although under many disadvantages, it has never failed to appear on the regular day of publication. We have labored to furnish a sheet which would merit the support of the citizens of the county, and that we have in some degree succeeded, we take as an evidence the fact that our subscription list has been gradually growing, while our advertisers are becoming more numerous. The past year has been marked with failures in all classes of business, and the newspapers have had their share of the "hard times" to withstand, and it has kept many of them struggling and exerting every muscle to weather through, coming out with nothing to show for the year's labor; to this class we belong. For the past two years we have given the RECORDER our entire time and attention, and we feel that we are now better prepared to make it of more value to our readers than heretofore. Some writer has said, to make a newspaper interesting, make the labor of the publisher interesting. This is done by a liberal and encouraging patronage, and we hope that during the next year our labors may be made more encouraging by an increased support in the county. We now leave you, again thanking all who have in anywise contributed to the support of the paper during the past, and request them to continue their aid which has been highly appreciated by us.

THE mail route between Covington and Florence was changed last Monday, the mail being sent out to Greenwood by the way of the Southern Railroad. The result was not a single paper and but one letter made its appearance at the Burlington office. The people generally congratulated themselves, though, that they got the old rusty mail-sack back. If this is a sample of railroad mail carrying, we want no more of it over this way. The most direct and reliable route is the one just abandoned. Greenwood Station is entirely too near the city for the transportation of the Florence and Burlington mails to be reliable, for the reason that the mail agent on the train has not sufficient time after he leaves the depot in the city, and before arriving at the above named station, to go through and assort the mail in a correct manner. Over this way we are as one for the old route.

THE general merchandising business, for the past few days, has been moderately brisk. Groceries are firm. Flour is reported steady and prices ranging from $6 50 to $7. The supply of wheat has been reduced and it is now selling at prices ranging from $1 20 to $1 30 per bushel. The demand for corn is steady, it commanding as high as 49 cents. Choice butter is bringing 25 cents. The price of coffee has varied but little for some time, and the best grades now sell for 23 and 24 cents per pound by the sack. Sugars have made no material change, and granulated sells at 11 cents by the quantity.

AT the meeting of the United States Senate on the 15th of this month, there will be thirty-nine Republicans thirty-three Democrats and one Independent, Judge Davis, of Illinois. There are two vacancies from Louisiana and one from South Carolina, all contested, and which, added to the above seventy-three completes the Senate, which is composed of seventy-six members. The condition of Senator Morton's health will not admit of his taking his seat, which will reduce the Republican majority to five, not counting Judge Davis on either side.

THERE seems to be some trouble about the postoffice in Covington. A special agent, Brewster Cameron, has been detailed to investigate the irregularities with which the force at that office is charged, and he comes out in a card saying in substance there is nothing wrong in the machinery of the office.

THE Turks still occupy Plevna, around which, during the past ten days, there has been some desperate fighting. At one time the Russians were sanguine of success at that point, and had succeeded in capturing, and for a few hours occupied some of the redoubts. But just as the Russians fancied victory was smiling upon them, the tide of battle turned and they were forced to abandon the works they had captured.

THE dilatory movements of the forces engaged on the frontier is still subjected to much comment. Just why Chief Joseph and his small band of warriors are permitted to continue their depredations can not be understood. The United States troops greatly outnumber the Indians, and still they do not restrain them. There can be but one reason, and that is lack of Generalship on the part of General Howard.

A FEW days since, the citizens of Auglaize County, Ohio, were startled by a report that the County Treasurer had been overpowered by masked ruffians at night, gagged, taken to his office and compelled to open the safe from which they took about thirty thousand dollars. A large force of detectives were at once set working up the case, and it has turned out that the Treasurer stole the money himself and is now in custody.

THE following is the description of the new counterfeit fifty-dollar United States notes, as described by the Assistant Treasurer at Chicago in a telegram received at the Treasury Department: Series of 1874, No. E 352,009, female heads coarse, work on hair and crown poor, the word "unum" very indistinct, lathe work in upper right hand corner very poor, lathe work in center and on back good, shading in and the words "United States" scratchy.

GOV. CHAMBERLAIN, of South Carolina, emphatically denies the charges against him by Miles G. Parker, ex-Treasurer, stating that he had entered into a ring to rob the State. He says he is ready and willing at all times to answer to the proper authorities for his acts while in South Carolina.

THE Fisheries Commission, sitting at Halifax, has decided against the Canadian claim for compensation for the privilege of buying bait, ice and supplies, accorded to United States fishermen by the treaty; a somewhat absurd claim when the supplies are all paid for. This is one of the principal claims of the Dominion.

A Cure for Love.

Take 12 ounces of dislike, 1 pound of resolution, 2 ounces of the powder of experience, a long sprig of time, 14 drachms of the spirits of dishonor, 1 quart of cool consideration; set them over a gentle fire of love, sweeten it with the sugar of forgetfulness, skim it with the spoon of melancholy, put it in the bottom of your heart, cork it with the cork of determination, and let it remain, and you will instantly find relief and be restored to your right senses. These ingredients are to be procured of the apothecary at the House of Understanding, on Prudent street, in the Parish of Contentment.

NOTICE!

The Stockholders of the Burlington and Bellevue Turnpike Road Co. are hereby notified that the greater portion of said road will, in a short time, be completed, and when so completed, according to contract, to be taken off the contractors hands. Now, that the Board of Directors may be able to comply with their agreement and contract, it is therefore necessary to call for the remaining portion of subscription stock. Those who have responded promptly have paid four equal installments, and now the fifth and last call is made to be paid within twenty days. Stockholders who are in arrears will please make arrangements to meet their obligation without fail and in due time. By order of the Board, Sept. 20th, 1877,

Boots & Shoes.

I WISH TO ANNOUNCE TO THE CITIZENS OF BOONE COUNTY, KY., THAT I AM FULLY PREPARED TO MEET THEIR WANTS WITH AS GOOD, SOLID, HONEST STOCK OF ALL LEATHER BOOTS AND SHOES AS WAS EVER OFFERED IN THIS SECTION.

IT NEEDS NO ARGUMENT TO CONVINCE YOU OF YOUR NEEDS IN THE LINE OF BOOTS AND SHOES, AND THE QUESTION OF WHOM AND WHERE TO BUY FOLLOWS IMMEDIATELY UPON THE ADMITTED NECESSITY OF HAVING BOOTS AND SHOES. THE ANSWER IS PLAIN—BUY OF THAT MERCHANT WHO IS BEST ABLE TO SUPPLY YOUR WANTS AT THE VERY LOWEST PRICES.

I CLAIM TO BE THAT MAN.

IT IS VERY EASY TO BUY GOODS, BUT TO BUY THEM RIGHT—TO BUY GOOD GOODS, ADAPTED TO THE WANTS OF YOUR CUSTOMERS IN STYLE, FIT, QUALITY AND PRICE IN QUITE ANOTHER THING, AND REQUIRES A THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE OF GOODS, VALUES AND THE WANTS OF YOUR CUSTOMERS. SUCH KNOWLEDGE WE CLAIM TO POSSESS.

WE INTEND TO HAVE THE LION'S SHARE OF THE BOOT AND SHOE TRADE IN THIS SECTION, IF GOOD, HONEST GOODS, PLENTY OF THEM, AND LOW PRICES WILL DO IT.

IF BUYING ECONOMICALLY IS ANY OBJECT, YOU DON'T WANT TO SPEND ONE DOLLAR FOR BOOTS AND SHOES UNTIL YOU HAVE THOROUGHLY EXAMINED OUR STOCK AND PRICES.

WE DON'T EXPECT TO PREVENT COMPETITION, BUT WE DO PROPOSE TO SELL THE VERY BEST GOODS IN SOUTHEASTERN INDIANA, AND THE MOST OF THEM, AND THINK THAT, TO ACCOMPLISH THESE ENDS, NEEDS THE FOLLOWING REQUISITES: GOOD GOODS, PLENTY OF THEM, LOW PRICES, AGREEABLE TREATMENT, AND NO MISREPRESENTATIONS TO EFFECT SALES.

YOU ARE ONE AND ALL RESPECTFULLY INVITED TO CALL AT THE SIGN OF THE BIG RED BOOT, RISING SUN, IND., AND FIND OUT THE TRUTH OF THE ABOVE.

Yours truly,

A Card.

To the Patrons and Farmers of Boone:

I take this method of informing you that I am now located at the Covington Stock Yards in the interest of the farmers. I have secured the services of my father (L. Conner), who has had about twenty-five years' experience in the stock business, and, by the aid of his services, I think, with the agreement made between the County Grange and me, which agreement I am to be governed by, I will be able to give satisfaction to all who will favor me with their stock or orders for stock. Will sell or buy on a commission of 75 cents per head on cattle, 10 cents on hogs, 6 cents on sheep and lambs, and 25 cents on calves. Yours, W. M. CONNER.

"Kriminal Kourt."

The fall term of the Boone Criminal Court commenced last Monday. The crowd that assembled that day was uncommonly small, and so was the amount of business disposed of. Judge McManama, in company with Hon. M. Hamilton, put in his appearance just in time to get a place at the first dinner table at the Boone house.

It was after 1 o'clock when court was opened and the grand jurors called, the following persons coming forward and taking their places in the jury-box:

G. W. Terrill,	N. B. Stephens,
Roswell Randall,	John T. Craven,
Benj. M. Allen,	Wm. Watts,
John A. Roberts,	H. A. Hicks,
James Rogers,	S. A. Tanner,
S. P. Brady,	F. A. Utz,
J. J. Weaver,	Jonas Rouse,
S. J. Hedges,	J. A. Botts.

N. B. Stephens, being Supervisor of Roads, was excused, and Z. T. Kelly was put on to fill the vacancy. The jury was then sworn, and the Judge proceeded to give them instructions, which took one hour and fifteen minutes. In his charge, the Judge called the jurors' attention to the light in which the State is viewed abroad in regard to crime, and said that crime is more common now in this Commonwealth than at any other time in its history; that since his last visit to this county, a man had been taken from the County Jail by a mob and hanged; and that but a few weeks since four men were taken from the Newcastle Jail by an armed mob and hanged, and that against one of the four there was not evidence enough to convict him of a breach of the peace; that the reason of all this is, the people have lost confidence in the juries of the country, and, as a last resort, for self-protection, have adopted mob violence. His Honor then took up the several offenses as they are presented by the statutes, explained them, and informed the jury briefly of their duty till he came to the crime of false swearing. This he said he regarded as the most conspicuous and dangerous of any in the whole catalogue of crimes, and one for which a person should be severely prosecuted. While upon the offense of false swearing, he referred to a trial upon that charge in this county in a manner that was anything but complimentary to the jury that rendered the verdict of acquittal. The law against the selling of whisky to an inebriate was specially referred to by the Court, and the jury given to understand they should not fail to indict for its violation. The offense of carrying concealed deadly weapons was severely condemned, and the jury urged not to fail to indict simply because an accused person is of good family, and if found guilty will have to go to jail. The charge, as a whole, was exceedingly comprehensive.

Capt. Terrill was appointed foreman and the jury retired to their room to commence looking into and investigating the crimes that have been stalking about the county since the last court.

Col. W. G. Terrell, accompanied by his counsel, Col. W. S. O'Neal and D. S. Hounshell, had come in during the delivery of the charge to the grand jury, and immediately upon its retiring, Col. O'Neal moved the Court to note of record the mandate of the Court of Appeals in the case of the Commonwealth vs. W. G. Terrell, to redocket and continue the case till next term, which was done.

Several of the Constables and Justices of the Peace made their reports.

Court then adjourned.

The attendance Tuesday was limited to jurors, witnesses and those in trouble with the Commonwealth. The force of attorneys was composed of M. J. Dudley, Commonwealth's Attorney Monfort, Geo. G. Hughes and F. Riddell. The petit juries were made up of the following persons:

Wm. Lancaster,	J. H. Glacken,
Clinton Gaines,	Thos. A. Marshall,
J. F. Grant,	Jas. T. Grant,
Cassius Cropper,	W. T. Smith,
A. F. Crigler,	Thos. D. Goodridge,
E. Cropper,	John Stephens,

composing jury No. 1, and

J. O. Huey,	B. R. Gaines,
J. C. Beall,	T. B. Rouse,
Cy Crisler,	Ben Kelly,
W. B. Underwood,	N. B. Stephens,
Joe Graves,	Ben Rouse,
Ben Rice,	Wm. Rouse.

The Court then commenced calling the docket. The first case disposed of was the Commonwealth vs. Thos. Pullilove, who was fined $20 and costs for gaming.

In the afternoon, the first case called was the Commonwealth against John Goodridge for assault and battery. W. H. Hayes, of Francisville, being the recipient of the "salt and batter" administered by Goodridge. Several witnesses were examined, the case argued and submitted to a jury, which thought Goodridge had done something contrary to the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth, and assessed his fine at $13 and costs.

The next case was the Commonwealth vs. W. H. Hayes. This was an indictment growing out of the trouble that orested the Goodridge indictment. Hayes, in the matter of dollars and cents, fared a shade better than Goodridge. Hayes' fine was fixed at $10 and costs.

These cases were about the only ones of interest, or in which any defense was made.

The State's attorney, thus far, has not struck a bonanza in the line of fines and forfeitures, but, on the contrary, his pay in this bailiwick is less than common.

The grand jury is composed of sixteen business men, and it seems they mean business or are making business for somebody else. Some of the boys who have visited their sanctum consider them an inquiring set of fellows. They think they are getting pretty well posted in regard to many things which are calculated to make the next term of court interesting to some of the natives.

JUDGE MCMANAMA was slightly mistaken about a man's being taken from the jail here since last term of court and hung. At least no one about here has any knowledge of the circumstance.

IF the multitude of witnesses journeying toward the grand jury room, this week, signifies anything, the indictments will pan out lively, and the next term of court will be a little more lively.

THE business men of Lawrenceburg are anxious that a turnpike be built from the ferry on this side to Gainesville. THE Burlington String Band, accompanied by a strong body guard, took a serenading tour through Beech Grove locality, in Kenton County, last Friday night. REV. R. K. GRAVES, a native of this county, but who of late years has resided in Newport, died last Wednesday night after a brief illness. Mr. Graves had an extensive circle of friends and relatives in this county who grieve over his sudden and unexpected death. The remains were brought to Bullet sville and the funeral preached by Rev. OUR town druggist, A. W. Smith, while out riding a few evenings since, met with a slight accident. He was driving leisurely along when his nag took a shear upon him and turned as though going through a gate on the road side, while Mr. S. kept straight ahead till he alighted head foremost in a pool of mud and water, submerging his silk hat and about half his person. His wife and child maintained their position in the buggy. When the druggist extricated himself it was hard to tell what kind of a compound he was. No damage done except to the hat and clothes.

On last Wednesday a week, as Mr. Ben Clore and his family were on the road to the city, his horses became frightened near the residence of John Stephens and ran away, throwing Mr. C. and the ladies from the vehicle, inflicting several painful bruises on each. Several of our enterprising citizens attended the Lexington Fair. Among them were Col. G. C. Graddy, the graduate in mathematics through all the branches, including calculus; Willis B. Arnold, who captured the premium at the Florence Fair for grace and beauty; and his Honor Lieut. Gov. J. Cave Arnold, merchant prince of Gainestown and high candidate for matrimony. It is believed that his trip to the Fair means more than he is willing to admit; and, judging from the care with which he has pressed and preserved a bouquet received from that section, we feel constrained to think a certain lady is the inducement of his visit. Success to you, Governor.

Henry Rice, Esq., a prominent young farmer from Missouri, who has been residing in our neighborhood since last spring, has returned home to prepare for a trip to Texas. Petersburg.

The school fever rages. Prof. F. P. Walton opened the Academy opposite John W. Berkshire's, on the turnpike, last Monday. Pine Academy, it is called; not so much on account of the pine forest surrounding the stately edifice as for the sake of the one that was annihilated to get enough lumber to build the Academy of. The public school in town was opened last Wednesday; would have been opened Monday previous, but, owing to the sticky nature of the half-dried paint, the tender-hearted ladies who boss the ranche were afraid some of their little pupils might get stuck fast in the aforesaid paint, like any other insect. Prof. W. R. Terrill will open a school in town as soon as he can get a suitable house, and then rumors are afloat that one or two more schools may spring into existence in the near future. We are an educated tribe now, but look out in a year or two more.

Porter and a few choice congenial spirits, last Sunday afternoon in "korkus" assembled, with a whereas and a resolve, declared the bells upon the cows running at large upon the streets a "nuseness," in that they impaired the lacteal virtues of the "animile," and broke the peaceful Sabbath slumbers of the aforesaid "korkusers."

By the way, Porter has been laid up with a sore foot about ever since his disappearance with that lady some six weeks since. The supposition is that she stepped on him.

The steamer Champion No. 9 carried a big load of fourth-class lunatics to Louisville, last Sunday, and brought them back Tuesday. They went down to see a veritable "reed shaken by the wind," i. e., to see the man who hooked a Presidency and made off with it, formally open a one-horse Exposition that has already been open to the public for two weeks. The consideration was attractively small, being covered by a one-dollar greenback.

A man can get sick now with a tolerable degree of safety, as we have quite recently shipped two physicians off to colleys from this immediate vicinity.

The "poet larial" of this neck of the woods has composed a poem, which he has dedicated to Prof. F. P. Walton. It is almost a paraphrase, according to our criticism, of a favorite ancient hymn, but as Frank says it especially strikes his fancy, we will let it go at that, and will insert the first stanza as a sort of opening chorus:

"I want to be a pedagogue,
And with the children stand;
A dog-eared speller on my desk,
A cow-hide in my hand."

Florence.

There have been several interesting trials here of late before our Magistrates. Columbus Rouse was tried before Judge Yager and a jury, for striking John Aylor with a stone and was fined fifty dollars and costs. Last Saturday, Julius Snyder sued several of our nice young men for whisky bills, contracted some years ago, and got judgment against several of them; others plead infancy and stated that they were not weaned at the time of contracting the bills, and as their mammas were away from home and they could get no refreshments from the maternal fount, they were necessarily compelled to go to Jule's and receive from a bottle to which they were allowed to go.

It is reported here that the depot at Greenwood will not be received by the Directors of the road because it does not come up the contract—it is believed to be unsafe.

Mr. Oscar Conrad has got the contract for carrying the mail from here to Greenwood for the ensuing year, at $100 50.

The members of the Odd Fellows Lodge paid the Walton Lodge a visit last Saturday night. Bro. Mike House delivered a most admirable lecture on the miseries and blessings of a bachelor's life, a subject which, from experience, he is fully competent to handle.

There are several weddings about to take place here shortly. According to Dame Rumor all the marriageable ladies in the neighborhood are making their wedding clothes.

Elder Rowe, of Akron, Ohio, is holding a protracted meeting at the Christian Church. The attendance has been very good, but there has been no additions.

Quite a number of persons from this place went to Lexington last week to visit the Fair and take their first ride over the Southern Road. Among the number were Messrs. Tom Sweetnam, Milt Wilhoit and Uncle Billy Carpenter. They visited the Lunatic Asylum, and Uncle Billy says that he could hardly get the Superintendent to let Milt and Tom come home, because he said they would be back soon anyhow.

We heard that the wives of the late Brigham Young had a meeting, last week, and elected Omar T. Porter, of Petersburg, as Brigham's successor. His success is said to be due to his good looks and his fondness for ladies society—more prominently shown of late by his frequent buggy rides with them in the Petersburg neighborhood. He wouldn't consent to take charge of the family unless he was allowed appoint his own Bishops, who are to have seven wives each. The Bishops are Mike House, Charles Schramm, Bob Willis, Felix Moses, Wallace Garrison, Jim Crisler and Geo. McNeal. When it is recollected that these Bishops have been running around after wives so many years unsuccessfully, it will be a consolation to their friends to know that they are to be so well provided for in their old age.

Miss Flora McDannold, of Gallatin County, is visiting the Misses Hoggins.

BURLINGTON, KY., SEPTEMBER 20.

DYING SUMMER.

The hollyhocks have just put on
Their bonnets stiff and white;
The sunflower flaunts its fringe of gold;
The purple phlox is bright;
The wheat-fields flow in amber waves,
Touched by the wandering breeze;
And gold and crimson torches glow,
Lit in the maple trees.
The sumach-trees are brushed with red,
And emerald wild-vines turn
To whisps of pink and yellow flame,
And in the shadows burn.
And soon we'll hear the autumn rain,
Its slow and heavy throbs;
The weird, wild winds will flutter by,
With low, half-human sobs.
No more the footsteps, silver-shod,
Of dancing summer showers,
But autumn shedding mournful tears
Above the buried flowers.

The pallid days go hand in hand,
With silent-footed eyes;
The dying year looks sadly back,
Through showers of falling leaves,
To purple glades of summer-woods,
To soft and fragrant air,
To velvet shadows tangled with
The sunshine's golden hair.
But now the lonesome days come down,
The gladness all is done,
And summer drops her withered crown,
And flies toward the sun.

A Valuable Secret.

Tom Ballard, the famous counterfeiter, who is now serving the third year of his thirty years' term at Albany, has renewed an offer he made in 1875 without it's receiving any attention from Secretary Bristow. He proposed to reveal to the government, without promise of reward or release, unless it should be voluntarily offered him after testing his process, a secret which would render counterfeiting impossible. The greatest secret, Ballard says, in the making of our present paper money is the weaving in of the blue and red fibers; but this kind of paper is now too easily made by hand. His remedy is a machine (which would cost $30,000) which would make paper of so superior a quality that it could not possibly be imitated by hand. At present, when the ink is washed from the face and back of a $1,000 bill, it does not differ in appearance from a $1 bill. Ballard's idea is to have numerous designs worked in, in place of the red ink, and in place of the blue localized fiber to insert a line or stripe of stars of a peculiar metallic substance, and in the center of each star to insert in minute figures the denomination of the note, so that, in case the ink is erased, or the note reduced to pulp, even, its value could still be told. All these secrets, together with one in relation to engraving, which he says will excel anything now known in lithography, Ballard offers to the government, if it will accept them. He also offers to make a quantity of paper without cost to the government to experiment upon.—Exchange.

A Lake that Never Freezes nor Gives Up its Dead.

Truckee is a thriving railroad town, and the starting point for Lake Thoe—called the "Gem of the Sierras." Half of the lake is in Nevada, the other half in California. It is twenty-eight miles long and from twelve to sixteen miles wide, and has been sounded to a depth of 1,600 feet. Its waters are a beautiful ultra-marine, and it may be called the purest water in the world, containing by analysis only 4 per cent. of impurities. It is so light and mobile as to be easily lashed into foam or calmed to a mirror-like surface. In the early morning it is like a looking glass, with surrounding objects reflected in it with surprising accuracy. Several steamers of small tonnage are used in navigating it. Its altitude is about 6,300 feet; it is always cool and pleasant in the hottest weather. The lake never freezes, and never gives up its dead. No person that has been drowned has been known to rise to the surface. Wood, as soon as saturated, sinks to the bottom. The water is as clear as crystal, and huge rocks fifty feet down are plainly discernible. In fact, it is a marvel, and the very contrast of our own Salt Lake; for this is so dense and sluggish as to offer great resistance to the human body and everything that will float.—Salt Lake Herald.

It would be a most excellent plan for some, and in fact nearly all the farmers to take a day or two, cut all the weeds and briars growing around their lots, and by the road side, gather them up and throw them into the hog pen. Besides adding to the looks of the farm, the foul stuff will be stunted, and soon run out. Then best of all, the manure the hogs will make of it will amply pay for all time so spent. Weeds will absorb the liquids from the hogs, afford them a good bed, and by being constantly rooted over soon become nearly equal to the best hog manure. To the farmer, manure is what "money in the bank" is to the merchant—the more he has of it the better he can stand the fluctuations in the market.

A GRAPHIC correspondent thus describes the costumes of the belles at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia: "The glove-fitting dresses are generally adopted here. A tall, straight, slim girl in Princesse dress, fitting tightly from the throat to some distance below the hips, and then suddenly spreading out like a fan at the back over a vast deal of complicated machinery, produces a queer effect, the girl herself appearing like a stem or handle for her drapery."

Letter of a Dying Wife.

The following most touching fragment of a letter from a dying wife to her husband, says an exchange, was found by him, some months after her death, between the leaves of a religious volume which she was very fond of perusing. The letter, which was literally dim with tear marks, was written long before her husband was aware that the grasp of fatal disease had fastened upon the lovely form of his wife, who died at the early age of nineteen:

When this shall reach your eye, dear George, some day when you are turning over the relics of the past, I shall have passed away forever, and the cold, white stone will be keeping its lonely watch over the lips you have so often pressed, and the sod will be growing green that shall hide forever from your sight the dust of one who has so often nestled close to your warm heart. For many long and sleepless nights, when all beside my thoughts were at rest, I have wrestled with the consciousness of approaching death, until at last it has formed itself upon my mind; and although to you and to others it might now seem but the nervous imagination of a girl, yet, dear George, it is so! Many weary nights have I passed in the endeavor to reconcile myself to leaving you, whom I love so well, and this bright world of sunshine and beauty; and hard indeed is it to struggle on, silently and alone, with the sure conviction that I am about to leave all forever and go down into the dark valley! "But I know in whom I have believed," and, leaning on His arm, "I fear no evil." Do not blame me for keeping even all this from you. How could I subject you, of all others, to such sorrow as I feel at parting, when time will soon make it apparent to you!

I could have wished to live, if only to be at your side when your time shall come, and, pillowing your head upon my breast, wipe the death-damps from your brow, and usher your departing spirit into its Maker's presence, enshrined in woman's holiest prayer. But it is not to be—and I submit. Yours is the privilege of watching, through long and dreary nights, for the spirit's final flight, and of transferring my sinking head from your breast to my Saviour's bosom! And you shall share my last thought, and the last faint pressure of the hand and the last feeble kiss shall be yours; and even when flesh and heart shall have failed me, my eyes shall rest on yours until glazed by death, and our spirits shall hold one last communion, until, gently fading from my view, the last of earth, you shall mingle with the first bright glimpses of the unfading glories of the better world, where partings are unknown.

Well do I know the spot, my dear George, where you will lay me. Often we stood by the place, and, as we watched the mellow sunset as it glances in quivering flashes through the leaves and burnished the grassy mounds around us with stripes of burnished gold, each, perhaps, has thought that some day one of us would come alone, and whichever it might be, your name would be on the stone. But we loved the spot, and I know you will love it none the less when you see the same quiet sunlight linger and play among the grass that grows over your Mary's grave. I know you will go there, and my spirit will be with you then, and whisper among the waving branches, "I am not dead, but gone before."

What The Birds Do.

Farmers should spare the birds. While it is undeniable that they are sometimes severe on the corn and sprouting grain, it is nevertheless a fact that they compensate for it by destroying insects that might do more damage. The swallow, swift and nighthawk are the guardians of the atmosphere. They check the increase of insects that would otherwise overload it. Woodpeckers, creepers, and chickadees are the guardians of the trunks of trees. Warblers and fly-catchers protect the foliage. Blackbirds, thrushes, crows and larks protect the surface of the soil; snipes and woodcock the soil under the surface. Each tribe has its respective duties to perform in the economy of nature; and it is an undoubted fact that if the birds were all swept away from the earth, the men could not live upon it; vegetation would wither and die, insects become so numerous that no living things could withstand their attacks.

A good little boy who was kicked by a mule did not say naughty words or go home crying to his mother. He just tied the mule within five feet of a bee hive, backed him around to it and let him kick.—Philadelphia Press.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

BOONE CIRCUIT COURT, KENTUCKY.

Thomas A. Johnson, Plaintiff, against B. S. Johnson, Samuel T. Johnson, &c., Defendants. } Notice of SALE in equity

By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the September Term thereof, 1877, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on THURSDAY, the 4th day of October, 1877, at 1 o'clock P. M. or thereabout, proceed to offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on a credit of four and nine months, equal installments, at Mrs. King's hotel, in the town of Walton, the property mentioned in the judgment, to wit:

A small tract of land lying on the waters of Mud Lick Creek, Boone County, Ky., adjoining the lands of B. S. and S. B. Arnold, the Johnson mill tract, Mrs. Caroline Souther, Mrs. Mary Conner and others, containing 57 acres 2 roods and 13 poles.

The purchaser will be required to give bond, with approved security, for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms.

Bonds payable to the undersigned.

J. W. DUNCAN,
51-2t Master Commissioner B. C. C.

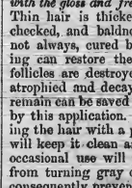
For Rent.

I will offer publicly for rent, at the Court-house door in the town of Burlington, on SATURDAY, September 22, at 1 o'clock P. M., 1877, the Hotel Property in Belleview, Boone Co., Ky. (known as the property owned by John Rogers, dec'd). Said property will be rented until September 20, 1878. The person renting will be required to execute bond, with good security, payable in monthly installments. J. W. DUNCAN,

Master Commissioner B. C. C.

September 13, 1877. 51-2t

Notice to Delinquent Tax-Payers OF BOONE COUNTY.



Once more I insist on the delinquent tax-payers coming forward and paying their taxes. I have borrowed the money and paid your taxes, AND THIS MONEY MUST BE PAID, and if you fail to settle your taxes by the first day of October, 1877, the responsibility and cost will be yours, for I will levy on and sell property for taxes after that date. I have no desire to put any one to trouble and cost, but this money must be paid, and if you force me to the necessity of levy and sale, the responsibility will rest with you. H. J. Foster and Adam Finch are authorized to receive and receipt for taxes.

Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color, with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous, and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich, glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

THE PRINTER'S SONG.

TUNE, ROWLEY.

Oh! how happy are they
Who the printer do pay,
And have squared up for one year or more.
Tongue can never express
The great joy of the Press
When delinquents pay up the old score.

Printers all the day long
Labor hard for "a song"—
Oh! that all their hard fate could but see—
They have worked night and day,
And of course want their pay,
To buy sugar and coffee and tea.

The glad soul mounteth higher,
As he sits by the fire,
The newspaper paid for—his own!
And the news he enjoys,
And his girls and his boys,
For they hent from the printer no groan.

Oh! who could believe
That printers would grieve
That their labors and toils are in vain;
That they suffered the "blues,"
While they sent out the news,
To relieve you from sorrow and pain.

The time is at hand
Then printers demand
"Ready pay" for their labor and pains;
'Tis no use to trust,
For all are not just,
The printer in the lurch oft remains.

To conclude, have no fears,
But pay up arrears,
And gladden the printer once more;
Don't harbor remorse
Bout pay for an old horse,
But immediately pay up the old score.

FROM COAST TO COAST.

Stanley's Perils on His Journey Through the Heart of Africa.

[Cable Telegram to New York Herald.]

LONDON, Sept. 16.—After months of anxious suspense, during which the gravest fears were entertained for the safety of the gallant explorer, the welcome news has come that Henry M. Stanley, the special commissioner of the New York Herald and the London Daily Telegraph, has arrived on the west coast of Africa, after

A TERRIBLE JOURNEY ACROSS THE CONTINENT,

Along the line of the Lualaba and the Congo Rivers. Stanley's letters are dated from Emboma, Congo River, West Coast of Africa, August 10th, and inform us that he arrived at that point on August 8th from Zanzibar, with only 115 souls, and in an awful condition from the long and terrible journey through the heart of the African Continent. After completing the exploration of Lake Tanganika, and settling definitely by actual survey the question of the outflow of the lake by what was believed to be the River Lakuga, but which he has proved to be only a creek draining into the lake, except where the waters of the great inland sea attain an extraordinary lead, Stanley and his followers pushed across the country to Nyangwe, on the Lualaba. This was the most northerly point reached by Cameron when he attempted to solve the mystery of the Congo, and its identity with the main drainage line of the Lualaba Basin. Stanley left Nyangwe on the 15th of November, 1876, and traveled overland through Uregga with his party. The task of

PENETRATING THE UNEXPLORED WILDS

That stretched before him to the westward was calculated to impress him with a sense of danger that nothing but the stern call of duty and the promptings of ambitious resolution could overcome. He was about to plunge into a region where he would be as completely cut off from hope of succor, if fortune did not favor him in his journey, as if he was wandering on the surface of another planet. After an arduous march of many days, through a country filled with difficulties, and being compelled to transport on the shoulders of his men every pound of provisions and other stores necessary for the transcontinental journey, and besides carrying in a similar manner the sections of the Lady Alice exploring boat, and the arms and ammunition of his party, Stanley found himself

BROUGHT TO A STAND

By immense tracts of dense forests, through which all attempts at progress were futile. Finding that he could not advance along the line he had first intended to follow, Stanley crossed the Lualaba and continued his journey along the left bank of the river, passing through the district known as Northeast Ukusa. On this route he endeavored to find an outlet westward, but the jungle was so dense and the fatigues of the march so harrassing that it seemed impossible for him to succeed in passing the tremendous barrier of the forest. To add to the horrors of his position in these central African wilds, Stanley found himself opposed at every step by the

HOSTILE CANNIBAL NATIVES.

The savages filled the woods, and day and night poured flights of poisoned arrows on his party, which killed and fatally wounded many of his men. From every tree and rock along the route the deadly missiles winged their fatal course, and the heavily laden bearers fell dead under their loads in the dark forest. Only now and then could Stanley and his men reply to this silent fire with their rifles, for the savages kept under the densest cover, and rarely exposed themselves. Stanley's march through these cannibal regions soon became almost hopeless. There was

NO CESSATION TO THE FIGHTING DAY OR NIGHT.

An attempt at camping merely concentrated the savages and rendered their fire far more deadly. The advance was a succession of charges in rude skirmishing order by an advance guard, whose duty it was to clear the road for the main body. A rear guard covered in like manner the retreat; for, although advancing against one enemy, the movement was a retreat from another. All Stanley's efforts to appease the savages were unavailing. They would listen to no overtures, disregarded all signals of friendship and mildness of intention, and refused to be pacified with gifts. The patient behavior of Stanley's men they regarded as cowardice, so that no course remained open to the explorer but to

FIGHT HIS WAY ONWARD

And with as little loss as possible. To render Stanley's position still more deplorable, his escort of one hundred and forty natives, whom he had engaged for the service at Nyangwe, refused to proceed further on the journey and deserted him. They were so overawed by the terrors of the forest and the continuous struggle that they believed destruction was certain to overtake the whole party, and prudently resolved not to be destroyed. Finding that his ranks were thinned by the desertion of the Nyangwe, the hostile natives concentrated for a grand attack on Stanley, with the object of completely crushing him. It became necessary, therefore, to organize a desperate resistance, which was happily successful, so far that it

REPULSED THE SAVAGES

For the time being, and gave the explorer a chance to reconsider his plans and make arrangements to adapt them to his trying situation. There was only one way to escape from the hopeless position in which Stanley found himself, unless he accepted the alternative of returning to Nyangwe and abandoning the grand work which he had undertaken. This was to make use of canoes. With the Lady Alice as a last reliance, and good canoes for the party, Stanley concluded that he could advance with better prospect of success than in any other way. Although he had a decided advantage over the savages on the water, Mr. Stanley still found that each day's advance was but a repetition of the struggle of the day previous. It was desperate fighting all the time, while pushing down the river with might and main. Fortunately, it was still the rifle against the bow, but then, the bow was covered by the dense woods, and the rifle was exposed in the open canoe. In the midst of these successive struggles, Stanley's journey on the river was interrupted by

A SERIES OF GREAT CATARACTS,

Not far apart from each other, and just north and south of the equator. To pass these obstacles, he had to cut his way through over thirteen miles of dense forest, and drag his eighteen canoes and the exploring boat Lady Alice overland. This enormous labor entailed the most exhausting efforts, and they had frequently to abandon the ax and drag-ropes for their rifles, to defend themselves against the continuous assaults of the hostile natives. After passing the cataracts, Stanley and his party had a long breathing pause from the toil of dragging their boats through the forest. They were also comparatively secure from attack, and took measures to recruit their exhausted strength before again encountering the dangers of the journey westward. Although

FIGHTING HIS WAY CONTINUOUSLY,

Stanley did not neglect the objects of his journey, and found opportunity to note all the interesting changes and physical characteristics of the route. At 2° north latitude, he found that the course of the great Lualaba swerved from its almost northerly direction to the northwestward, to the westward, and then to the southwestward, developing into a broad stream, varying in width from two to ten miles, and choked with islands. In order to avoid the struggles with the tribes of desperate cannibals that inhabited the mainland on each side of the river, Stanley's canoe fleet, led by the Lady Alice, paddled along between the islands, taking advantage of the cover they afforded as a protection from attack. In this way many miles were made down the stream by the party unmolested by the natives. But this safety from attack was purchased by much suffering. Cut off from supplies, in the middle of the great river, starvation threatened to destroy the expedition.

THE MOST EXTREME HUNGER

Was endured by the party, which passed three entire days absolutely without any food. This terrible state of things could not be any longer endured, so Stanley resolved to meet his fate on the mainland, rather than by hunger on the river. He therefore turned his course to the left bank of the Lualaba, and, with the good fortune that has generally attended him, reached the village of a tribe acquainted with trade. These people had four muskets, which they obtained from the west coast. They represent, in a degree, the

ADVANCE GUARD OF CIVILIZATION

Toward the interior of the continent. They called the great river Skuta-Ya-Congo. With these friendly natives Stanley and his party made "blood brotherhood," and purchased from them an abundance of provisions, which were sorely needed by the famished exploring party. After a brief rest, Stanley endeavored to continue his course along the left bank of the river, but, three days after his departure from the village of friendly natives, he came to the country of a powerful tribe, whose warriors were

ARMED WITH MUSKETS.

Here, for the first time since leaving Nyangwe, Stanley had to contend with an enemy on an almost equal footing as to arms. He therefore prepared his party for the struggle, the issue of which was decidedly doubtful. No sooner did these natives discover the approach of Stanley's expedition than they manned fifty-four large canoes and put off from the river bank to attack it. It was not until after three of his men were killed that Stanley desisted in his efforts to make the natives understand that he and his party were friends. He cried out to them to that effect; he offered them clothes and peace gifts, but

THE SAVAGES REFUSED TO BE CONCILIATED,

And the fight proceeded with unabated fury. For twelve miles down the struggle went on, and proved to be the greatest and most desperate fight on this terrible river. It was maintained by Stanley's followers with great courage, and was the last, save one, of thirty-two battles fought since the expedition had left Nyangwe. The Lualaba, which river changes its name scores of times, now as it approached the Atlantic Ocean, became known as the Quango, and the Soure. As the river runs through the great basin which lies between 27° and 17° east longitude, it has an uninterrupted course of over seven hundred miles, with magnificent affluents, especially on the southern side. Thence, clearing the broad belts of mountains between the great basin and the Atlantic Ocean, the river descends by about thirty falls and furious rapids to the great river between the falls of Zellala and the Atlantic.

STANLEY'S LOSSES

During the long and terrible journey across the continent from Nyangwe have been very severe. The continuous fighting in the forests and on the river reduced the strength of the expedition daily, until it became a question whether any of its members would ever reach the coast. Stanley states in his dispatch: "My grief is still new over the loss of my last white assistant, the brave and pious young Englishman, Francis Pocock, who was swept over the falls of the Massasa on the 3d of last June." He adds: "My faithful companion, Kululu, is also among the lost."

STANLEY'S NARROW ESCAPES.

On the same day that Pocock was lost, Stanley, with seven men, were almost drawn into the whirlpools of the Mon Falls; and six weeks later himself, with the entire crew of the Lady Alice, were swept over the Falls of Mbelo, whence only by a miracle they escaped. The explorer writes: "I make the expedition from Boma by steamer to Calinda, and proceed thence to St. Paul de Lando. Mr. Price, of the firm of Hatton & Cookson, of Liverpool, takes my letter to you via Angola.

HENRY M. STANLEY."

The Rose Fields.

Bulgaria, recently the scene of such terrible calamities, is famed for the cultivation of roses, and their manufacture into foreign perfumes. A prettier sight is seldom seen in any part of the world than that of a party of Bulgarian mountaineers—women and men—going to the nearest town on a bright June afternoon with the produce of their rose-fields. Their donkies carry double panniers, heaped to overflowing with lovely pink Thracian roses. They themselves are adorned with the same beautiful flowers, the young girls—many of whom are extremely pretty and graceful—wearing garlands of them around their heads, and the men having them twined around their staves. The people make a holiday occasion of it, and are not only in their best attire, but in their best spirits also, and go on their way laughing and singing in great glee. As they move, the air is scented far and near with the odor of their fragrant burdens, and long after they have gone by the perfume remains to tell of their passing. Altogether, the scene is very much like what may be imagined to have taken place in Arcadia, far back in those early, happy ages when sin and misery had not come to make everything dark and dreary. Alas! it is sad to think of the frightful scenes which have so lately taken place in those lovely, rose clad valleys.

A LITTLE boy went to his father crying the other day, and told him that he had kicked a bee that had a splinter in its tail.

THE aerial quickstep is what they call a hanging in Kansas.

SHE UNDERSTOOD HIM.

A pensive mood came over me;
I remarked with many a sigh:
"The frost and cold will soon be here.
The landscape change to brown and sere,
And all things green will die."

She looked sweet, sympathetic,
And the tears stood in her eye,
And she murmured in a voice divine,
Placing her lily hand in mine:
"I'm sorry, but—good-bye!"

Matter Enough.

A meek-looking lady entered a store, and pointing to a dolman, she drew a saleslady aside, and said:

"Miss, is it true that none but humpback women wear those things?"

"No, indeed, it isn't, for I wear one," indignantly replied the saleslady.

The meek-looking young lady colored up and then asked:

"And is it true that a woman who wears one is not much thought of?"

"No," snapped the saleswoman.

"And does every woman who wears one get sick and die in less than a year?" continued the meek-looking young woman.

"No," was the quick reply.

Then the meek-looking young woman put her handkerchief to her eyes and commenced weeping, and between her sobs blurted out such expressions as "O the villain! O the wretch!"

"Why, what's the matter, madam?" queried the saleswoman.

"Matter!" responded the weeping woman, stamping her foot angrily upon the floor, "why here I have only been married three weeks, and when I asked my husband for money to buy a dolman, he goes and tells me they are only fit for hump-back women, and that they are not respectable, and that I'll die in one year if I wear one. And now I see he lied to me to keep me from buying one. Isn't that enough?

How Sampson Slew the Philistines.

When I traveled, in 1871, in Palestine, an old servant from the monastery of Remleh, about fifty miles west from Jerusalem, showed me the supposed place where Sampson killed 1,000 Philistines with the jawbone of an ass. When I expressed my doubts as to the length and strength of the jawbone, considering the great number of surrounding enemies, the good man explained the case in the following manner: "Well, he took hold of the ass by the tail and swung the animal against the Philistines in such a manner that only his head, and especially the jawbone, struck the Philistines, keeping off in this way the surrounding warriors, and giving the necessary force to kill. I affirm that in this manner Sampson could have slain a million Philistines, provided the tail of the ass did not break."—Sacramento Journal.

The Wrong Kind of Rabbit.

A sturdy, hungry looking individual stepped into a Fulton restaurant, says the Fulton Times, and after consulting the bill of fare called for a Welsh rabbit. After a short time they brought the piece of bread nicely toasted reposing in its bed of cheese, and after looking at it intently for a moment he asked:

"Is that a Welsh rabbit?"

"It is," was the answer. He lifted it with a fork and looked under it.

"It is?" he echoed.

"Yes, sir, it's just what you called for—a Welsh rabbit."

"Well," replied the man, moving slowly back from the table, "you can take it away just the same and bring me some American beef, and remember that when I want fried cheese I'll call for it."

A Match.

THE following occurred in one of our drug stores two days ago, between a wag and one of the clerks:

Wag—"Have you any matches, sir?"

Clerk—"Yes, sir, and will be pleased to accommodate you."

Wag—"Well, then give me a trotting match."

Clerk—"All right, sir;" and he handed him a box of cathartic pills neatly done up in tissue paper, and just the thing for such an emergency. "Take thirteen of these for a dose, and you will trot at a 2:30 gait, and keep up the like until you are tired." The clerk had the best of it and the wag "skinned out."

A SAN FRANCISCO huckster bought a mule at auction for one hundred and forty dollars. After trying for three days to put his harness on from a second-story window, the owner resold it for fourteen dollars, on long time, and under the title of "Sara, the High Kicker."

AT a brilliant wedding, the pew-opener showed some very worthy but socially obscure people into pews. As soon as the clerk discovered it, he hastened to the pew-opener and exclaimed: "Did you give those common people that pew?" "Yes." "What on earth did you do that for? Did you not know they were only free-seat trash?"

IT is the duty of a gallant man always to pretend to believe everything a woman says, out of respect for her; and never to believe any thing she says, out of respect to himself.

BURLINGTON, KY., SEPTEMBER 20.

DYING SUMMER.

The hollyhocks have just put on
Their bonnets stiff and white;
The sunflower flaunts its fringe of gold;
The purple phlox is bright;
The wheat-fields flow in amber waves,
Touched by the wandering breeze;
And gold and crimson torches glow,
Lit in the maple trees.
The sumach-trees are brushed with red,
And emerald wild-vines turn
To whisps of pink and yellow flame,
And in the shadows burn.
And soon we'll hear the autumn rain,
Its slow and heavy throbs;
The weird, wild winds will flutter by,
With low, half-human sobs.
No more the footsteps, silver-shod,
Of dancing summer showers,
But autumn shedding mournful tears
Above the buried flowers.

The pallid days go hand in hand,
With silent-footed eves;
The dying year looks sadly back,
Through showers of falling leaves,
To purple glades of summer-woods,
To soft and fragrant air,
To velvet shadows tangled with
The sunshine's golden hair.
But now the lonesome days come down,
The gladness all is done;
And summer drops her withered crown,
And flies toward the sun.

A Valuable Secret.

Tom Ballard, the famous counterfeiter, who is now serving the third year of his thirty years' term at Albany, has renewed an offer he made in 1875 without it's receiving any attention from Secretary Bristow. He proposed to reveal to the government, without promise of reward or release, unless it should be voluntarily offered him after testing his process, a secret which would render counterfeiting impossible. The greatest secret, Ballard says, in the making of our present paper money is the weaving in of the blue and red fibers; but this kind of paper is now too easily made by hand. His remedy is a machine (which would cost $30,000) which would make paper of so superior a quality that it could not possibly be imitated by hand. At present, when the ink is washed from the face and back of a $1,000 bill, it does not differ in appearance from a $1 bill. Ballard's idea is to have numerous designs worked in, in place of the red ink, and in place of the blue localized fiber to insert a line or stripe of stars of a peculiar metallic substance, and in the center of each star to insert in minute figures the denomination of the note, so that, in case the ink is erased, or the note reduced to pulp, even, its value could still be told. All these secrets, together with one in relation to engraving, which he says will excel anything now known in lithography, Ballard offers to the government, if it will accept them. He also offers to make a quantity of paper without cost to the government to experiment upon.—Exchange.

A Lake that Never Freezes nor Gives Up Its Dead.

Truckee is a thriving railroad town, and the starting point for Lake Thoe—called the "Gem of the Sierras." Half of the lake is in Nevada, the other half in California. It is twenty-eight miles long and from twelve to sixteen miles wide, and has been sounded to a depth of 1,600 feet. Its waters are a beautiful ultra-marine, and it may be called the purest water in the world, containing by analysis only 4 per cent. of impurities. It is so light and mobile as to be easily lashed into foam or calmed to a mirror-like surface. In the early morning it is like a looking glass, with surrounding objects reflected in it with surprising accuracy. Several steamers of small tonnage are used in navigating it. Its altitude is about 6,300 feet; it is always cool and pleasant in the hottest weather. The lake never freezes, and never gives up its dead. No person that has been drowned has been known to rise to the surface. Wood, as soon as saturated, sinks to the bottom. The water is as clear as crystal, and huge rocks fifty feet down are plainly discernible. In fact, it is a marvel, and the very contrast of our own Salt Lake; for this is so dense and sluggish as to offer great resistance to the human body and everything that will float.—Salt Lake Herald.

It would be a most excellent plan for some, and in fact nearly all the farmers to take a day or two, cut all the weeds and briars growing around their lots, and by the road side, gather them up and throw them into the hog pen. Besides adding to the looks of the farm, the foul stuff will be stunted, and soon run out. Then best of all, the manure the hogs will make of it will amply pay for all time so spent. Weeds will absorb the liquids from the hogs, afford them a good bed, and by being constantly rooted over soon become nearly equal to the best hog manure. To the farmer, manure is what "money in the bank" is to the merchant—the more he has of it the better he can stand the fluctuations in the market.

A GRAPHIC correspondent thus describes the costumes of the belles at White Sulphur Springs, Virginia: "The glove-fitting dresses are generally adopted here. A tall, straight, slim girl in Princesse dress, fitting tightly from the throat to some distance below the hips, and then suddenly spreading out like a fan at the back over a vast deal of complicated machinery, produces a queer effect, the girl herself appearing like a stem or handle for her drapery."

Letter of a Dying Wife.

The following most touching fragment of a letter from a dying wife to her husband, says an exchange, was found by him, some months after her death, between the leaves of a religious volume which she was very fond of perusing. The letter, which was literally dim with tear marks, was written long before her husband was aware that the grasp of fatal disease had fastened upon the lovely form of his wife, who died at the early age of nineteen:

When this shall reach your eye, dear George, some day when you are turning over the relics of the past, I shall have passed away forever, and the cold, white stone will be keeping its lonely watch over the lips you have so often pressed, and the sod will be growing green that shall hide forever from your sight the dust of one who has so often nestled close to your warm heart. For many long and sleepless nights, when all beside my thoughts were at rest, I have wrestled with the consciousness of approaching death, until at last it has formed itself upon my mind; and although to you and to others it might now seem but the nervous imagination of a girl, yet, dear George, it is so! Many weary nights have I passed in the endeavor to reconcile myself to leaving you, whom I love so well, and this bright world of sunshine and beauty; and hard indeed is it to struggle on, silently and alone, with the sure conviction that I am about to leave all forever and go down into the dark valley! But I know in whom I have believed," and, leaning on His arm, "I fear no evil." Do not blame me for keeping even all this from you. How could I subject you, of all others, to such sorrow as I feel at parting, when time will soon make it apparent to you!

I could have wished to live, if only to be at your side when your time shall come, and, pillowing your head upon my breast, wipe the death-damps from your brow, and usher your departing spirit into its Maker's presence, embalmed in woman's holiest prayer. But it is not to be—and I submit. Yours is the privilege of watching, through long and dreary nights, for the spirit's final flight, and of transferring my sinking head from your breast to my Saviour's bosom! And you shall share my last thought, and the last faint pressure of the hand and the last feeble kiss shall be yours; and even when flesh and heart shall have failed me, my eyes shall rest on yours until glazed by death, and our spirits shall hold one last communion, until, gently fading from my view, the last of earth, you shall mingle with the first bright glimpses of the unfading glories of the better world, where partings are unknown.

Well do I know the spot, my dear George, where you will lay me. Often we stood by the place, and, as we watched the mellow sunset as it glances in quivering flashes through the leaves and burnished the grassy mounds around us with stripes of burnished gold, such, perhaps, has thought that some day one of us would come alone, and which-ever it might be, your name would be on the stone. But we loved the spot, and I know you will love it none the less when you see the same quiet sunlight linger and play among the grass that grows over your Mary's grave. I know you will go there, and my spirit will be with you then, and whisper among the waving branches, "I am not dead, but gone before."

What The Birds Do.

Farmers should spare the birds. While it is undeniable that they are sometimes severe on the corn and sprouting grain, it is nevertheless a fact that they compensate for it by destroying insects that might do more damage. The swallow, swift and nighthawk are the guardians of the atmosphere. They check the increase of insects that would otherwise overload it. Woodpeckers, creepers, and chickadees are the guardians of the trunks of trees. Warblers and flycatchers protect the foliage. Blackbirds, thrushes, crows and larks protect the surface of the soil; snipes and woodcock the soil under the surface. Each tribe has its respective duties to perform in the economy of nature; and it is an undoubted fact that if the birds were all swept away from the earth, the men could not live upon it; vegetation would wither and die, insects become so numerous that no living things could withstand their attacks.

A GOOD little boy who was kicked by a mule did not say naughty words or go home crying to his mother. He just tied the mule within five feet of a bee hive, backed him around to it and let him kick.—Philadelphia Press.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

BOONE CIRCUIT COURT, KENTUCKY.

Thomas A. Johnson, Plaintiff, against B. S. Johnson, Samuel T. Johnson, &c., Defendants. | Notice of SALE in equity

By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the September Term thereof, 1877, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on THURSDAY, the 4th day of October, 1877, at 1 o'clock P. M. or thereabout, proceed to offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on a credit of four and nine months, equal installments, at Mrs. King's hotel, in the town of Walton, the property mentioned in the judgment, to wit:

A small tract of land lying on the waters of Mud Lick Creek, Boone County, Ky., adjoining the lands of B. S. and S. B. Arnold, the Johnson mill tract, Mrs. Caroline Souther, Mrs. Mary Conner and others, containing 57 acres 2 roods and 13 poles.

The purchaser will be required to give bond, with approved security, for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms.

Bonds payable to the undersigned.

J. W. DUNCAN,
51-2t Master Commissioner B. C. C.

For Rent.

I will offer publicly for rent, at the Courthouse door in the town of Burlington, on SATURDAY, September 22, at 1 o'clock P. M., 1877, the Hotel Property in Belleview, Boone Co., Ky. (known as the property owned by John Rogers, dec'd). Said property will be rented until September 20, 1878. The person renting will be required to execute bond, with good security, payable in monthly installments. J. W. DUNCAN,
Master Commissioner B. C. C.
September 13, 1877. 51-2t

Notice to Delinquent Tax-Payers OF BOONE COUNTY.

Once more I insist on the delinquent tax-payers coming forward and paying their taxes. I have borrowed the money and paid your taxes, AND THIS MONEY MUST BE PAID, and if you fail to settle your taxes by the first day of October, 1877, the responsibility and cost will be yours, for I will levy on and sell property for taxes after that date. I have no desire to put any one to trouble and cost, but this money must be paid, and if you force me to the necessity of levy and sale the responsibility will rest with you. H. J. Foster and Adam Finch are authorized to receive and receipt for taxes.

Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color, with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous, and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich, glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

THE PRINTER'S SONG.

TUNE, ROWLEY.

Oh! how happy are they
Who the printer do pay,
And have squared up for one year or more.
Tongue can never express
The great joy of the Press
When delinquents pay up the old score.

Printers all the day long
Labor hard for "a song"—
Oh! that all their hard fate could but see—
They have worked night and day,
And of course want their pay,
To buy sugar and coffee and tea.

The glad soul mounteth higher,
As he sits by the fire,
The new-paper paid for—his own!
And the news he enjoys,
And his girls and his boys,
For they hear from the printer no groan.

Oh! who could believe
That printers would grieve
That their labors and toils are in vain;
That they suffered the "blues,"
While they sent out the news,
To relieve you from sorrow and pain.

The time is at hand
When printers demand
"Ready pay" for their labor and puns;
'Tis no use to trust,
For all are not just,
The printer in the lurch oft remains.

To conclude, have no fears,
But pay up arrears,
And gladden the printer once more;
'Bout pay for an old horse,
But immediately pay up the old score.

FROM COAST TO COAST.

Stanley's Perils on His Journey Through the Heart of Africa.

[Cable Telegram to New York Herald.]

LONDON, Sept. 16.—After months of anxious suspense, during which the gravest fears were entertained for the safety of the gallant explorer, the welcome news has come that Henry M. Stanley, the special commissioner of the New York Herald and the London Daily Telegraph, has arrived on the west coast of Africa, after

A TERRIBLE JOURNEY ACROSS THE CONTINENT,

Along the line of the Lualaba and the Congo Rivers. Stanley's letters are dated from Emboma, Congo River, West Coast of Africa, August 10th, and inform us that he arrived at that point on August 8th from Zanzibar, with only 115 souls, and in an awful condition from the long and terrible journey through the heart of the African Continent. After completing the exploration of Lake Tanganika, and settling definitely by actual survey the question of the outflow of the lake by what was believed to be the River Lukuga, but which he has proved to be only a creek draining into the lake, except where the waters of the great inland sea attain an extraordinary lead, Stanley and his followers pushed across the country to Nyangwe, on the Lualaba. This was the most northerly point reached by Cameron when he attempted to solve the mystery of the mystery of the Congo, and its identity with the main drainage line of the Lualaba Basin. Stanley left Nyangwe on the 15th of November, 1876, and traveled overland through Uregga with his party. The task of

PENETRATING THE UNEXPLORED WILDS

That stretched before him to the westward was calculated to impress him with a sense of danger that nothing but the stern call of duty and the promptings of ambitious resolution could overcome. He was about to plunge into a region where he would be as completely cut off from hope of succor, if fortune did not favor him in his journey, as if he was wandering on the surface of another planet. After an arduous march of many days, through a country filled with difficulties, and being compelled to transport on the shoulders of his men every pound of provisions and other stores necessary for the transcontinental journey, and besides carrying in a similar manner the sections of the Lady Alice exploring boat, and the arms and ammunition of his party, Stanley found himself

BROUGHT TO A STAND

By immense tracts of dense forests, through which all attempts at progress were futile. Finding that he could not advance along the line he had first intended to follow, Stanley crossed the Lualaba and continued his journey along the left bank of the river, passing through the district known as Northeast Ukusa. On this route he endeavored to find an outlet westward, but the jungle was so dense and the fatigues of the march so harrassing that it seemed impossible for him to succeed in passing the tremendous barrier of the forest. To add to the horrors of his position in these central African wilds, Stanley found himself opposed at every step by the

HOSTILE CANNIBAL NATIVES.

The savages filled the woods, and day and night poured flights of poisoned arrows on his party, which killed and fatally wounded many of his men. From every tree and rock along the route the deadly missiles winged their fatal course, and the heavily laden bearers fell dead under their loads in the dark forest. Only now and then could Stanley and his men reply to this silent fire with their rifles, for the savages kept under the densest cover, and rarely exposed themselves. Stanley's march through these cannibal regions soon became almost hopeless. There was

NO CESSATION TO THE FIGHTING DAY OR NIGHT.

An attempt at camping merely concentrated the savages and rendered their fire far more deadly. The advance was a succession of charges in rude skirmishing order by an advance guard, whose duty it was to clear the road for the main body. A rear guard covered in like manner the retreat; for, although advancing against one enemy, the movement was a retreat from another. All Stanley's efforts to appease the savages were unavailing. They would listen to no overtures, disregarded all signals of friendship and mildness of intention, and refused to be pacified with gifts. The patient behavior of Stanley's men they regarded as cowardice, so that no course remained open to the explorer but to

FIGHT HIS WAY ONWARD

And with as little loss as possible. To render Stanley's position still more deplorable, his escort of one hundred and forty natives, whom he had engaged for the service at Nyangwe, refused to proceed further on the journey and deserted him. They were so overawed by the terrors of the forest and the continuous struggle that they believed destruction was certain to overtake the whole party, and prudently resolved not to be destroyed. Finding that his ranks were thinned by the desertion of the Nyangwe, the hostile natives concentrated for a grand attack on Stanley, with the object of completely crushing him. It became necessary, therefore, to organize a desperate resistance, which was happily successful, so far that it

REPULSED THE SAVAGES

For the time being, and gave the explorer a chance to reconsider his plans and make arrangements to adapt them to his trying situation. There was only one way to escape from the hapless position in which Stanley found himself, unless he accepted the alternative of returning to Nyangwe and abandoning the grand work which he had undertaken. This was to make use of canoes. With the Lady Alice as a last reliance, and good canoes for the party, Stanley concluded that he could advance with better prospect of success than in any other way. Although he had a decided advantage over the savages on the water, Mr. Stanley still found that each day's advance was but a repetition of the struggle of the day previous. It was desperate fighting all the time, while pushing down the river with might and main. Fortunately, it was still the rifle against the bow, but then, the bow was covered by the dense woods, and the rifle was exposed in the open canoe. In the midst of these successive struggles, Stanley's journey on the river was interrupted by

A SERIES OF GREAT CATARACTS,

Not far apart from each other, and just north and south of the equator. To pass these obstacles, he had to cut his way through over thirteen miles of dense forest, and drag his eighteen canoes and the exploring boat Lady Alice overland. This enormous labor entailed the most exhausting efforts, and they had frequently to abandon the ax and drag-ropes for their rifles, to defend themselves against the continuous assaults of the hostile natives. After passing the cataracts, Stanley and his party had a long breathing pause from the toil of dragging their boats through the forest. They were also comparatively secure from attack, and took measures to recruit their exhausted strength before again encountering the dangers of the journey westward. Although

FIGHTING HIS WAY CONTINUOUSLY,

Stanley did not neglect the objects of his journey, and found opportunity to note all the interesting changes and physical characteristics of the route. At 2° north latitude, he found that the course of the great Lualaba swerved from its almost northerly direction to the northwestward, to the westward, and then to the southwestward, developing into a broad stream, varying in width from two to ten miles, and choked with islands. In order to avoid the struggles with the tribes of desperate cannibals that inhabited the mainland on each side of the river, Stanley's canoe fleet, led by the Lady Alice, paddled along between the islands, taking advantage of the cover they afforded as a protection from attack. In this way many miles were made down the stream by the party unmolested by the natives. But this safety from attack was purchased by much suffering. Cut off from supplies, in the middle of the great river, starvation threatened to destroy the expedition.

THE MOST EXTREME HUNGER

Was endured by the party, which passed three entire days absolutely without any food. This terrible state of things could not be any longer endured, so Stanley resolved to meet his fate on the mainland, rather than by hunger on the river. He therefore turned his course to the left bank of the Lualaba, and, with the good fortune that has generally attended him, reached the village of a tribe acquainted with trade. These people had four muskets, which they obtained from the west coast. They represent, in a degree, the

ADVANCE GUARD OF CIVILIZATION

Toward the interior of the continent. They called the great river Skuta-Ya Congo. With these friendly natives Stanley and his party made "blood brotherhood," and purchased from them an abundance of provisions, which were sorely needed by the famished exploring party. After a brief rest, Stanley endeavored to continue his course along the left bank of the river, but, three days after his departure from the village of friendly natives, he came to the country of a powerful tribe, whose warriors were

ARMED WITH MUSKETS.

Here, for the first time since leaving Nyangwe, Stanley had to contend with an enemy on an almost equal footing as to arms. He therefore prepared his party for the struggle, the issue of which was decidedly doubtful. No sooner did these natives discover the approach of Stanley's expedition than they manned fifty-four large canoes and put off from the river bank to attack it. It was not until after three of his men were killed that Stanley desisted in his efforts to make the natives understand that he and his party were friends. He cried out to them to that effect; he offered them clothes and peace gifts, but

THE SAVAGES REFUSED TO BE CONCILIATED,

And the fight proceeded with unabated fury. For twelve miles down the struggle went on, and proved to be the greatest and most desperate fight on this terrible river. It was maintained by Stanley's followers with great courage, and was the last, save one, of thirty-two battles fought since the expedition had left Nyangwe. The Lualaba, which river changes its name scores of times, now as it approached the Atlantic Ocean, became known as the Quango, and the Soure. As the river runs through the great basin which lies between 27° and 17° east longitude, it has an uninterrupted course of over seven hundred miles, with magnificent affluents, especially on the southern side. Thence, clearing the broad belts of mountains between the great basin and the Atlantic Ocean, the river descends by about thirty falls and furious rapids to the great river between the falls of Zellala and the Atlantic.

STANLEY'S LOSSES

During the long and terrible journey across the continent from Nyangwe have been very severe. The continuous fighting in the forests and on the river reduced the strength of the expedition daily, until it became a question whether any of its members would ever reach the coast. Stanley states in his dispatch: "My grief is still new over the loss of my last white assistant, the brave and pious young Englishman, Francis Pocock, who was swept over the falls of the Massasa on the 3d of last June." He adds: "My faithful companion, Kalulu, is also among the lost."

STANLEY'S NARROW ESCAPES.

On the same day that Pocock was lost, Stanley, with seven men, were almost drawn into the whirlpools of the Moa Falls; and six weeks later himself, with the entire crew of the Lady Alice, were swept over the Falls of Mbelo, whence only by a miracle they escaped. The explorer writes: "I make the expedition from Boma by steamer to Calinda, and proceed thence to St. Paul de Lando. Mr. Price, of the firm of Hatton & Cookson, of Liverpool, takes my letter to you via Angola."

The Rose Fields.

Bulgaria, recently the scene of such terrible calamities, is famed for the cultivation of roses, and their manufacture into foreign perfumes. A prettier sight is seldom seen in any part of the world than that of a party of Bulgarian mountaineers—women and men—going to the nearest town on a bright June afternoon with the produce of their rose-fields. Their donkies carry double panniers, heaped to overflowing with lovely pink Thracian roses. They themselves are adorned with the same beautiful flowers, the young girls—many of whom are extremely pretty and graceful—wearing garlands of them around their heads, and the men having them twined around their staves. The people make a holiday occasion of it, and are not only in their best attire, but in their best spirits also, and go on their way laughing and singing in great glee. As they move, the air is scented far and near with the odor of their fragrant burdens, and long after they have gone by the perfume remains to tell of their passing. Altogether, the scene is very much like what may be imagined to have taken place in Arcadia, far back in those early, happy ages when sin and misery had not come to make everything dark and dreary. Alas! it is sad to think of the frightful scenes which have so lately taken place in those lovely, rose clad valleys.

A LITTLE boy went to his father crying the other day, and told him that he had kicked a bee that had a splinter in its tail.

THE aerial quickstep is what they call a hanging in Kansas.

SHE UNDERSTOOD HIM.

A pensive mood came over me;
I remarked with many a sigh:
"The frost and cold will soon be here.
The landscape change to brown and sere,
And all things green will die."

She looked sweet, sympathetic,
And the tears stood in her eye,
And she murmured in a voice divine,
Placing her lily hand in mine:
"I'm sorry, but—good-bye!"

Matter Enough.

A meek-looking lady entered a store, and pointing to a dolman, she drew a saleslady aside, and said:

"Miss, is it true that none but humpback women wear those things?"

"No, indeed, it isn't, for I wear one," indignantly replied the saleslady.

The meek-looking young lady colored up and then asked:

"And is it true that a woman who wears one is not much thought of?"

"No," snapped the saleswoman.

"And does every woman who wears one get sick and die in less than a year?" continued the meek-looking young woman.

"No," was the quick reply.

Then the meek-looking young woman put her handkerchief to her eyes and commenced weeping, and between her sobs blurted out such expressions as "O the villain! O the wretch!"

"Why, what's the matter, madam?" queried the saleswoman.

"Matter!" responded the weeping woman, stamping her foot angrily upon the floor, "why here I have only been married three weeks, and when I asked my husband for money to buy a dolman, he goes and tells me they are only fit for hump-back women, and that they are not respectable, and that I'll die in one year if I wear one. And now I see he lied to me to keep me from buying one. Isn't that enough?

How Sampson Slew the Philistines.

When I traveled, in 1871, in Palestine, an old servant from the monastery of Remleh, about fifty miles west from Jernsalem, showed me the supposed place where Sampson killed 1,000 Philistines with the jawbone of an ass. When I expressed my doubts as to the length and strength of the jawbone, considering the great number of surrounding enemies, the good man explained the case in the following manner: "Well, he took hold of the ass by the tail and swung the animal against the Philistines in such a manner that only his head, and especially the jawbone, struck the Philistines, keeping off in this way the surrounding warriors, and giving the necessary foree to kill. I affirm that in this manner Sampson could have slain a million Philistines, provided the tail of the ass did not break."—Sacramento Journal.

The Wrong Kind of Rabbit.

A sturdy, hungry looking individual stepped into a Fulton restaurant, says the Fulton Times, and after consulting the bill of fare called for a Welsh rabbit. After a short time they brought the piece of bread nicely toasted reposing in its bed of cheese, and after looking at it intently for a moment he asked:

"Is that a Welsh rabbit?"

"It is," was the answer. He lifted it with a fork and looked under it.

"It is?" he echoed.

"Yes, sir, it's just what you called for—a Welsh rabbit."

"Well," replied the man, moving slowly back from the table, "you can take it away just the same and bring me some American beef, and remember that when I want fried cheese I'll call for it."

A Match.

THE following occurred in one of our drug stores two days ago, between a wag and one of the clerks:

Wag—"Have you any matches, sir?"

Clerk—"Yes, sir, and will be pleased to accommodate you."

Wag—"Well, then give me a trotting match."

Clerk— "All right, sir;" and he handed him a box of cathartic pills neatly done up in tissue paper, and just the thing for such an emergency. "Take thirteen of these for a dose, and you will trot at a 2:30 gait, and keep up the like until you are tired."

The clerk had the best of it and the wag "skinned out."

A SAN FRANCISCO huckster bought a mule at auction for one hundred and forty dollars. After trying for three days to put his harness on from a second-story window, the owner resold it for fourteen dollars, on long time, and under the title of "Sara, the High Kicker."

AT a brilliant wedding, the pew-opener showed some very worthy but socially obscure people into pews. As soon as the clerk discovered it, he hastened to the pew-opener and exclaimed: "Did you give those common people that pew?" "Yes." "What on earth did you do that for? Did you not know they were only free-seat trash?"

IT is the duty of a gallant man always to pretend to believe everything a woman says, out of respect for her; and never to believe any thing she says, out of respect to himself.

THE BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

W. L. RIDDELL,
Editor and Proprietor.

BURLINGTON, KY., SEPTEMBER 27.

THAT crime is on the increase in Kentucky, can not be truthfully denied. Scarcely a day passes that does not bring to our ears the news of a cutting or shooting affair in some part of the State. This cutting and shooting is the work of those who are daily violators of the law of the land; persons who, when they arise in the morning to go about their daily business, buckle on a pistol or some other deadly weapon for the taking of human life. This class of individuals, and the crime of carrying pistols, should be specially investigated by the grand juries, and severely punished by the trial juries. The time has come when the offense of carrying concealed, a deadly weapon can, if the safety of human life is consulted, not be allowed to pass without jeopardizing society. Enforce the law rigorously, get rid of the pistols in the country, and immediately will the murders and malicious shootings commence a decline.

THE transportation of the mail between the city and this point, still remains very uncertain. Mail matter from Louisville, that, previous to the change of the route, arrived the day it was mailed, now gets here three and four days behind time. Papers published in Covington on Thursday put in their appearance at this Post-office in the remarkably short time of three days. These facts show up a state of confusion in the handling of the mail out he Southern Railroad that is highly prejudicial to the interest of many persons in this community. Uncle Sam should be informed of the fact.

IN the case of the Commonwealth against Brack Utz, tried last week, Judge McManama ruled that, where a breach of the peace is committed during the sitting of the grand jury, the Police Court should not investigate the offense, that being the duty of the grand jury; and that a conviction in the Police Court, held during the session of the grand jury, can not be plead in bar of a judgment under an indictment for the same offense.

ESTIMATES for the support of the regular army for the present fiscal year have been prepared by the War Department and sent to the Treasury Department, which will transmit them to Congress at the next session. These are the only estimates to be sent in. The President's message, it is said, will be confined to the business for which Congress is to be especially convened.

THERE was a grand hurrah at Louisville, last week, during the President's visit. The city went to considerable expense to get up a welcome for the President. From Louisville Mr. Hayes and party went to Nashville. All along the route large crowds assembled to see the tourist, and at several points the President made speeches to the people.

THE Stanford Interior Journal says there is a good deal of rottenness connected with the Grove Kennedy case, and which it intends to show up before it is through with. The Journal should commence informing the public, for they want to know something about it.
